Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That does not have the effect of law? It has simply been discretionary with the superintendent?

Mr. DENISON. It has been heretofore.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Then this law does not make it any worse?

Mr. DENISON. No; I think it makes it better.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And it throws an additional safeguard around the civilian teachers so that their contract shall not be abrogated?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. I think it places the professors on a more permanent and secure status. That is in accordance with the recommendation of the Boards of Visitors for the last five or six years.

Mr. FRENCH. Let me refer to the question by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN]. The contracts, while made for different periods, are not all made at the same time. Therefore some of the professors and associate professors will find their contracts or terms of service expiring in one year and others in two years and still others a year or so later. I think the provision we have put in here to the effect that the contract shall not be violated does not permit the construction that my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and my friend from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] have suggested, namely, that the contract could be broken at any time with six months' notice. What I believe it to mean and what I intended it to mean was that at the close of the end of a contract term a six months' notice that the services would no longer be needed would terminate the employment; but I do not think a contract can be broken except for sufficient cause.

Mr. DENISON. I am glad the gentleman has made that statement. I am going to insert, with the permission of the House, a copy of these contracts and a copy of the opinion which was sent to the superintendent of the academy by the Secretary of the Navy recently, based upon the opinion of the Judge Advocate General, in which he construed these contracts and held that they were valid and binding contracts on the part of the Government and that the civilian professors were entitled to have the contracts respected and enforced. There has been a disposition to disregard them by certain parties, and the Secretary of the Navy has gotten a legal opinion on the subject. I want to insert that in the RECORD for reference in case the matter comes up hereafter.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in my remarks a copy of these contracts and a copy of the opinion referred to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to insert in his remarks copies of the contracts referred to and a copy of the opinion. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I feel that all the Members of the House are deeply interested in keeping up the educational standards of the Naval Academy. These provisions of the bill making the appropriation for the pay of civilian professors and protecting their contracts show that Congress expects the civilian professors to remain at the academy so long as they are qualified and needed; and that they shall not be dropped in order to fill their places with naval officers. If we had intended to permit that, the amount allowed to pay the civilian professors would have been reduced. I hope the superintendent will respect the wishes of Congress and act in harmony with the views of Congress as expressed in this bill.

MAY 20, 1920.

From: The Superintendent.
To: Secretary of the Navy (Bureau of Navigation).
Subject: Pay of civilian teaching staff at the Naval Academy.

Referring to section 7 of the act of Congress of May, 1920, commonly known as the pay bill, it is recommended that the following rules as to appointment and pay of the civilian teaching staff be adopted:

1. The civilian teaching staff of the Naval Academy shall be organized on the basis of merit, in the ascending grades of instructor, assistant professor, associate professor, and professor.

2. Out of every 10 civilian members of the teaching staff or major part thereof the maximum number of those holding the rank of professor shall be one; the maximum number of those holding the rank of associate professor shall be three; the remainder shall have the rank of assistant professor or instructor, no fixed rate being established between the two latter, provided that, having reached a rank above that of instructor, no professor, associate professor, or assistant professor shall be reduced in rank by reason of a reduction in the total number of the civilian teaching staff.

3a. Appointments of instructors shall be annual. Appointments to all higher grades shall be for five years, if service is satisfactory, provided that any professor, associate professor, or assistant professor, whose services are not considered satisfactory, shall be so informed at the beginning of the second term of any year and shall be dropped at the end of that year, and provided further that any professor, associate professor, or assistant professor who intends to sever his connection with the Naval Academy shall so inform the superintendent at the beginning of the second term of that academic year.

3b. That all original appointments shall be in the grade of instructor; that promotion shall be by selection to the next highest grade; that no instructor shall be eligible for promotion to assistant professor until he shall have completed two years' service at the Naval Academy; that no assistant professor shall be eligible for promotion to associate professor until he shall have completed five years' continuous service at the Naval Academy; that no associate professor shall be eligible for promotion to professor until he shall have completed ten years' continuous service at the Naval Academy, provided that an instructor who is not promoted to assistant professor upon completion of his third year of service at the Naval Academy shall automatically be dropped and shall be informed of this contemplated action at the commencement of the second term of his third year. No instructor shall be promoted to assistant professor until he shall have been examined and recommended for such promotion by a board appointed by the Superintendent of the Naval Academy.

3c. Previous experience in teaching in colleges and universities, previous service in industrial and scientific lines related to the subject which he is employed to teach, if approved by the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, may be counted for the purpose of eligibility for selection for promotion of any instructor, assistant professor, or associate professor, on the basis of two years' such service for one year's continuous service at the Naval Academy, provided that this does not apply to the first two years as instructor, which shall be obligatory for all.

4. The Superintendent of the Naval Academy shall submit to the Navy Department each year a report of proposed promotions in the civilian teaching staff, these promotions to be based on merit and not on seniority.

5a. The pay of instructors shall be $2,800 per annum.

5b. The base pay of an assistant professor shall be $3,100 per annum, and $100 shall be added for each year of approved service as assistant professor until a maximum of $3,700 is reached.

5c. The base pay of an associate professor shall be $3,700 per annum, and $100 shall be added for each year of approved service as associate professor subsequent to July 1, 1919, until a maximum of $4,300 is reached.

5d. The base pay of a professor shall be $4,300 per annum, and $100 shall be added for each year of approved service as professor subsequent to July 1, 1919, until a maximum of $5,000 is reached.

UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY,
Annapolis, Md., June 21, 1920.

From: The Superintendent.
To: The Secretary of the Navy (Bureau of Navigation).
Subject: Pay of civilian teaching staff at the Naval Academy.
References: (a) Superintendent's letter to Secretary of the Navy (Bureau of Navigation), of May 20, 1920.
(b) Navy Department's first indorsement of May 26, 1920, 927–1014 (third paragraph).

1. In accordance with the third paragraph of reference (b), the superintendent makes the following recommendations concerning the appointments, promotions, and discharges of professors, associate professors, assistant professors, and instructors at the Naval Academy:

Appointments of instructors shall be annual. Appointments to all higher grades shall be for five years if service is satisfactory: Provided, That any professor, associate professor, or assistant professor whose services are not considered satisfactory by the Academic Board shall be so informed at the beginning of the second term of any year and shall be dropped at the end of that year. And provided further, That any professor, associate professor, or assistant professor who intends to sever his connection with the Naval Academy shall so inform the superintendent at the beginning of the second term of that academic year.

2. That all original appointments shall be in the grade of instructor; that promotion shall be by selection to the next higher grade; that no instructor shall be eligible for promotion to assistant professor until he shall have completed two years' service at the Naval Academy; that no assistant professor shall be eligible for promotion to associate professor until he shall have completed five years' continuous service at the Naval Academy; that no associate professor shall be eligible for promotion to professor until he shall have completed 10 years' continuous service at the Naval Academy: Provided, That an instructor who is not promoted assistant professor upon completion of his fourth year of service at the Naval Academy shall be automatically dropped, and shall be informed of this contemplated action at the commencement of the second term of his fourth year. Provided further, That no instructor now attached to the Naval Academy shall be dropped prior to July 1, 1921. No instructor shall be promoted to assistant professor until he shall have been examined and recommended for such promotion by a board appointed by the Superintendent of the Naval Academy.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, April 21, 1922.

_____ _____,
_____ _____,
_____ _____.
_____ _____.

Replying further to your letter relative to the contracts of civilian professors employed at the Naval Academy, I have the honor to inform you that after a most careful consideration of the conditions under which the contracts above referred to were consummated I am of the opinion that they are legal.

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 607), provides, relative to this proposition, as follows:

"The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ at the Naval Academy such number of professors and instructors, including one professor as librarian, as, in his opinion, may be necessary for the proper instruction of the midshipmen; and that professors and instructors so employed shall receive such compensation for their services as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided further, That the total amount so paid shall not exceed $175,000 annually: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report to Congress each year the number of professors and instructors so employed and the amount of compensation prescribed for each."

From an examination of the provisions of this act I am of the opinion that the Secretary of the Navy is specially authorized to employ at the Naval Academy such number of professors and instructors, including one professor as librarian, as, in his opinion, may be necessary for the proper instruction of the midshipmen, and he is also specially authorized to prescribe the amount of compensation which they shall be entitled to receive for their services as professors and instructors at the Naval Academy. The only limitation placed upon the power of the Secretary of the Navy to employ professors and instructors at the academy is that the total amount to be paid for said services shall not exceed $175,000 annually. This is obviously permanent legislation, giving the Secretary of the Navy special authority to do certain acts, and is in no wise dependent upon or connected with a particular appropriation. The $175,000 referred to in this proviso is not an appropriation, but a limitation upon the amount which may be expended in any one year for this purpose.

While it is not provided in terms that the Secretary of the Navy may employ said professors and instructors under contracts for services, this is not an unusual method of procedure. It is my opinion that it is inherent in the specific authorization given him to employ said individuals at the Naval Academy and to fix the amount of their compensation. While it has been the general practice prior to 1919 to employ professors and instructors at the academy under annual contracts, yet it was not the universal custom and there were one or more professors who had been employed for a considerable period of years under general contracts. It is believed evident that Congress in enacting the provision of the act of August 29, 1916, above quoted, was aware of the conditions existing at the academy, and that it was intended by this legislation to specially authorize the Secretary of the Navy to employ individuals at the academy as professors and instructors for such period of years as he might deem advantageous to the interests of the Government. It is well understood as a general proposition that it is advantageous to the Government to offer a permanent tenure of service to qualified professors and instructors, thereby avoiding the constant change and dissatisfaction which has been found to exist where such individuals are serving under contracts from year to year.

It has been a recognized proposition of law since 1820 that the executive departments may bind the Government by contract only in two cases, (a) where the contract is expressly authorized by law and (b) where there is an appropriation already made large enough to fulfill it. Under (a) there is an expressed power to contract for services, while under (b) there is an implied power merely to contract for so much work as the appropriation will pay for. (9 Op. Atty. Gen. 18.) This proposition of law was further considered and approved in the case of Shipman v. United States (18 Ct. Cls. 146), in which the court stated:

"The liability in this case rests wholly on the appropriation, and is different from those cases which frequently arise wherein Congress passes an act authorizing officers to construct a building or do other specified work without restriction as to cost, and then makes an appropriation inadequate to do the whole of it or makes none at all.

"In such cases the authority to cause the work to be done and to make contracts therefor is complete and unrestricted. All work, therefore, done under the direction of the officers thus charged with the execution of the law creates a liability on the part of the Government to pay for it."

This case was cited with approval by the Attorney General (21 Op. Atty. Gen. 244), and the same proposition of law will be found running through the subsequent decisions of the courts relative to the authority to make contracts on behalf of the Government.

Under section 3732 of the Revised Statutes—

"No contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made unless the same is authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except in the War and Navy Departments, for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current year."

And section 3 of the act of February 27, 1906 (34 Stat. 48, which amended sec. 3679 R. S.), provides that—

"No executive department or other Government establishment of the United States shall expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract or other obligation for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations unless such contract or obligation is authorized by law."

It appears from the foregoing that such contracts can only be made to apply to the appropriations under which they are made unless they are specially authorized by law. From an examination of the decisions of the courts on this proposition it is noted that the authorization referred to in provisions above quoted must be specific. (9 Op. Atty. Gen. 18, Op. Atty. Gen. 244, 155 U. S. 489).) While there may be reasonably differences of opinion as to whether or not the provisions of the act of August 29, 1916, above quoted, specially authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make contracts for services for a period exceeding one year,

I am of the opinion that the conditions relative thereto existing at the Naval Academy at that time are sufficient to warrant the holding that it was the intent of Congress to specially authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make such contracts.

If the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to make such contracts, the further question is presented as to whether or not the contract under consideration was made in accordance with the authority granted. The records of the department disclose that on April 2, 1919, the Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy requested the Secretary of the Navy to authorize him to secure the services of certain individuals therein referred to as professors and instructors at the Naval Academy for the period of time and the amount of compensation therein set forth. The name of Prof. Arthur N. Brown is found contained in said list, as well as the other provisions of this contract. On April 9, 1919, the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation informed the Superintendent of the Naval Academy that "the department has approved the recommendation of the Superintendent of the Naval Academy as contained in reference 'd.' Authority is therefore granted the superintendent to issue appointments to the professors, associate professors, assistant professors, and instructors whose names appear in reference 'd.' The appointments to be made at the rate of pay and for the dates indicated in reference 'd.'" Reference "d" is the letter of the Superintendent of the Naval Academy of April 2, 1919, above referred to.

From an investigation of the records of the department it appears that the Superintendent of the Naval Academy was duly authorized, as the agent of the Secretary of the Navy, to enter into contracts with certain individuals looking toward their employment as professors and instructors at the Naval Academy, and that the contract, a copy of which was transmitted with your letter, is one of those entered into by the Superintendent of the Naval Academy by virtue of the authority granted him by the Secretary of the Navy as herein set forth. The evidence of this contract bears the date of May 1, 1919, and was addressed to Prof. Arthur N. Brown, librarian, and is in the following language, to wit:

"In accordance with reference you are hereby appointed professor and librarian, Naval Academy, at $3,600 per annum for the period from July 1, 1919, by which date you will execute the required oath, to July 1, 1924, inclusive."

This document was signed by A. H. Scales, Superintendent of the Naval Academy. The required oath appears to have been executed in due course, and Professor Brown entered upon the performance of his duties under said contract.

It would appear, therefore, that the foregoing is a duly executed and binding unilateral contract between the Government as party of the first part and Prof. Arthur N. Brown, party of the second part, wherein the Government agrees to employ the said Brown as a professor and librarian at the Naval Academy for a period of five years, for which employment he shall receive a compensation of $3,600 per annum.

It has been decided that the Government does not contract to keep its employees in its service if their services are not needed (41 Ct. Cls. 61), and that, in the absence of express statutory provisions, all employments, appointments, or engagements of purely personal services of any kind by the Government, whether under contract or otherwise, for a definite or indefinite period, may be terminated at any time for just cause without subjecting the Government to liability for payment of damages on account thereof (26 Comp. Dec. 840, citing 33 Ct. Cls. 174; 41 Ct. Cls. 61; 177 U. S. 290). In the absence of any statutory provision prohibiting the Government from dispensing with the personal services of civilian professors employed at the Naval Academy at any time for just cause, it would appear that while the contract under consideration is legal and binding, the department may for just cause terminate said contract at any time.

Sincerely yours,

EDWIN DENBY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] yield some time to this side of the House? I should like to have 20 minutes. I have requests for 10 minutes, and I would like to use 10 minutes myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ELLIS). On this roll call 279 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] has stated that this is a unanimous report. That is true, and so far as I am concerned I want to say that I have agreed to the report and shall vote for it, because it represents the smallest amount which it is possible for the Congress to secure an agreement upon for the naval service during the next fiscal year. The Congress must provide for the Navy. If we do not agree to this conference report, then a continuing resolution must be agreed to, and an even larger amount would be provided for naval expenditures. So far as I am concerned, the bill originally reported to the House more nearly represented my views as to the amount that should be appropriated next year for naval expenditures, and that is the view of the other minority conferee—the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER]. I want to state, however, so that the Congress and the country may know, the exact amount that is provided for the expenditures of the Navy Department during the next fiscal year.

It is true that the bill as agreed upon makes a direct appropriation of $289,336,577, but this is not the total amount which the bill authorizes the Navy to spend. In addition to this direct appropriation, the bill authorizes the Navy to spend, under the head "Increase of the Navy," unexpended balances amounting to $46,250,000 and an additional $8,000,000, which the Navy Department is authorized to collect on certain notes due to the Government. The bill authorizes no appropriation at all for clothing, but by a bookkeeping transaction it makes available $1,800,000 for clothing for the Navy. By a similar transaction it makes available $450,000 for clothing for the Naval Reserve.

These amounts total $56,500,000, which when added to the direct appropriation made in the bill makes a total amount that the Navy is authorized to spend for current operations during the next fiscal year of $345,836,577. In addition to this amount for the current expenses of the Government during the next fiscal year there is appropriated in another bill an amount to cover the expenses incident to the cancellation of contracts, the most conservative estimate of which is $60,000,000, but which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] to-day stated might possibly reach $75,000,000.

Mr. LONDON. Are they naval contracts?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; naval contracts. Taking the conservative figure of $60,000,000 it makes the total amount available for naval expenditures during the next fiscal year $405,836,577.

The total naval appropriations for the current year ending June 30, 1922, amounted to $412,673,289, so that the reduction in naval expenditures for the next year, after the ratification of the treaty for the limitation of armament, will amount to $6,836,712.23.

Even if we disregard the $60,000,000 appropriated for the cancellation of contracts, the amount appropriated for the current expenses of the Navy next year amounts to $345,836,577, and that is only $66,836,712 less than the appropriation for the year ending June 30, 1922. Now, in order to fully appreciate the importance of these figures let me say that for the year ending June 30, 1914, the year previous to the beginning of the European war, our naval appropriations amounted to only $141,050,643. After the European nations were engaged in hostilities we appropriated for the year ending June 30, 1915, $146,493,177. For the year ending June 30, 1916, we appropriated only $149,763,563. Then, for the year ending June 30, 1917, when there was imminent danger of our becoming engaged in war and the great battleship program had been authorized, our total appropriations amounted to only $315,888,060. And now, after the war, after the holding of a conference for the limitation of armament, which the people believed would result in greatly reduced naval expenditures, this Congress will authorize for current expenses for the Navy for the next year, as against $315,000,000 when we were in danger of entering the war, the sum of $345,836,577, and a total naval expenditure, including the scrapping of the contracts, of $405,836,577.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In a moment. In addition to this we must take into consideration that as a result of the scrapping of the ships there will be available a considerable amount of material which is not included in this amount, and we must also take into consideration, judging from the past, that added to this $405,000,000 there will be deficiencies; so that the net result, as it now appears, is that the year after the armament conference the amount appropriated for naval expenditures will equal, if it does not exceed, the expenditures of last year, before the armament conference was held.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman advise the House how many hundred million dollars less the appropriation is now than it would have been had we carried out the program of the Hon. Josephus Daniels?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman's question, of course, is an exceedingly intelligent one, as the Hon. Josephus Daniels is not now Secretary of the Navy and submitted no program at all for this year. If we consider the estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Navy, they amounted to $425,000,000. But I am not talking about department estimates. I am talking about the appropriations for which the gentleman has voted, and I must say, too, that if it had not been for him and others who agreed with him, the total of appropriations would have been much less than they are in the bill as finally agreed upon.

Mr. OLIVER. If the recommendations of the House Appropriations Committee had been followed, the amount of this bill would have been much less than it is?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is correct, and I so stated in the opening of my remarks—that the Appropriations Committee in the original bill presented their views of what the total appropriation should be for next year. The House in its wisdom decided otherwise, and the conferees, as agents of the House, could only represent the views of the House, which they have attempted in good faith to do, and we have managed to secure a slight reduction of the appropriations as made by the Senate.

I think, however, the country will believe that we have not reduced it to the extent that they would like to have it reduced.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And the result of the Senate increase was the insistence of the administration that these matters were necessary?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am satisfied that the amount fixed by the Senate is less than the amount requested by the department.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield for a nonpartisan question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. To what extent is the expenditure the result of carrying out the naval program laid down in 1916?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It would be impossible to state, because under the head of increase of the Navy some ships under construction which are authorized to be retained by the treaty were authorized in the program. But that program could have been modified at any time and has now been modified, many ships then authorized not to be completed, but many are, a total of $60,000,000 being appropriated for ship construction under increase of the Navy.

Mr. LONDON. The most of the ships were authorized in 1916.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; when the World War was on and we were in imminent danger of being drawn into the war and the annual appropriation jumped from $149,000,000 to $315,000,000.

Mr. LONDON. As compared with 1914 the expenditure for the Navy this year is nearly one-quarter of a billion more.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It was $141,000,000 then, and for current operations next year will be $345,836,577, and for all purposes, including scrapping, $405,836,577.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am interested in the economy side of the Navy. Can the gentleman suggest how we can make a reduction?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I did suggest and earnestly advocated when the bill was before the House the way in which it could be done, but the House did not agree. I do not know how the gentleman voted, but that is water that has passed over the wheel and I would not resurrect any old sores now. As the House reported the bill it carried direct appropriations of $232,000,000 and indirect appropriations of $47,000,000 additional, and now it carries $345,000,000 and with the scrapping will carry $405,000,000. The subcommittee earnestly advocated certain economies until the steam roller passed over us. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The gentleman has used 11 minutes.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. I am after information which will probably be of advantage to the House and the country. Will the gentleman tell me how much of the $405,000,000 was imposed upon us by law, or the program of Congress for carrying out a program?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Absolutely none of it, except this $60,000,000 included in the scrapping bill. It is optional with us each year what we will complete. Any program made by a former Congress we can modify just as we have this year modified the 1916 program. Of course, it is all authorized by law. But we can revise the law. In this bill the Senate has added for construction $15,000,000.

Mr. LAYTON. To complete some vessel of the 1916 program?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. For no specific ship, but for increase of the Navy, including the ships of the 1916 program which the department has determined to complete, and the two aircraft carriers authorized by this Congress.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. On page 67 we have provided for the completion of two cruisers, and no names were given, and it was left to the Navy Department to select the ships. I see that two are named, and I was wondering as an historical matter how that came about.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can answer my friend. That amendment is of no real value. The House passed a bill authorizing two cruisers to be converted into aircraft carriers, and provided, as the House ought to have provided, that the two cruisers which were furthest advanced should be converted. The bill went to the Senate, and the Naval Board said that the Lexington and Saratoga were the furthest advanced.

Assistant Secretary Roosevelt reported to the Senate committee that they were going to complete the Lexington and the Saratoga, whereupon the senior Senator from Massachusetts, upon the floor of the Senate, being assured of that fact, moved to amend the bill and specify that the Lexington and Saratoga be completed; one was under construction at the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., which is controlled by the Bethlehem Steel Co., and is located in Massachusetts. Gentlemen may draw their own deductions as to the necessity for it, and in view of this being a political year, should not be harsh in their conclusions. So far as the House conferees were concerned, we had no objection, in view of the facts in the case. And, personally, I wanted to agree to it for the reason that the shipyard is located in the district of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM]. The other ship is being constructed in New Jersey in the district of the very efficient representative from New Jersey [Mr. APPLEBY]. I was anxious to have the conferees agree to it, because if the senior Senator from Massachusetts thought it necessary under the circumstances that the names of the ships be specified, I wanted the House to grant the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM], who has been so deeply interested in this matter. If Massachusetts insists upon sending a Republican from that district, they can send no better Representative than the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. FROTHINGHAM.

With reference to the discussion of the amendment as to the civilian professors at Annapolis, I simply want to say that during the conference we were informed by two Members of the Senate that Admiral Wilson had served notice upon 35 civilian instructors and professors that their services would be dispensed with. That statement was made in the Senate and has been carried in the press. The fact is that the department advises me that Admiral Wilson officially advises them that the statement is untrue; that he did not dream of doing it, and thought it would be improper for him to do it under the circumstances. But other statements made are equally inaccurate. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] says now that he understands that 13 were given notice and the notice afterwards withdrawn. The Chief of the Bureau of Navigation informs me that Admiral Wilson has advised him that this is not accurate; that he has given notice to no instructor or professor except the five men whose removal has been recommended for cause, which recommendation has been approved by the Secretary of the Navy. For manifest reasons I do not care to state the grounds, but it is sufficient to meet the approval of the Secretary of the Navy. One other civilian instructor, who has left the country and, as I understand, took leave without permission from anyone, will also be removed. These six are the only cases. Unless Congress wants to disorganize and demoralize the academy they can not prevent removals for cause. Admiral Wilson has no desire other than to carry out the directions of the Congress. He made his recommendations in performance of his duty. He now stands ready to administer whatever law is enacted by the Congress.

Mr. SEARS. I notice by the papers that they had agreed to complete these two vessels.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan if he will not yield me five minutes more?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, how much time is left of the hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan has 11 minutes and the gentleman from South Carolina has five minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the hour be extended 5 minutes and that that time be given to the gentleman from South Carolina.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the hour be extended five minutes and that that time be given to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNS]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes remaining to me to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for the 10 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that he may speak out of order and that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I believe I speak the sentiment of every Member of the House when I say that we all regret to note in the morning newspapers that our good friend the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. FORDNEY, is retiring from active political life. [Applause.] He is a type unto himself. I believe we will all also agree that if one had to select a stand-pat, dyed-in-the-wool, hell-bent, powder-burnt, and Chinese-wall tariff man in the House of Representatives we would select JOE FORDNEY. He stands out, I repeat, as a character unto himself, but the eulogies for him will come at a more appropriate time.

What I rose for more than anything else was to criticize somewhat the prophecy of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. Gentlemen will probably remember back a year or more ago that we had under consideration at that time even the tariff bill. They will also recall that in the last Congress we had hearings on the tariff bill. A number of you gentlemen who were at that time in the House and some of you on the Committee on Ways and Means will remember that we held some 90 days of hearings on the tariff. January 6, 1921, it was, I recall now, that we began the hearings on the tariff. Mr. Harding came into office on March 4, and he called a special session of Congress on April 11 for the purpose of considering the tariff bill. I am reciting these dates and incidents in order that you gentlemen when you go home may be accurate in stating the reason for this recess, which I understand is to be until August 8. I know that none of you will desire to misrepresent it. Therefore I want to give you some of the history of this proposed tariff legislation in order that you may not say when you go home that this recess is being taken because the Democrats keep you from considering the tariff. Do not say that, because it will not be so, and I do not want you to state anything that is not based on the facts.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. Does the gentleman in speaking of that delay refer to this House or to the other body?

Mr. GARNER. I am referring to both.

Mr. CROWTHER. I am glad of that.

Mr. GARNER. And I think I can prove that this House is as much to blame as the other body. The hearings began on January 6, 1921. Those hearings were completed before the beginning of this Congress on March 4, 1921. They were completed and you were ready to make up your bill. What happened? You were called into extra session on April 11. How long did it take the Republicans of the Committee on Ways and Means—not the Democratic House, not a filibuster in this House or the Senate, but the Republican membership of the Ways and Means—to make up a bill, where all of the hearings were complete when you began? That bill was reported to this House on June 29. Why did you take from April 11 to June 29 to make up a tariff bill and bring it into the House if you were an efficient organization? You had your information. You had your hearings. The entire business was complete. Why did you delay reporting it? Mr. FORDNEY said on the floor of this House on April 14, 1921, that you would have a completed law in from 30 to 60 days. I can refer you to the page of the RECORD where he made that statement. On April 15 Mr. MONDELL on the floor of this House assured the country—and especially the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], who asked the question—that you would have a completed bill with a high-tariff duty on gloves before the session ended. The session ended, and yet there was no bill. How long did it take you to pass it? Not long; of course not. You did not give it any consideration. Twenty-two lines of the tariff bill were all that you considered in this body. Somebody had to consider it; it had to be considered by some legislative body; and I submit to you that if it took you three months to make it up in your committee and if it took the Republicans in the Senate Finance Committee eight months to make it up, then some legislative body ought to consider the different items in the bill, and that is what they are doing in the Senate at this time. I do not want you to go home and say that the reason you can not pass this tariff bill is because of a Democratic filibuster, when every other tariff bill—and I will put the dates in the RECORD—has been passed in much less time. The longest one heretofore took eight months and six days.

Congress met April 11, 1921.

FORDNEY BILL.

Hearings started January 6, 1921; introduced June 29, 1921; reported in House July 6, 1921; passed House July 21, 1921; referred to Finance Committee July 22, 1921; and reported from Finance Committee April 11, 1922.

UNDERWOOD BILL.

(Sixty-third Congress, first session.)

Introduced April 7, 1913; reported in House April 22, 1913; passed House May 8, 1913; referred to Finance Committee May 9, 1913; reported from Finance Committee July 11, 1913; passed Senate September 9, 1913; sent to conference September 9, 1913; conference report adopted October 3, 1913; and became a law October 3, 1913.

PAYNE BILL.

(Sixty-first Congress, first session.)

Introduced March 17, 1909; reported in House March 17, 1909; passed House April 9, 1909; referred to Finance Committee April 10, 1909; reported from Finance Committee April 19, 1909; passed Senate July 8, 1909; sent to conference July 8, 1909; conference report adopted August 5, 1909; and became a law August 5, 1909.

DINGLEY BILL.

(Fifty-fifth Congress, first session.)

Introduced March 18, 1897; reported in House March 19, 1897; passed House March 31, 1897; referred to Finance Committee March 31, 1897; reported from Finance Committee May 4, 1897; passed Senate July 7, 1897; sent to conference July 8, 1897; conference report adopted July 24, 1897; and became a law July 24, 1897.

WILSON BILL.

(Fifty-third Congress, second session.)

Introduced December 19, 1893; reported in House December 19, 1893; passed House February 1, 1894; referred to Finance Committee February 2, 1894; reported from Finance Committee

March 20, 1894; passed Senate July 5, 1894; sent to conference July 7, 1894; conference report adopted August 13, 1894; and became a law—without President's approval—August 27, 1894.

M'KINLEY BILL.

Introduced April 16, 1890; reported in House April 16, 1890; passed House May 21, 1890; referred to Finance Committee May 23, 1890; reported from Finance Committee June 18, 1890; passed Senate September 10, 1890; sent to conference September 10, 1890; conference report adopted October 1, 1890; and became a law October 1, 1890.

How long have you had this one? Nearly 18 months, and you are still saying it is impossible to pass it and you are going to have a recess until August the 8th. I am afraid your gloves, Mr. CROWTHER, will have to be of the fall variety before you get the duty that you want. You had a majority in the House and a majority in the Senate, and a declaration by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that he intended to pass the bill in from 30 to 60 days, together with a declaration by the leader of the majority, Mr. MONDELL, that it would be passed before the session closed. I am sorry to say that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] was guilty himself of a false prophecy in that connection, because he also declared that this bill would become a law before the Congress adjourned, and it is not often that the gentleman from Ohio makes a false prophecy.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Did not the House pass that bill in July, 1921?

Mr. GARNER. It did.

Mr. STEPHENS. And the House is exonerated from any criticism?

Mr. GARNER. It passed the House July 21, 1921.

Mr. STEPHENS. Did not the House then do its duty in passing the bill?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, yes; but it was a little tardy itself.

Mr. STEPHENS. Is it not the Senate that is to blame and not the House?

Mr. GARNER. Who is in control of the Senate?

Mr. STEPHENS. Not the House, surely.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, I admit that. The bill passed the House of Representatives on July 21, 1921, and was referred to the Finance Committee of the Senate on July 22, 1921. No one controlled the Republicans of the Finance Committee of the Senate, nobody filibustered in that body. Could you even conduct a filibuster in that body? When was it reported back from the Committee on Finance to the Senate? The Senate Finance Committee got the bill on July 22, 1921, and reported it back to the Senate on April 11, 1922, just 12 months after the President of the United States called the Congress into special session to consider that legislation. It took 12 months to bring it back into the Senate. I suggest that we Democrats and patriotic Republicans in the Senate have a right to consider that measure item by item, because it has never been considered in any legislative body up to this moment. I do not blame you for delaying. No longer than June 24, last week, the Senator from Michigan, Mr. TOWNSEND, declared that this was no time to pass a tariff law. Here is what he said:

> Mr. President, I repeat that this is an unfavorable time to revise the tariff. * * * Under the existing conditions I have mentioned, the exact rate of duty which measures the difference in the cost of production here and abroad can not be determined in all cases.

Think of it! A Senator—a leading Senator, we will say—from the State of Michigan, from the same State that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means comes from, declares in the Senate of the United States that this is no time to pass the legislation which they are considering, and he added most significantly the very thing——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARNER. Have you any more time? I want only five minutes more. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes without taking it out of the hour.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to withdraw that request.

Mr. GARNER. Very well.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask the gentleman from Michigan if he will not ask unanimous consent to have his time extended for 10 minutes more, because I promised the gentleman from Maryland five minutes?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, I do not see any harm in this, and I will ask unanimous consent. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my hour be extended 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that his hour be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield five minutes of that time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield that five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Michigan, the gentleman from South Carolina, and the entire membership of the House.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. CROWTHER. I want to ask, under the present rules of the Senate with unlimited debate, is it not a fact that the date of the passage of the tariff bill is absolutely in the hands of the Democratic minority?

Mr. GARNER. It is not.

Mr. CROWTHER. Absolutely, and the gentleman knows it; and he can not explain it in any other way.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will give us Democrats 22 majority, we will attend to business. We have got more business——

Mr. CROWTHER. That side has been attempting repeatedly to sit back and crawl under the fence——

Mr. GARNER. I yielded to the gentleman for a question. If the gentleman will give the Democrats a majority of 22 in the Senate they will do as they always have done—do business. Whether we are more patriotic or more intelligent I do not know, but the fact is that we do business, and that is the difference between the two parties. I will tell you what is the reason you do not pass it. You may know it or not, but they know it in the Senate. You have not got the information upon which to base a tariff bill. Senator TOWNSEND said in his speech, probably to send out to his constituency, that you did not have sufficient data to tell the difference in the cost of production here and abroad. If you have not got that you could not write the rate, and there is no such thing as making a tariff bill except you know the proper rates. You knew you could not draw a scientific bill. The Republican Senators knew it. Mr. FORDNEY and Mr. GREEN knew it when they undertook to make it over here, and they debated in their own minds for six months whether they ought to make a bill or not.

Mr. STEAGALL. The Washington Post this morning says that the time of debate yesterday was consumed by Republicans.

Mr. GARNER. Of course they did, and it shows the silliness of any man who says that you have 22 majority in the Senate and you are unable to legislate. You have had the same rules for 100 years in the Senate, and yet every time they want to the majority has been able to function. You do not want to function, that is what is the matter.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Not just now.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman says that they can not pass the bill in the Senate because of not having information. I would like to inquire what has become of that beneficent institution of Washington called the Tariff Commission, which was to furnish this information?

Mr. GARNER. Yes; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania understands this, that Mr. FORDNEY said he was going to have American valuation, and, God bless him, this is one more prophecy that goes to the winds. I wish you could get a picture around the conference table when this bill goes to conference. When he gets in there the first thing Mr. FORDNEY will do is to back down on the American valuation. That is the first proposition. What are you going to do about it? When they bring it back here and you and you and you who voted for American valuation, and did not know what you were voting for, what are you going to do about it? You are going to tuck your tails and take foreign valuation, the same old dose you have been having all these years. You will have to explain it to your constituents, you who have been boosting American valuation. I do not know how my friend GREEN will explain it to their satisfaction when he becomes ranking Member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will not have as much to explain as my friend who has been talking against American valuation all the time.

Mr. GARNER. Well, I have never voted for it and have been against it all the time, because no man living could explain it or defend it.

Mr. CROWTHER. Is the gentleman going to include in his extension of remarks his former tariff speech which has never been printed?

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman would like to get hold of that. I heard it said that there were two speeches lost, one by Abraham Lincoln and one by myself, so I think that I am in a good class. I am going to put in the RECORD full data in reference to each one of these tariff bills—when it was reported to the House, when passed, when reported to the Senate, everything in connection with the McKinley bill down to the present time—so that you will not be able to say that you took a recess for the reason that you had a Democratic filibuster in the Senate. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. May I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] if he is going to yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] five minutes?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, we have drifted far away from what I wanted to talk about and that which was under discussion when these other questions began to be debated. That was the subject of civilian professors at the Naval Academy. You remember that this House was very strongly in favor of retaining the civilian professors at that academy, and when the two amendments retaining them were offered they were passed by a very large majority; and I can not but feel that in practically eliminating the civilian professors at the Naval Academy this House will make a great mistake. Certainly it will change mightily from what it decided when those two amendments were offered by the gentleman from Michigan. Now it is intended to reduce the civilian professors. If you will bear in mind, it was said on the floor of this House that no commissioned officer could become a professor at the Naval Academy until 12 years after he had graduated. I have no objection to commissioned officers as disciplinarians and for the training of the troops, but I do think it is a great mistake to try to take a commissioned officer and make a professor of him after he has been away from his studies for 12 years, after he has been at sea probably for one-half of that time, after he has been practically away from his books and on sea duty for a large part of the time, with his mind and attention concentrated on his duties and responsibilities.

The Naval Academy has a great reputation, and that reputation has been built up largely because you have had commissioned officers as men for training and disciplining the students. But for teaching the various subjects we want trained teachers, and any man in this House, like the gentleman who is chairman of this committee, who has been a school teacher, knows if you take a man from his studies for 12 years and then have him go back to teach students, he can not do it with the same efficiency and with the same results as men who have been trained and who have steadily worked at it.

Under this Senate amendment you can practically give a man six month's notice, even though he has been engaged for years, and let him out, and there is no provision in the bill to prohibit letting all of them out, except that you can not use the money for the payment of teachers to pay commissioned officers under this appropriation. But you can drop every last one and not use that money for commissioned officers. I contend that we ought to stand by the amendment that we put into this bill and we ought to continue the civilian professors at the academy that will give us the same standard of efficiency, the same great Naval Academy that we have always had. If you take commissioned officers and put them there for two years, and then take them out and put them at sea duty, and put other men in as teachers, changing practically your whole teaching force every two years, it will be a great mistake. I plead with the majority of this House not to make that mistake, because I know it is not in the interest of the Naval Academy nor the country and ought not to be done.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman does not think that possible under this amendment?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think this, that while this bill was under discussion the superintendent of the Naval Academy, not waiting for the House to decide this question, gave notice of retirement to 11 professors. I have high regard for the superintendent of the Naval Academy. I know him and like him, but I think he ought to have waited until this House acted before he gave notice to these men to discontinue their duties.

Mr. DENISON. In view of the provisions put in this bill, if the superintendent should persist in that course it would lead to investigation by the Congress.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not know what it would lead to, but I know what it will do to the academy if you follow it up.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I will take a few minutes to call your attention to the action of the conferees on legislation that was passed by the House. I refer to amendment No. 30 on page 32 in the bill that is now before the House. This amendment was placed in the naval appropriation after "Bureau of Ordnance," and "Ordnance stores," and says:

That no part of this appropriation or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for expenditure at the Naval Proving Ground, Dahlgren, Va., except so much as may be necessary to maintain the station on a closed-down basis.

At the time this was presented to the Members of the House the fact was stated that Indianhead, Md., for many years had been the site of the proving ground for the Navy; that in 1918 an appropriation of $1,000,000 was made to establish a lower station. This lower station was to be auxiliary to the Indianhead establishment. Indianhead consists of the powder factory and the proving ground. In 1918 they went over to Dahlgren, Va., and purchased 1,000 acres of land, and an appropriation of $1,000,000 was made upon the request of the Navy Department, and the addition of a lower station proving ground was established. That was a war measure. Instead of spending their $1,000,000, as proposed in the beginning, they went to the Appropriations Committee and had placed upon a deficiency appropriation bill an additional $980,000. Up to date they have spent $2,200,000, and if they still carry out the ideas that were never presented to the Naval Affairs Committee, their expenditure will reach $3,250,000.

Mr. MUDD. Does the gentleman know that the Government also bought, in addition to this plant, the island known as Blackistone Island, which is the terminus of this range? Was that purchased out of the $2,000,000 fund?

Mr. STEPHENS. That was purchased out of the $2,200,000.

Mr. MUDD. Has the gentleman any idea what the amount was that was paid for the island?

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not remember what the amount was that was paid for the island, but it was taken out of that appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman's committee considered the feasibility of the Navy, in the testing of their guns, using the Army testing ground at Aberdeen, where we have such extensive facilities for that purpose?

Mr. STEPHENS. That proposition has been presented to the Bureau of Ordnance and the naval authorities and has been discussed, and it is deemed as feasible, I understand, that their large guns should be proved at Aberdeen, and equally as well as at Dahlgren, Va. It is all a matter of economy, and we are talking economy. I know everyone seems to be interested in economy, and this is one place where you can economize.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD].

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time in the history of Congress where the House so decisively expressed itself upon a proposition that the Senate did not most conspicuously repudiate the action of the House. The majority of the Naval Committee of this House, of which I have the honor to be a member, including our distinguished chairman, Mr. BUTLER, of Pennsylvania, voted to abandon this war-time proving ground, because it approved the recommendations of the special committee of the Naval Committee, of which I was also a member, which thoroughly investigated the outrageous expenditures at this station and concluded that it should cease to exist. Nor am I surprised that an amendment adopted by the House for the purpose of saving money has been rejected by the United States Senate.

When the Navy bill was before the House the all-powerful Appropriations Committee, obsessed with the idea of economy, defied the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy and his influence, and, in a losing struggle, contended that the personnel of the Navy should be reduced to 67,000 men, and Members of this House who represent navy-yard districts, including myself, were censured because, it was said, they exercised their desperate efforts to save the shore stations and were unwilling to economize on land.

This is an instance where a shore station can be completely abandoned and millions of dollars saved to the Government. Must we believe that it is too late for economy, too late to save money that is recklessly and entirely wasted? I am beginning to wonder if this present administration is an "economy administration."

There must be some exceptional strategical advantages about the State of Virginia, for certainly during the war, for some reason or other, and I can imagine no other, the last administration, which was so ably represented in the United States Senate, constructed many naval and military institutions, including Quantico, Dahlgren, Hampton Roads, a torpedo station at Alexandria, and Camp Humphreys. All of the channels and harbors should be on the Virginia side, therefore, but they are not there, and Congress is called upon and will be called upon in the future, particularly at this place, Dahlgren, which is 3 miles from the channel of the river, to build great channels and docks at most prohibitive costs.

It was never contemplated by Congress, and it was never represented to the Naval Committee that Dahlgren should be a permanent naval station. On the contrary, it was represented to us that it was needed as an auxiliary proving ground for the purpose of testing long-range guns only, and that $1,000,000 was sufficient to purchase the land and install the plant. We were also assured that Indianhead was not to be discontinued as a proving ground. Admiral Earle specifically stated in the record, No. 137, page 690, "We only intend to use it for such guns as can not be tested at the present proving ground." And again he stated, "A million dollars will cover it," but, yet, without the knowledge of the Naval Committee, the Ordnance Bureau obtained an additional $980,000 and constructed luxurious houses and batteries at Dahlgren, taking all guns away from Indianhead.

For 30 years they have been successfully testing guns of every caliber at Indianhead. We did not hear of the long-range testing until the war came on. If we must do "Big Bertha" long-distance testing, it is not necessary to maintain a separate naval station for this purpose, as the few long-range tests can be made once or twice a year, and, if necessary, they could be, as has been stated, tested at Aberdeen. All other tests, velocity, armor plate, and so forth, can be made at Indianhead. In fact such tests could be made over land as well as over water without as great danger to human life, and, though I am no expert, I believe that this station could have been built at the terminus of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Pope's Creek, below Indianhead on the Maryland side, and shells could have been fired for a distance over land and water and recovered at Blackistones Island. Long-distance tests are made entirely over land at Aberdeen.

The Government has no right to disturb the navigation of the Potomac by shooting over this straight 20-mile range of water during peace time. Hundreds of my constituents make their living by oystering and fishing in these productive waters, and their lives are to be continually invaded and ignored by the Government, without little or any precaution to warn them of their constant danger, if this report is adopted.

Mr. Speaker, the rights of the public and particularly the civilian employees should be considered as well as the comforts of naval officers. Dahlgren is one of the most beautiful places on the Potomac, overlooking a wide expanse of water, where there used to be an old colonial home, which has now been replaced, as if by magic, by a most luxurious $60,000 mansion for the commandant and many other magnificent homes for subordinate officers. It is a picturesque spot, where one can contemplate the wonders and marvel at the splendors of nature, but that is all there is to it except extravagance. Every comfort is provided in this delightful community for the officers, who come and go in high-powered automobiles for official use, crossing the river at will from the Maryland side at Popes Creek in fine speedy launches that are provided by congressional appropriations for the Navy. But what about the blessings bestowed upon the employee? His is a lonely and unhappy existence living in a dormitory, because the Government has removed him from Indianhead, where he has a home, partly unpaid for, and a wife and children who await his weekly return, which at all times is doubtful because the Government provides most inadequate facilities for his transportation.

I know that my time has expired and I shall conclude. Perhaps there never will be another gun fired at Indianhead, but nevertheless it is a complete naval station, the batteries are there, and it has been testing your guns for the Navy for 30 years. To continue Dahlgren is an experiment in wasting money; to discontinue it is a realization of economy. I can never be convinced that it is fair to endanger the lives of navigators and fishermen on the Potomac and waste millions of dollars in the future for the purpose of maintaining this useless and remote separate station which is so unnecessary and inaccessible.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUDD. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman tell the House how much they will have to spend for railroads before they can use this property?

Mr. MUDD. I will answer that in this way: You have already purchased a railroad at Indianhead for $1,000,000. Dahlgren is 40 miles from a railroad. It would cost many millions.

Mr. BUTLER. Did the gentleman tell the House that this is an absolute waste of money?

Mr. MUDD. Yes; and it is.

Mr. BUTLER. And yet, although it is useless, it will never be dispensed with.

Mr. MUDD. Not if it is left to the Senate and the Navy Department.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Members of this House are familiar with this extravagance. I have stated facts to you discovered by the special subcommittee which investigated this place, and I urge you to reject the conference report before you.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I just want to devote the minute remaining of my hour to this last proposition. I have no doubt in my own mind that there were some irregularities practiced in building up this station at Dahlgren. Perhaps it should not have been built. Now that it is built, it may be that it should be abandoned. I have no doubt but that there are a number of naval stations up and down the coast that might with great profit be abandoned, but I think that should be worked out with some considerable care by the Committee on Naval Affairs. The two gentlemen who have spoken in favor of abandoning Dahlgren are members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is chairman of the Naval Committee. If they want to abandon some of these places I think they have the machinery in their own hands to bring about that result. The conferees on an appropriation bill are not in a very good position to do so as a rule.

I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. STEPHENS rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. STEPHENS. I rise to move to recommit the conference report, with instructions to the managers on the part of the House to insist on the disagreement of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio moves to recommit the conference report. The Clerk will report his motion.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STEPHENS moves to recommit the conference report, with instructions to the managers on the part of the House to insist on the disagreement of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division is asked for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 79.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 30: Page 6, line 11, after the figures insert "Provided, That quarantine and passport fees collected in the Virgin Islands shall hereafter be paid into the treasuries of said islands."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House recede and concur. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Amendment No. 6: Page 9, line 11, insert:

"To pay George Melling for compiling the laws and decisions relating to the Navy, Navy Department, and Marine Corps made prior to July 1, 1922, including an index thereto, and in accordance with Senate resolution of March 30, 1914, $3,000, to be available upon completion of said work."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 6 and agree to the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 13: On page 16, line 22, after word "wharfage," strike out "$50,000: Provided, That no part of the money appropriated in this act shall be used for the training of any member of the Naval Reserve Force except with his own consent" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "pay and allowances of officers and enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force, other than class 1, while on active duty for training; mileage for officers while traveling under orders to and from active duty for training; transportation of enrolled men to and from active duty for training, and subsistence and transfers en route or cash in lieu thereof; subsistence of enrolled men during the actual period of active duty for training; pay and allowances of officers of the Naval Reserve Force and pay, allowances, and subsistence of enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force when ordered to active duty in connection with the instruction, training, and drilling of the Naval Reserve Force; and retainer pay of officers and enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force, other than class 1, $3,000,000, which amount shall be available, in addition to other appropriations, for fuel and transportation and for all expenses in connection with the maintenance, operation, repair, and upkeep of vessels assigned for training the Naval Reserve Force: Provided, That members of the Volunteer Naval Reserve may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be issued such articles of uniform as may be required for their drills and training, the value thereof to be charged against the clothing and small stores fund: Provided further, That no part of the money appropriated in this act shall be used for the training of any member of the Naval Reserve Force except with his own consent. That until June 30, 1923, of the Organized Militia as provided by law, such part as may be duly prescribed in any State, Territory, or for the District of Columbia shall constitute a Naval Militia; and until June 30, 1923, such of the Naval Militia as now is in existence, and as now organized and prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy under authority of the act of Congress approved February 16, 1914, shall be a part of the Naval Reserve Force, and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to maintain and provide for said Naval Militia as provided in said act: Provided, That upon their enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force, and not otherwise until June 30, 1923, the members of said Naval Militia shall have all the benefits, gratuities, privileges, and emoluments provided by law for other members of the Naval Reserve Force, and that with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy duty performed in the Naval Militia may be counted as active service for the maintenance of efficiency required by law for members of the Naval Reserve Force: Provided further, That all moneys appropriated for the Naval Reserve Force or for the Naval Militia shall constitute one fund and hereby are made available under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for both."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 13, and agree to the same with an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "$200,000; for pay and allowances of officers and enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force, other than class one, while on active duty for training; mileage for officers while traveling under orders to and from active duty for training; transportation of enrolled men to and from active duty for training, and subsistence and transfers en route or cash in lieu thereof; subsistence of enrolled men during the actual period of active duty for training; pay and allowances of officers of the Naval Reserve Force, and pay, allowances, and subsistence of enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force when ordered to active duty in connection with the instruction, training, and drilling of the Naval Reserve Force; and retainer pay of officers and enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force, other than class one, $2,800,000; in all, $3,000,000, which amount shall be available, in addition to other appropriations, for fuel and the transportation thereof and for all other expenses in connection with the maintenance, operation, repair, and upkeep of vessels assigned for training the Naval Reserve Force: Provided, That members of the Volunteer Naval Reserve may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be issued such articles of uniform as may be required for their drills and training, the value thereof not to exceed that authorized to be issued to other classes of the Naval Reserve Force and to be charged against the clothing and small stores fund: Provided further, That no part of the money appropriated in this act shall be used for the training of any member of the Naval Reserve Force except with his own consent; that, until June 30, 1923, of the Organized Militia as provided by law, such part as may be duly prescribed in any State, Territory, or for the District of Columbia shall constitute a Naval Militia; and, until June 30, 1923, such of the Naval Militia as now is in existence, and as now organized and prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy under authority of the act of Congress approved February 16, 1914, shall be a part of the Naval Reserve Force, and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to maintain and provide for said Naval Militia as provided in said act: Provided, That upon their enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force, and not otherwise until June 30, 1923, the members of said Naval Militia shall have all the benefits, gratuities, privileges, and emoluments provided by law for other members of the Naval Reserve Force; and that, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, duty performed in the Naval Militia may be counted as active service for the maintenance of efficiency required by law for members of the Naval Reserve Force."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice that the amount has been increased nearly $3,000,000 by the proposed Senate amendment. I wish to inquire whether this is the item for the pay of the officers of the Naval Reserve Force while they are taking training for 15 days each year? In the War Department appropriation bill we agreed to a Senate amendment providing for an appropriation of $1,000,000 to pay for the training in the Officers' Reserve Corps of some 5,000 men for 15-day periods, something new in the history of the Army. I was wondering whether this $3,000,000 is for similar expenses in the Navy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that there are several classes of naval reservists provided for under existing law. The first class is known as the Fleet Naval Reserve. They are men who have served in the Navy from 16 to 20 years and upward. After having served that time they may be transferred into the Fleet Reserve at a certain percentage of the pay received in active service. They are not included in this amendment because they are taken care of in the pay of the Navy, both the officers and the men. This is a provision for $3,000,000 for the training of volunteers in the Naval Reserve. It is the class to which all of the naval reservists were transferred last year by the Secretary of the Navy from other classes where they would have drawn retainer pay of one and two months had the appropriation been sufficient.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many are in that class?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Just a moment. The men in this class do not draw what we call retainer pay, but are paid only for the time they actually train, and this is comparable as nearly as may be with the provision for the National Guard in that respect.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not referring to the National Guard. I am referring to the Officers' Reserve Corps, men who served in the World War and who volunteered to respond to the call of the Government at any time in the future and who under the law are obliged to give 15 days each year for training. Under the law they receive the pay of their grade during the time that they are in training, and also receive their mileage. This year the War Department appropriation bill merely provided for 5,000 of the 64,000 men in the Officers' Reserve Corps. I wish to inquire how many men does this $3,000,000 provide for in the Navy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This does not provide for any new legislation on the subject.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was not new legislation, either, that was carried in the War Department appropriation bill. They were merely providing for carrying out the provisions of the Army reorganization act to a limited extent. The War Department asked an appropriation of something like $4,000,000 or more, and the House provided an appropriation of only $250,000. The Senate raised it to $2,000,000. We compromised in conference on $1,000,000, which enables the department to train only 5,000 of the 64,000 or more men in the Officers' Reserve Corps. I am inquiring of the gentleman how many men does this $3,000,000 provide for the training of for a similar class of officers in the Navy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am not quite sure as to the similarity of service or class. It provides for those who are in the volunteer reserves to the extent of 10,000 men and 3,000 officers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Further in that particular, these volunteer officers receive 8 cents a mile when traveling to the training camps. The Senate incorporated an amendment providing that so far as the members of the Officers' Reserve Corps are concerned their mileage while going for this 15 days' training should be only 4 cents a mile. Has the gentleman considered the advisability of cutting down the mileage for the comparable branch of the service of the Navy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; men get the full amount of travel provided for under existing law.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was strongly represented by the Senate conferees that the members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when summoned for 15 days' training should not receive the maximum of 8 cents a mile but only 4 cents a mile, for the reason that they were not obliged to stay overnight en route, they were not subjected to hotel expenses, and they were visiting camps near their homes, and that 4 cents a mile would be adequate. One reason why the House subcommittee declined to vote any compensation for their services is that if we had provided the full mileage for the complement that the War Department requested it would involve $1,000,000 alone for mileage. A reduction to 4 cents imposed on the Government for 5,000 officers makes something like $250,000, which is quite a saving. Does not the gentleman think that the reserve officers of the Navy should receive only a like mileage that is paid to the Reserve Officers' Corps in the Army?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is a matter that did not receive any consideration whatever. I imagine that the situation is somewhat different with respect to the Navy than it is in the Army. The fact that the boys are called into camps close by and that they would not have to travel any great distance is a factor in the Army, while in the case of the Navy they would have to travel from home to the seacoast in any event. The reason that the gentleman gives as to the change of the law as to reduction of mileage allowance for the Army would not apply to the Navy.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can see that in some particulars it might not, but $3,000,000 for the Navy for the instruction of 3,000 officers, as compared with $1,000,000 for the Army, is a rather large amount. We have 64,000 reserve officers in the Army, and we are only providing for 5,000, while in the Navy I do not know how many you have in reserve, but you are giving training for 10,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The ratio would be about the same—$3,000,000 for 10,000 would not be greatly different per man from that allowed for training 5,000 men in the Army. The last I knew there were 60,000 men in the volunteer reserves.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman if the $3,000,000 does not include the retainer pay for the reserve of the Navy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. My judgment is that it does not. These men have already been transferred from classes where they received retainer pay to the volunteer class. There has been a good deal of complaint about that, because they do not receive retainer pay. This provides for the calling out of 10,000 men and 3,000 officers of the volunteer class and giving them training for a short period of time; and the sum is not sufficient to allow them retainer pay.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. This is new—this $3,000,000 more money?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This question of the Naval Reserve was a difficult question to handle, for the reason that there is a good deal of uncertainty as to the future Naval Reserve policy. There is legislation on this matter now pending before the gentleman's own committee.

Mr. BUTLER. Permit me to say that the heavy foot of the military end of the committee has been put on the neck of my bill so that it will never breathe another sigh. I am not criticizing my friend.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There is no new legislation in this provision.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no new legislation, but it is new money. [Laughter.] I can not see wherein we gain anything by this conference if we are going to spend all this money. I do not criticize my friend from Michigan, for what he does I believe is right.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman speaks about the military end of the committee putting its foot on the bill——

Mr. BUTLER. The pay bill for the military arm is going to make it cost the Navy more.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BUTLER. Look at the bill and see. I am not mistaken.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yielded 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Iowa withhold a moment, that I may address the House for two minutes?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a resolution has been introduced in the Senate giving the consent of the Senate to an adjournment of the House until the 8th day of August. We hope that resolution will be favorably considered in the Senate to-morrow. If that is done the House will be prepared to adjourn when we have concluded the business before us. My opinion is that the Senate is not likely to take action on the deficiency bill until late to-morrow, possibly not until the following day, and in view of that fact and the situation with regard to other legislation between the two Houses which must be disposed of, I do not think it will be possible to present the resolution for adjournment until late Friday. I hope to be able to present it then. I hope I may be able to present it earlier than the time I have indicated, but there is no assurance as to that. We shall make every effort to dispose of the necessary business at an earlier hour, but it is absolutely essential that Members remain here until the resolution is presented. If they are not here it may not be possible to get away. It may be necessary to send for gentlemen if they leave prior to that adjournment. It will not be fair to the Members who remain if others go prior to the time of adjournment. I trust that none of the Members will arrange by securing transportation or otherwise to leave the city before late Friday or Saturday. We must have not only a quorum here but a goodly proportion of Members if we are to conclude the work before us and get away as we hope to do, and it is the duty of every Member now here to remain until the motion for adjournment has been made and carried.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order, in reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is a very fluent and entertaining speaker, and, without detracting at all from his acknowledged abilities, to which I am as willing as any man in the House to pay tribute, I would say that perhaps the fluency and ease which so often characterize him are somewhat aided by the circumstance that he is not at all hampered by questions of consistency nor troubled by consideration of the actual facts in the case. The gentleman said in the course of his remarks that I knew why the tariff bill had not been passed earlier, and I admit that I do. In fact, I thought everyone in the House knew; but as the gentleman did not seem to know, I will give him some information.

The reasons why the tariff bill has not been passed earlier are two: First, because it was decided in the Senate to lay aside the tariff bill and take up the revenue bill in the Senate instead, although the revenue bill was not passed by the House until after the tariff bill, and the revenue bill occupied the rest of the session; second, because of the constant talk on every item and upon every conceivable subject, whether connected with the tariff or not, that has been everlastingly kept up by the Democrats in the Senate ever since the tariff bill came forth.

But the time actually taken has been nothing like what the gentleman from Texas would lead you to believe. While he gives the date when hearings were begun on the pending bill in the House committee, he gives no dates as to when hearings were commenced on any of the Democratic bills. Possibly it is well that he gave the date when the hearings commenced, from which it appears that the House committee considered the bill carefully for months before it was reported.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I was correct, then, when I made the statement that the gentleman knew the reason why the tariff bill has not passed?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman was accurate for once.

As the gentleman seems to be worried about the passage of the bill, let me say to him that we are going to pass the tariff bill at this session. It will not be a tariff bill that will have put upon it the stamp of perfidy and dishonor, as was put upon one Democratic tariff bill by a Democratic President. It will not be a tariff bill that will put 4,000,000 men out of employment, as the last Democratic tariff bill did in the spring and summer of 1914, but, on the contrary, it will be a tariff bill that will light the fires under the machinery, start the wheels whirring, and put business in motion, and give employment to all that need it. That is the kind of tariff bill that we will have.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Will it have the American valuation in it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is very anxious about the American valuation.

Mr. GARNER. Sure.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The rates will be mostly specific, so that it will not be important. Let me say over again that the gentleman is not troubled with consistency. He endeavors to get the Republican side troubled in case the American valuation is not adopted and yet he himself has been foremost in denouncing the American valuation on this floor. The gentleman does not worry about consistency. If he did, he would not have troubled himself about the delay that he said was occurring in the Senate. We passed the tariff bill with speed in the House, and he complains about that. They are taking time in the Senate, and he complains about that.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. McPHERSON. The gentleman from Texas said that in the Senate Senator TOWNSEND made the statement that this was no time to pass a tariff bill. I wonder if the gentleman from Texas consulted the RECORD and knows that what Senator TOWNSEND stated was this:

> Mr. President, we must go through with this provision. The industry and the business of the country demand an early determination of this question. The uncertainty in the rates is more disturbing than too high or too low tariffs.

Instead of his making the statement that the gentleman from Texas attributed to him he made a statement to the very opposite, that this was a time when the country demanded the passage of the tariff bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would not expect my friend from Texas to be accurate on a matter of that kind.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman permit me to read what the Senator did say?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to make a few remarks myself. The gentleman from Missouri has already read from the RECORD what the Senator said.

Mr. GARNER. I shall get the gentleman more time, if he wants it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will look after that myself. I want to have another matter considered.

Mr. GARNER. I shall put this into the RECORD to show exactly what Senator TOWNSEND did say.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We have got it.

Mr. Speaker, the issue with respect to this tariff bill is not going to be what the gentleman talked about. There has been too much delay, but the House is not responsible for it, and the country now is interested in what the bill will contain.

Mr. Speaker, just before the war, when the country had an opportunity to know what the Underwood tariff meant in times of peace, the common expression was that never again would such a bill be adopted. In fact, many thought that the country had become so completely convinced from experience of the benefits of the protective system that the tariff would never again become a party matter. But at the present time our Democratic friends have been at a loss for an issue. The record made by the administration and Congress has been such that, although they have tried to talk about a "do-nothing" Congress, they never have been able to specify anything that Congress has not done which ought to be done, outside of the tariff bill which will soon be finished. This leaves them nothing to make a fight upon in the coming election except the tariff and, in the absence of anything else, they have raised the old cry, which has been repeated on every occasion when a Republican tariff bill was under consideration. They assert that it will raise the cost of living, that it will increase prices, and they base this on the old Democratic theory that the tariff is a tax which is added always to the price to the consumer.

Mr. Speaker, I have been astonished to see that some newspapers, especially those in the city of New York, have been misled by this old worn-out theory that has so often been refuted by the facts in the case and the logic of the situation. Nothing is easier to demonstrate than that the tariff is paid, as a rule, by either the foreigner or the importer, and no one realizes this better than the foreigner when the tariff is put upon his goods, or better than our own manufacturers when a tariff is put upon their goods by a foreign country. There are, of course, exceptions to this rule as to all rules, and one exception in this instance is that of luxuries or other articles which are not manufactured or produced in this country. But with these exceptions we have no concern. Our concern relates to the allegation that the new tariff will greatly raise the cost of living.

Mr. Speaker, I received a circular the other day that was sent out by some association calling itself The Housewives League, but which is evidently an adjunct of the Democratic campaign committee carrying on Democratic propaganda based on the old Democratic doctrine that the tariff is a tax. In this circular it was declared that the new tariff would raise the price of sugar and immensely increase the cost of sugar to the American consumer. It is also asserted that the tariff on wool will raise the price of clothing, and absurd statements were made as to the effect which the tariff on wool would have upon the price of a finished garment. Let us consider the real facts in the case and we will then see how ridiculous some of these statements are.

Whoever got up this circular was so ignorant of the real situation that he or she did not know that the tariff on sugar, as fixed in both the House and the Senate bills at this time, is just the same as it is in the emergency tariff bill that was enacted a year ago last May. While there is some movement in the Senate to make the rates higher, I do not expect to see higher rates adopted than now prevail. Sugar may be higher, but the tariff will have nothing to do with it. We have only to look back to the time when the emergency tariff was enacted and the rate on Cuban sugar, which furnishes practically all of our supply from abroad, was increased from 1 cent per pound to 1.6 cents per pound. Our friends on the other side declared, and even asserted in the minority report which was filed by the Democratic members of the committee at the time the bill was reported, that this increase in the rates would be added to the price of sugar as soon as the bill was passed. Instead of that, sugar went down, down, down for the next nine months, especially going down, as it always does when the beet-sugar supply came on the market. The whole Island of Cuba has been in a ferment ever since, because, as they say, and it must be admitted that it is a fact, we have compelled them to pay this additional charge in order to get their sugar upon our market. If the esteemed lady whose name is attached to the circular to which I have referred could persuade the people of Cuba that they do not pay this tariff and that the people of the United States pay it, she will succeed in reversing the entire course of public opinion on that island, and incidentally promote better feeling on their part, for they insist that it is greatly to their disadvantage. In this connection let me emphasize that every year in normal times when beet sugar comes upon the market the price of sugar goes down from 1 to 2 cents, and when the beet sugar goes off the market the price is raised correspondingly. By means of a protective tariff we have saved the beet-sugar industry of this country, and by means of the beet-sugar production hundreds of millions of dollars have been saved to the people of this country by reason of the lower prices brought about by its competition. Were there no competition in this country, then the foreigner could fix his price on sugar and the people of this country would have to pay the tariff. I repeat that instead of costing the consumer anything, the tariff on sugar has actually lowered the market price, and the foreigner has been compelled to pay the duty. Experience has shown in thousands of cases, as well as that of sugar, that the building up of a home industry has actually decreased prices to the consumer instead of increasing them.

Another absurd statement in this circular is that the tariff on wool will raise the price of clothing. Here again the party who prepared the circular seems to be ignorant of the real facts as to what is in the present bill and in the present tariff. The fact is that, whether the rates used by the House or the rates reported by the Senate committee are taken for the permanent bill, in either event the rate upon wool will be less than that now prevailing under the emergency tariff adopted over a year ago. The rate on scoured wool in the emergency tariff is 45 cents per pound. The rate fixed by the House in the pending bill was 25 cents per pound on scoured wool, and by the Senate 33 cents per pound. The rate can not be higher than that adopted by the Senate, and may be lower, so that in any event the rate on wool will be lower than that now prevailing, and if the price of cloth goes up it will not be by reason of any raise in the tariff.

Wool was on the free list prior to the adoption of the emergency tariff, which also increased the rates on cloth to correspond with the rate on wool. It was predicted that when this tariff went into force the price of clothing would go up. Instead, it has been going down ever since. The fact is that the price of wool has very little to do with the price of a suit of clothes or a dress, as it was shown by the comprehensive report on wool made by the tariff board in 1911. At that time, according to the report, the cost of the finished cloth in an ordinary suit of clothing was only 25 per cent of the retail price. At this time it can not exceed 20 per cent, as wages and general expenses are increased all out of proportion to the cost of materials. The tariff board also found that in women's clothing the cloth was not as much an element of cost as in the men's, the proportion of labor and manufacturing expense being higher. I think it is fair to say that at the present time in the ordinary suit or dress the cost of the cloth is not 20 per cent of the retail selling price, and of this 20 per cent the tariff forms a small part, as the goods, except when of such a nature that they are not manufactured in this country, are sold on a competitive basis. Ready-made clothing, which is used by the great mass of the people, whether it be for the women or men, was never cheaper than under the Payne bill, which carried a rate of 33 cents per pound on scoured wool. I challenge anyone to refute this statement. According to the report of the Tariff Commission, a standard, high-grade men's suit of all-wool cloth sold at that time at wholesale for $15.39 and retailed from $23 up.

There is much talk about the high rates on wheat and wheat products carried by the emergency tariff and in the proposed permanent bill, but who has found that he paid any more for a loaf of bread by reason thereof? And as for cereal food, the price has been declining and will still continue to decline as the margin of profit will decrease. In the same circular to which I have referred there was a complaint about the tariff on small knives and certain kinds of table cutlery which now, of American make, retail at from 5 cents to 10 cents each at the 5 and 10 cent stores. The situation with reference to these articles is like that with reference to the rates on hosiery under the Payne bill, which were discussed when the Underwood tariff bill was before the House and vigorously attacked by the Democrats. I heard gentlemen on that side at that time get up and say, with tears in their eyes, that 6 cents a pair that the Payne tariff had put on stockings would cause the very poor man to pay 6 cents more for every pair of stockings that he bought. I was moved by that tearful plea and I went to a store in this town to investigate the facts. There was no special sale, but in the ordinary course of business I bought a good, substantial pair of socks for 5 cents. I presented them here on this floor, and for once my Democratic friends were silent. That is the only time I have ever known them to be, but they could not explain how a man could buy a pair of socks for 5 cents and have 6 cents added to the price by the tariff.

Cheap hosiery is made under highly competitive conditions in the United States. It always will be, and is sold at wholesale as low, if not lower, than in any other part of the world, and it is immaterial what rate is put upon them. It is the same way with cheap cutlery. It is not the wholesale cost that will trouble the American people, but the retail price.

It is also urged that the tariff on meats will increase the cost of living. No one knows yet just what rates will be placed on meats, but it is not likely that they will be substantially higher than the present rates imposed by the emergency tariff bill. Yet it can easily be proven that the emergency tariff did not raise the price of meats to the consumer. In fact, a Democratic Senator has recently put in the RECORD (June 27, p. 9496) a table showing that wholesale beef prices decreased after the levying of the emergency tariff was adopted, and therefore, he asserted, the farmer got no benefit from the tariff and was being fooled thereby. Yet a few minutes before he had been arguing that the prices had in fact been raised and the American people compelled to pay an increased price for their beef. Of course, both of these statements could not be true, and the fact is that neither one of them is true.

The American farmer got the benefit of the American market although the prices were not advanced but lowered. The real fact is that wholesale prices of beef were about the same in 1921 as they were under the Payne bill, but the retail price was almost doubled. High wages, high rents, and high expenses, the retailer says, account for it, but it is certainly not the tariff. On the other hand, if the American farmer is driven out of business—and the long list of abandoned farms was enormously increased last year—what will be the effect on the prices of agricultural products? We have recently had an example. Fresh lamb is high and has been so all through this year. Why? Because we permitted the accumulations of frozen mutton in Australia and the great accumulations of wool from all over the world to be dumped on our market until American wool was not salable at any price, and carload after carload of sheep sold in Chicago for less than the freight without any benefit to the consumer. Utterly discouraged, and in many cases also, utterly ruined, the flock growers sold their flocks, or the flocks were sold for them at forced sale, and got out of the business. Naturally lambs are scarce and will be until an opportunity is afforded under a Republican tariff to restore normal conditions. Does anyone believe that it would lower prices to the consumer to drive out of business the American cattle grower and the American sheep grower, giving the control of the prices to the Packers Trust which controls the great foreign slaughtering establishments of South America? Is it not plain, on the other hand, with reference to food and farm products as to other articles, that the American public will buy them at a lower price if the American farmer is permitted to supply the American market and induced to stay on the farm instead of deserting it for the city. The American farmer can go into no trust. He can not fix the price of his products, for it is fixed by the demand for it and the willingness of the purchaser to buy it. He is the great consumer and purchaser of the articles produced in our great manufacturing centers, and when he fails the country as a whole must fail.

But, it is said, if the tariff has not in fact raised the prices what benefit is it to the farmer? The answer is easy. It gives to the farmer the American market, the greatest and best market in the world, and insures an outlet for his products at a price which can not be unreasonable and yet gives him an opportunity to live, and whatever rise there has been in some farm products has not been reflected in retail prices.

Recently in the Senate a long list of imported articles was exhibited which it was shown that the importer had sold at profits varying from 200 per cent to 1,500 per cent. It is said that these cases are exceptions, and perhaps this is true, although they were numerous; but they do show this, that the consumer gets no benefit from a reduction of a tariff which puts the American producer out of the market and the importer never gives the consumer the benefit of the reduced price of the article which he has purchased abroad, but simply sells it enough lower than the American price to drive the American producer out of business, and that this reduction is not enough to affect the retail price. The reductions in the tariff made by the Underwood bill have simply brought enormous fortunes to the importers with no appreciable benefit to the American consumer. The transfer of the market to the American producer will build up all lines of trade in this country and bring us back to a true Republican prosperity such as we have never had in times of peace under a Democratic tariff.

Mr. Speaker, every possible obstacle has been placed in the way of the enactment of the pending tariff bill. The Democratic leaders do not want an opportunity to be given before election for the bill to show its beneficent effects. In the general prosperity which has always resulted from the operation of a Republican protective tariff bill prices of some articles are likely to rise. That goes with prosperity. But they will not rise so much as wages will rise and employment increase. Thus the farmer and the wage earner alike will be enabled to have a higher and not a lower scale of living.

Mr. Speaker, at the time the McKinley bill was enacted the same attack was made upon it that is now being made on the pending bill. The false cry was raised that it would immensely increase the cost of living. McKinley was defeated for Congress, but the actual workings of the bill showed the fallacy of the predictions and made McKinley President. If the American people view the pending bill in the light of experience and not according to the theories and denunciations of Democratic leaders, they will not be frightened by the bogy of high prices that is now being set up. They will realize that it is merely a scarecrow constructed for political purposes, and that the real truth is that Republican tariffs have always brought American prosperity.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 62: On page 5, line 8, after the figures insert a semicolon and this language: "additional storage facilities, $80,000; in all, $95,000."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 64: Page 52, after the figures in line 11, insert: "for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, $6,537,000; for new construction, buildings and improvements at air stations, $300,000."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan moves to recede from the disagreement to Senate amendment No. 64 and concur with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment,

$6,537,000; for new construction, buildings and improvements at air stations, at a total cost not to exceed $280,000, as follows: Anacostia, D. C., $50,000; Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, $150,000; Quantico, Va., $80,000."

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objections to this amendment, but I desire to tell this House what I have helped to do for the farmers of the United States since I have been a Member of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, during the time I have been a Member of the House of Representatives the following are some of the farm measures that I have advocated and assisted in passing through Congress:

1. Aided in establishing the Federal farm loan system, under which loans are made directly to farmers at low rates of interest.

2. Legislation authorizing the establishment of the great power plants and war development at Muscle Shoals, with a view of manufacturing nitrates for cheaper fertilizers to the farmers in times of peace. I am now endeavoring to get this plant turned over to Henry Ford in order that he may manufacture cheap fertilizer for the farmers. I am a member of the Military Affairs Committee which has held the hearings on Henry Ford's proposal; and I have been an earnest advocate for the Government's acceptance of Ford's offer.

3. To investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice.

4. For carrying out the provisions of the act authorizing the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry.

5. To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to collect and disseminate information concerning live stock, dairy, and other animal products.

6. Authorizing the preparation and distribution of reports on animal industry.

7. Providing for experimentation and investigation in the dairy industry.

8. For inspection as to contagious diseases of animals and their prevention, quarantine when necessary, etc.

9. For investigating animal tuberculosis and its prevention.

10. For investigation and experimentation in animal breeding, husbandry, feeding, etc.; including cooperation with State agricultural experiment stations.

11. Providing for the development of live-stock production in the cotton districts of the United States.

12. For collecting and distributing information as to supply, demand, commercial disposition, quality, and market prices of dairy and poultry products.

13. Providing for investigating the preparation for marketing, handling, grading, packing, pressing, drying, storing, transportation, and preservation of poultry and eggs.

14. Authorizing bulletins on hogs and cattle raising in the South.

15. For investigation of the disease of hog cholera and its control and eradication.

16. For enforcement of the provisions of the meat inspection act.

17. Authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to secure information as to the number of different classes and grades of marketable live stock and other such information as would prove of value to farmers and live-stock men.

18. For the investigation of plant diseases.

19. For investigation of insects affecting fruits, orchards, vineyards, and nuts; publication of bulletins as to how to rid trees and orchards of same.

20. For collecting and distributing information concerning the market prices and commercial movements of fruits and vegetables.

21. For investigation of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, and sugar cane.

22. Similar legislation in connection with such products as potatoes, sugar, beets, cabbage, onions, tomatoes, peas, etc.

23. For the investigation and improvement of cereals and methods of cereal production and study of cereal diseases.

24. To direct the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the United States grain standards act.

25. For the investigation with view to improvement of grades of alfalfa, clover, and other forage crops.

26. To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the relative utility and economy of agricultural products for food, clothing, and other uses in the home, with special suggestions of plans and methods for the more effective utilization of such products for these purposes.

27. For removing the tariff tax on bagging and ties and agricultural implements; also such other legislation as would lighten the costs of implements used by the farmers.

28. Aided in drafting and also introduced a bill to establish the Bureau of Markets as it now is, giving valuable assistance and information to both producer and consumer. This bureau has rendered invaluable service to the farmers of the country.

29. Investigation and reporting on the utilization of water for farm irrigation.

30. To carry into effect provisions of the act to establish experimental stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States. Such stations have done excellent work, especially the experimental station in Mississippi.

31. Authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to enforce the provisions of the act providing for cooperative extension work between the agricultural colleges of the several States. This work has also meant much to the farmers of the various States.

32. Authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make studies among the farmers of the United States in the matter of rural credits and other forms of cooperation in the various communities and to diffuse among the people useful information growing out of these studies.

33. For exploration and investigation to determine possible sources of supplies of potash, nitrates, and other natural fertilizers.

34. For investigating, demonstrating, and promoting the use of standards of the different grades, qualities, and conditions of cotton and for investigating the ginning, grading, stapling, baling, marketing, compressing, and tare of cotton.

35. For farmers' cooperative demonstration and demonstration of the best methods of meeting the ravages of the cotton boll weevil; for publication of pamphlets instructing farmers as to best methods of destroying the boll weevil.

36. For the Federal farm loan bank system and long-time credits.

37. Aided in passing the Smith-Lever agricultural extension act.

38. Aided in providing for the publication and free distribution of farmers' bulletins.

39. Advocated and aided in passing the cooperative farm marketing act.

40. Aided in passing the extension of the War Finance Corporation act.

41. Favored legislation providing that surplus Army trucks and other machinery left over after the war should be placed in the hands of the State and county authorities for the purposes of building roads, thereby aiding the farmers in expediting shipments.

42. Aided in passing the bill building ships by which farmers' products can be shipped in American boats all over the world.

43. Aided in putting through the amendment on the Federal road act by which farm-to-market roads were provided.

44. Aided legislation authorizing rural free delivery.

45. Aided in extending and developing the parcel post law, which has been a big boom to the farmers in the interior of the country in making small shipments.

46. Favored all legislation tending to promote the general welfare of the farmers of the country.

47. Advocated all laws to help the farmer in the profitable disposition of his products.

48. Have fought for lower railroad freight rates in order that the farmers may realize a reasonable sum on their sales.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 65:
Page 52, line 14, strike out "$7,866,950," and insert "$14,703,950."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 65 and concur therein with the following amendment:
In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$14,683,950."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 86: Page 66, line 7, after the word "destroyers," insert "together with the sum of $10,000,000, which is hereby appropriated, and in addition thereto such amount, not exceeding $8,000,000, as may be realized by the Navy Department, by application upon the obligations of the Navy Department for 'Increase of the Navy' from any assignment, such assignment being hereby authorized, by the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation to the Navy Department of any obligation or debt or of any note or other securities held as security therefor owing to the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation or to the United States by any contractor or subcontractor to whom the Navy Department may be obligated on account of supplies furnished or work done on account of 'Increase of the Navy.'"

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 86 and concur therein with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "together with the sum of $7,500,000, which is hereby appropriated, and in addition thereto such amount, not exceeding $8,000,000, as may be realized at face value with accrued interest by the Navy Department, for application upon the obligations of the Navy Department for 'Increase of the Navy' from any assignment, such assignment being hereby authorized, by the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation to the Navy Department of any obligation or debt or of any note or other securities held as security therefor owing to the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation or to the United States by any contractor to whom or to a subsidiary of whom the Navy Department may be obligated on account of supplies furnished or work done on account of 'Increase of the Navy.'"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to recede and concur with an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the effect of the Senate amendment?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The purpose of this amendment is twofold: First, it appropriates an additional $7,500,000 for new construction outright; and, second, it transfers to the Navy Department obligations owing to the Shipping Board by one of the corporations doing business with the Navy. This was done for the purpose of making it possible for this corporation to carry on the Navy contracts without embarrassment and at the same time gradually wipe out its obligations to the Shipping Board; that if the Shipping Board had proceeded to collect this indebtedness in full and at once the chances are that work which that corporation is doing for the Navy could not have been completed. It would have embarrassed the Navy Department in the completion of its contracts and possibly have destroyed the corporation. For that reason these obligations owing the Shipping Board are by this amendment transferred to the Navy Department and can be handled without loss to the Government, on the one hand, and without collecting them so rapidly on the other that the corporation would fail and be unable to complete its naval contracts.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I caught the reading of the suggested amendment of the gentleman, it included the idea of accrued interest, whereas the Senate amendment does not refer to any accrued interest.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The Senate amendment did not provide that these obligations transferred from the Shipping Board to the Navy Department should be realized upon at full face value, and the amendment referred to was included so that there would be no discounting of these obligations, and also that any accrued interest on these notes or obligations would have to be paid also.

Mr. STAFFORD. So the Government is going to receive from this private corporation the full face value of their claims with accrued interest?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. And have the Navy get the benefit of the work under construction in those private yards?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield three minutes to me?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will. I yield the gentleman from South Carolina three minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will try to explain the situation. The Submarine Boat Co. owed the Shipping Board $8,000,000. The Submarine Co. offered to pay $5,000,000 to the Shipping Board in settlement of the claim. The Navy Department and the Shipping Board have made some arrangement between them which was reflected in this Senate amendment, whereby the Shipping Board transferred to the Navy Department the notes of the Submarine Boat Co. The Submarine Boat Co. is allied with the Electric Boat Co. Ninety-eight per cent of the stock of the Submarine Boat Co. is owned by the Electric Boat Co. The Electric Boat Co. is now constructing ships for the Navy, and the Navy will owe them $11,000,000. The Navy is going to take these notes of the Shipping Board and set them off against the account due by the Navy Department to the Electric Boat Co. The result of it is that notes representing $8,000,000 that are owned by the Shipping Board are transferred to the Navy Department and the Shipping Board gets nothing. The Shipping Board is going to come to Congress and is going to say, "Congress took away from us claims amounting to $8,000,000 upon which we relied for the transaction of our business, and must therefore give us $8,000,000 in a deficiency bill." I think they will have a very good claim upon us, and that will certainly happen. Instead of a doubtful claim, however, they will get $8,000,000 cash.

Mr. BUTLER. Is not that running around a circle and following your tail? [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is about as good an instance of it as I ever knew of. The only thing on earth that induced me to agree to it in the conference report was the fact that they said to us that they were afraid they can not collect more than $5,000,000 unless they do transfer it to the Navy, and they hope the Navy can collect $8,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that we take from the Public Treasury so many million dollars and turn them over to the Shipping Board for these notes?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, no. The Shipping Board simply transfers the notes. But I state that hereafter the Shipping Board will come in and ask for an $8,000,000 deficit, if I am anything of a prophet.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The Navy Department probably owes this concern $11,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Which concern?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I had better not mention the name.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Electric Boat Co.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not know which is the subsidiary company, but the Navy owes that company some $11,000,000. That company, or the parent of it, owes the Shipping Board $8,000,000. Now the notes are transferred from the Shipping Board to the Navy, and will be used as a set-off to what the Navy owes the company.

Mr. BUTLER. Is my friend satisfied that it will not cost the Government anything?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If the Shipping Board could collect this $8,000,000 and use it for its own purposes I think it would be better to keep the whole account in the Shipping Board and pay this contractor what is due for the naval ships. But the trouble is that two agencies of the Government are doing business with this corporation. If one of these agencies proceeds to collect it probably destroys the company, so that the contract with the other agency of the Government could not be carried out. We have these vessels in various stages of construction. If the Shipping Board should collect the $8,000,000 in claims against the company it would break the company and we would have to go on and take charge of the concern and finish up the ships ourselves, and that would involve no end of trouble and expense. On the other hand, if the accounts owing the Shipping Board are transferred to the Navy and we proceed to set off from time to time as much as this corporation can stand, in the end probably the Government will get the $8,000,000 that the submarine company owes the Shipping Board, and it will not cost us any more to finish the ships.

Mr. BUTLER. It will not require any more appropriation?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; there is no appropriation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr CHINDBLOM. Will the chairman of the committee agree as to the effect of the remarks of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] that as a matter of fact the Shipping Board gets no quid pro quo for its $8,000,000 at this time?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; it does not get a thing. That is one reason why I have been a little suspicious about the transaction. [Laughter.] But after careful consideration I am satisfied that it is a good thing to do.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. In order that we may be prepared, however, to refuse a request of the Shipping Board, it is proper to say that the committee had no information that $5,000,000 was in fact offered to the Shipping Board. It was hearsay, and even if $5,000,000 was in fact offered to the Shipping Board, it was probably induced by reason of this proposed transfer. The companies owing it, recognizing that there might be more collected out of them if this transfer were made, offered to make a compromise by offering the $5,000,000. I mention that in order that you may understand that these papers in the hands of the Shipping Board are probably worth nothing in the absence of power on the part of the Navy to collect.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We put into this amendment the proviso that the Navy could not shave the notes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 91: Page 61, after line 18, insert: "That any officer of the Navy who has served four years as chief of a bureau in the Navy Department and shall be retired subsequent to the completion of such period of service for physical disability due to wounds inflicted by the enemy while in the performance of his duty shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances now authorized by law for the retirement of a chief of bureau."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House recede and concur with an amendment. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 91 and agree to the same with the following amendment: In line 1 of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert, after the word "has," the word "heretofore."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps I had better make a short explanation of this amendment, and the best explanation I think that can be made is a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, which gives the reason for it. I read:

I have the honor to submit for the consideration of your committee, with the hope that it may be included as a provision of the pending naval appropriation bill, the following draft of legislation.

* * * * * * *

This provision is intended to authorize the retirement in the next higher grade of Capt. Hutch I. Cone, who served as Engineer in Chief with the rank of rear admiral for a period of four years from May 18, 1909, to May 17, 1913, inclusive.

The reason for making this recommendation is because of the fact that Captain Cone is suffering from physical disability due to wounds inflicted by the enemy in the late war, and to permit his retirement as Engineer in Chief would give him only such privileges as are now enjoyed by the same class of officers in the Army pursuant to the provisions of the national defense act as amended June 4, 1920, although the privilege is extended to the Army officers regardless of the cause of their retirement. The facts in the case, briefly stated, are: On October 10, 1918, at 9.30 a. m., the Irish mail ship Leinster was sunk by torpedo fire from a German submarine in the Irish Sea about 15 miles from Kingstown. Captain Cone was on the boat deck cutting away the lashings on the ship's life rafts when the second torpedo exploded in the hull directly underneath him. He was rescued after being in the water about two hours, taken to Dublin Castle Hospital suffering from shock and general bruising and multiple compound fracture of right tibia, simple fracture of right and left fibulas, synovitis and hemorrhagic effusions about right knee joint. In hospitals under treatment until January 23, 1919.

The record of Captain Cone since his entry into the service September 5, 1890, has been exceptional and meritorious, and for service rendered during the World War as commander of the United States Naval Aviation Forces on foreign service in France he was awarded decorations by the United States, French, British, and Italian Governments.

This officer was at the head of one of the bureaus here prior to the war. Because of his physical injuries, of course, he can not be promoted, and this makes it possible to give him the rank of rear admiral.

Mr. BUTLER. Why do you change words?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. "Heretofore" so as not to include anybody else.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a meritorious case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 92: Page 68, line 23, after the word "otherwise," insert: "Provided, That all orders or contracts for work or material, under authorization of law heretofore or hereafter placed with Government-owned establishments, shall be considered as obligations in the same manner as provided for similar orders or contracts placed with private contractors, and appropriations for such work or material shall remain available for payment therefor as in the case of orders or contracts placed with private contractors."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; I yield five minutes to my colleague from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. CRAMTON. On the question of the development of Muscle Shoals.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

I present for the consideration of Congress the following resolutions adopted by the Michigan State Farm Bureau June 13, 1922:

Whereas the Michigan State Farm Bureau believes that the completion and operation of the Muscle Shoals power and nitrates projects are of utmost importance to the Nation and will be of great economic benefit to consumers of fertilizer and electric power as well as an important asset to the Government in time of war; and

Whereas the Government shows no inclination to complete the project itself and has had a competent proposal to complete this important project, namely, the Ford Muscle Shoals offer; and

Whereas the Ford offer has been in the hands of the Government for one year and has been constantly delayed by obstacles raised by what the farmers now consider to be disgruntled special interests, such delays continuing even though the public, particularly in Michigan, has shown itself to be in sympathy with the Ford proposal: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Michigan State Farm Bureau board of directors, meeting at Lansing, June 13, in behalf of 97,000 Michigan Farm Bureau members, advise Michigan Senators and Congressmen that Michigan Farm Bureau members are strongly in favor of acceptance of the Ford proposal in full and urge them to vote in favor of its acceptance at this session of Congress; also that this resolution be addressed to each Michigan Member in Congress, urging his most earnest support for the Ford measure and assuring him of the support of the Michigan State Farm Bureau membership in that action.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The proposed amendment applies not only to the Navy Department but to all departments and establishments of the Government. I think the House would be interested in some explanation as to the reason for this legislation and what will be its ultimate effect.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, this proviso is inserted in the bill to accomplish the following purpose: The continuing appropriations of the Navy, such as for new construction or for public works, are available until expended, and of course they do not enter into this question at all; but the annual appropriations, if they are not obligated, revert to the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year. In the case of an order placed with a navy yard that is not regarded as a contract in the same light as an order placed with a private concern; so that along in the latter part of the year, in May, we will say, if the Navy Department wishes to place an order with a navy yard that work must be entirely completed within the fiscal year, otherwise the navy yard does not have the money available to complete the work. In the coming year and perhaps for years to come the navy yards must of necessity operate on a very limited amount of work, and in view of the circumstances we thought it would be only fair to remove this handicap so as to permit the navy yards to continue work during the last two or three months of the year, by taking work which could not be completed before July 1 and therefore would have to go to private concerns.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is this for work which is let upon competitive bidding?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; or any other kind.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But it does not have to be competitive bidding?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am not sure that the law requires it, but the navy yards, of course, make an estimate. That is as far as they can go. They estimate the cost of doing the work. The outside concerns make absolute bids, and then the navy yard estimate is considered against the outside bid.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the navy yard will not be any better fitted or qualified or empowered to make a binding contract than it now is. Is not that so?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is true.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So that a navy yard will make an estimate as to the cost of a piece of work against a private concern, and the estimate of the navy yard is adopted, and the navy yard will proceed with the work; and if they have a deficiency and can not finish the work for the money that has been appropriated, they will come back to Congress for an additional appropriation.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What the gentleman says is entirely correct; but I wanted to make it clear what we are seeking to accomplish here, namely, that during the last two or three months of the year a navy yard is not in as good a position to get work from the Government as an outside concern, and at a time when so many thousands of men are being discharged from the navy yards we felt that this might be only a fair thing to do.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But is not the effect of it that a navy yard toward the close of the year might make an estimate for a piece of work, take that work, and rely upon an appropriation for the next fiscal year to give it sufficient funds and sufficient authority to finish the work?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; they could not do that. They would not be safe in doing it, because at the end of the year their appropriations would end; and if Congress should withhold new appropriations, the work would be suspended in midair. This is to cure that situation. This is in the direct line of easing off a situation which we all recognize as existing in the navy yards of the country.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it the opinion of the gentleman, as chairman of the subcommittee, that the navy yards would be limited by the amount of the current appropriation?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, yes, indeed.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So that they could not make estimates and tentative contracts beyond the amount of money appropriated for the current year?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. McPHERSON. In other words, this provision is necessary in order to allow the navy yards to be considered at all——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan (interposing). During the latter part of the year.

Mr. McPHERSON. During the latter part of the year.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion to recede and concur.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 93: Page 69, after line 5, insert the following:

"That the naval appropriation act approved June 4, 1920, is hereby amended so that any chaplain in the Naval Reserve Force who was more than 50 years of age on the date of said act, and who now holds the confirmed rank of commander, may be transferred to and appointed in the same permanent grade and rank in the regular Navy, not in the line of promotion and not eligible for retirement: Provided, That any chaplain transferred to the regular Navy in accordance with this authorization shall be wholly retired without pay upon attaining the age of 64 years or becoming physically incapacitated for active duty: Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall operate to increase the number of chaplains with the rank of commander as now authorized by law."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is not this exactly the same paragraph that we passed in that little omnibus bill, which provides for two chaplains without retirement? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] will remember that he questioned me about it. This has passed through the House twice.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; this is the same provision upon which the House has acted before.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. I remember my friend said he hoped to live to see the time when this would be carried out, and I hope it will be.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Michigan whether there are any enforced retirements of officers and enlisted personnel by reason of this bill similar to the forced retirement of officers and enlisted men in the Army?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The bill provides for dropping from the service 339 reserve officers, and that is all.

Mr. McARTHUR. Out of how many?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is all there are.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the active list of the Navy you have not forced the retirement of any officers or enlisted men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is true; but the situation is quite different as between the Army and the Navy. I am not as well informed about the Army as the gentleman from Wisconsin; but my understanding is that the Army expanded its officer personnel all that it was permitted to do under the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. It did not go to the full limit; but it went pretty far.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The Navy Department never did that. Under existing law the Navy Department could have 5,500 regular officers of the line and about 2,200 officers of the staff. They have at the present time only 4,100 officers of the line. So that they were under their authorization when this bill was brought into the House by the Appropriations Committee about 1,400 officers of the line.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, it is the rule of the Navy to have 4 per cent of the enlisted personnel——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Four per cent of the authorized strength, and the authorized strength has never been changed from 137,500. You figure 4 per cent of 137,500 and that will give you the number it is authorized to have in the line of the Navy, or about 5,500.

Mr. STAFFORD. There has been no movement as far as the Navy is concerned to reduce the officer personnel so far as the number of men coming into the officer personnel from the Naval Academy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No restrictions from that quarter. But we had about 1,500 reserve officers in the Navy a year ago. Perhaps there were more, but through legislation from the committee of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] that number was reduced until the reserve officers were entirely eliminated except 339, leaving only about 4,100 officers of the line.

Mr. STAFFORD. So far as the legislation of this Congress is concerned, as far as it applies to the Navy, there is no restriction whatever on the number of officers that may go up to the 4 per cent.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that the policy, that we are going to add to the forces as they graduate, whereas in the Army we are reducing the personnel and cutting down the expenditures? We are making an effort to economize in one branch of the service and no effort in the other.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The House agreed to commission but 200 from the Naval Academy this year, but before the legislation could be enacted into law the graduating class had gone out and were commissioned, and that is water over the dam. With a Navy of 86,000 men we will have but about 6,000 commissioned officers, which is a much better showing than can be made for the Army with 125,000 men.

Mr. BUTLER. There will be more than that; there will be over 7,000. I want to say that the language which you have agreed to will be hereafter known as the authorized strength of the Navy of 86,000. How they are going to get any more officers I do not understand.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If that is true, then my answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin would not be right. If 86,000 is interpreted to be the authorized strength, my answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin is incorrect.

Mr. BUTLER. I think there will be an effort to hold that the authorized strength of the Navy is 86,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. As far as the future is concerned, there can be no additions until that number is reduced.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The only way to get them into the Navy is from the Naval Academy.

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. McARTHUR. For the benefit of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I want to say that the Naval Affairs Committee has reported a bill reducing the number of midshipmen that a Member of Congress appoints from five to two. If that bill passes, as I assume it will——

Mr. BUTLER. It will never pass.

Mr. McARTHUR. Also, there is a bill making the enlisted strength 86,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has any effort been made to get a rule to make that bill in order?

Mr. BUTLER. I will answer that question, yes; but the heavy foot has been put on the neck of the bill. We gain nothing but a change in the style of deadly weapons.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that is the much vaunted boast of economy of this Congress about which we have heard so much.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman need not scold me; he should go to the other end of the Avenue.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will yield.

Mr. OLIVER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that after the passage of this bill the authorized strength of the Navy will be 86,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I did not say that; that was not my understanding, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] puts that interpretation on it.

Mr. BUTLER. The courts of the United States will have to settle that.

Mr. OLIVER. There is a bill pending that seeks to do that, but this bill does not change the existing law.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think it is the idea of Mr. BUTLER that when 86,000 men only are provided for, as is the case in the pending bill, that such a provision would be construed by the legal department as a change of authorization from 137,000 to 86,000 men. This would have the effect of reducing the authorized officer personnel from 5,500 officers of the line to 3,440, with corresponding reductions in the staff. I very much doubt the likelihood of such a construction.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, there is another legal department, I would say to my friend from Alabama.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that that is even the purpose of the legislation.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not an astute lawyer, but I can read quite well, and I am very much mistaken if that is not a limitation on the number. You can not employ more than that, and therefore that is the authorized strength.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it was certainly not the intention nor the purpose of the committee nor of Congress to fix 86,000 as the number on which the officer personnel would be determined, and that will have to be done, if done at all, by positive legislation such as I understand the gentleman's committee has reported.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; we have reported it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. I do not think this proceeding on the conference report ought to pass without expressing what I know is in the minds of almost all if not all of the membership of the House. Certainly we are under a very great debt of obligation to this committee in the first place for the passage of the House bill, and again for the splendid manner in which they have managed the conference so that the conference report only confirms in the main the action taken by the House in the drafting of the bill. [Applause.] I think it is perhaps not to be wondered at when we consider the character of the gentlemen who constitute this committee and the managers on the part of the House. The mention of the names of these gentlemen to the membership alone will carry not only weight but consideration and honor. There is Mr. KELLEY, of Michigan, the chairman. [Applause.] I think there has never been a more splendid fight on the floor of the House than was led by the chairman of this committee on the passage of the House bill. It was contested by vigorous and able Members of the House, and yet when the bill left us I am quite sure that it came more nearly expressing the desire and purpose of the people of the United States than any bill ever reported by any naval committee that ever had to do with the transactions under consideration. [Applause.] We should realize, and I know that the Members realize, that it is something more than a mere transaction when we consider the action of this administration and the membership of the House and the Senate, without regard to party, in the earnest endeavor to secure a fair and reasonable limitation upon the armaments of the world; and in that regard the action of this committee has been in exact accordance with the purposes of the people of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, let me read the names of the other members of this committee of conference, all of them eminent and entitled to high honor and praise for their work. There is Mr. FRENCH, of Idaho, whose speech on the House bill was one of the best delivered. [Applause.] Then there is Mr. MADDEN, of Illinois [applause], who almost daily lays this House under obligation to him for his management of the important affairs committed to him. There is Mr. BYRNES, of South Carolina [applause], who not only does honor to the minority but also to the House itself. Then there is Mr. OLIVER, of Alabama. [Applause.] I think him the peer of any man who has been on the Naval Committee of the House in knowledge and application and devotion to its work.

So I desire only to express what I believe to be the feeling of obligation that this House owes to these gentlemen for the work they have done not only for the House but for the country. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 12073) to provide additional compensation for certain civilian employees of the Government of the United States and of the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, with Senate amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 12073, with Senate amendments thereto. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the Senate amendments.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has added seven amendments to the $240 additional compensation bill, as follows:

The amount for the Senate has been increased by $4,080, to include 17 employees, paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and not included in the original estimate of cost for 1923.

Eight hundred and ninety-four thousand dollars has been included for the national home for disabled soldiers. This item was not included in the House bill, due to a misunderstanding between the committee and the War Department. The committee assumed that the War Department figures cared for the homes and the War Department assumed that the Soldiers' Homes Board had submitted a separate estimate for their employees.

The Navy Department amount is increased from $444,720 to $458,640, due to an error by the Navy Department in submitting its original estimate to the House committee. The estimate of the Navy Department for those who are entitled to the bonus as originally submitted was corrected twice before the House committee acted upon it, and the corrections submitted to the House have been corrected twice since it left the House and went to the Senate, so that the Navy Department has had five different proposals before the House to fix the figures correctly.

The amount for the Naval Establishment is increased from $42,000 to $78,480, due to an error by the Navy Department in submitting its original estimates to the House committee.

The amount for the Post Office Department is reduced from $359,280 to $352,800, due to error of the Post Office Department in including employees added by the Senate to the 1923 post office bill and eliminated in conference. The sum for the Post Office Department is made payable from the postal revenues instead of from the General Treasury.

On account of employees engaged upon work for the Treasury Department in connection with the redemption of war-savings securities, $12,000 is added for the Post Office Department, payable from the General Treasury.

The total of the House bill is increased on account of these additions by $954,000, so that that makes the total of the bill $37,341,012 as against $36,287,012 as the bill passed the House. All of these figures are correct. We have tabulated them, checked them off, and find that the employees to which they refer are entitled to the bonus.

I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Are there any employees of the House paid out of the contingent fund of the House who are in a similar position to those now receiving a bonus out of the contingent fund of the Senate?

Mr. MADDEN. They have all been provided for. These were additional employees of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendments were concurred in.

PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF SUPREME COURT REPORTS.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11450, with Senate amendments, to disagree to the Senate amendment No. 11, and concur in all the other amendments except No. 7, and to concur in that with an amendment striking out the figure "$8,500" and substituting for it "$8,000."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up from the Speaker's table the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11450) to provide for the printing and distribution of the Supreme Court Reports and amending sections 225, 226, 227, and 228 of the Judicial Code.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

Amendment No. 1: Page 1, line 7, after "volumes," insert "as."
Amendment No. 2: Page 8, strike out "he shall" and insert "; and when so directed to."
Amendment No. 3: Page 1, line 9, strike out "preliminary" and insert "advance."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman favor the House with some general explanation of what is covered by these Senate amendments in which he is asking the House to concur?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The amendments may be grouped into three different legislative propositions. All except amendments Nos. 7 and 11 simply eliminate from the bill provisions authorizing the reporter to let a contract for the printing of the Supreme Court Reports to parties outside of the Government Printing Office. If these amendments are agreed to the Supreme Court Reports will have to be printed by the Government Printing Office. Amendment No. 7 fixes the salary of the reporter at $8,500 per annum. I am asking that that amendment may be concurred in with an amendment fixing the salary at $8,000 instead of $7,500, as we had it in the House bill, thus offering the Senate a compromise proposition.

Senate amendment No. 11 provides that the salary of the reporter and the expense of his office, amounting to something like $12,000, shall be all charged against the books when they are sold. We have been printing under contracts something like 3,000 of each volume, or about 9,000 for the three volumes printed each year, and I figure that the overhead charge would amount to something like $1.25 a volume. That would be in addition to the cost and expense of printing the volume. It seems to me that is too much; we might not be able to sell the volumes if that charge is made. In the Judicial Code there is a provision that the reports shall be sold at $1.75 a volume. It would not be possible to sell volumes at any such price in the future as they have been sold under the old law if the entire salary and expenses of the reporter is charged against the reports. So I ask that the Senate amendment be disagreed to. This would leave the House provision in, which provides that one-half of this amount shall be charged against the reports.

Mr. DOMINICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. DOMINICK. As I understand, the Senate bill has struck out entirely the provision for the letting of a contract for the publishing of the report to any private concern?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It does.

Mr. DOMINICK. So consequently it is not necessary to retain the provision we had in there prohibiting the reporter from receiving any outside bids?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No.

Mr. DOMINICK. In addition to his salary.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He can receive no additional compensation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any inhibition on the publication of advance sheets of the decisions of the Supreme Court, or any of the inferior courts, being printed by private printing establishments, such as the West Publishing Co. and the Lawyers' Cooperative Co.?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is nothing of that kind in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Each private establishment which has heretofore published Supreme Court reports can continue to publish them?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does the gentleman think the salary fixed in the proposed amendment there is in keeping with governmental salaries as they are generally fixed here in Washington? Is not the salary fixed somewhat over and above that fixed for other positions of similar or greater responsibility?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Well, I realize there is a wide difference of opinion as to what that salary should be. The Supreme Court fixed the salary of the clerk at $9,000. Now, it is my judgment that it takes a man of considerably greater ability to fill the position of a reporter than it does to fill the position of clerk, and I felt that in view of the situation that it would be better for us to try to compromise with the Senate, which fixed the salary at $8,500, and call it $8,000, which is splitting the difference between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 4: Page 2, line 3, strike out all after "office" down to and including "thereof" in line 21.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 5: Page 3, line 2, strike out "furnishing estimates and."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 6: Page 3, strike out lines 4 to 8, inclusive.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 7: Page 3, line 11, strike out "$7,500" and insert "$8,500."

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. VOLSTEAD moves to concur in Senate amendment No. 7, with an amendment striking out "$8,500," inserted by the Senate, and insert in lieu thereof "$8,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 8:
Page 3, line 14, strike out all after "law" down to and including "Act," in line 17.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. I find that the House bill attempted to restrict the reporter from receiving any additional compensation for services performed other than in the preparation of the reports. What is the idea now in eliminating that?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He was paid under the contractor under those circumstances. He can be paid by no one now, because the work is to be done by the Government Printing Office.

Mr. STAFFORD. The reporter is to receive no other perquisites in addition to his salary?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. None other.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 9:
Page 5, line 21, strike out the word "General."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 10:
Page 7, line 25, after "installments," insert: "to be sold by the Public Printer."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 11: Page 8, line 2, strike out all after "of," down to and including "one-half," in line 4, and insert "Production, including in such cost."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to disagree in Senate amendment No. 11.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 12: Page 8, line 11, strike out the words "contract or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 13: Page 8, strike out line 23, and down to and including "porter" in line 24, and insert "miscellaneous receipts."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

LEAVE TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON JUDGES' BILL.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I would like very much to get the unanimous consent of the House to be permitted to file a conference report on the judges' bill at any time before midnight to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to file a conference report on the judges' bill at any time before midnight to-night. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object.

CONFERENCE REPORT—TEMPORARY BUILDINGS FOR RED CROSS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on Senate Joint Resolution 43.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C., having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

SIMEON D. FESS,
ROBERT LUCE,
FRANK PARK,
Managers on the part of the House.
BERT M. FERNALD,

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C., submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

The amendments of the House provide that the preamble be stricken out and in lieu of the Senate provision that the buildings shall be removed within such time as may hereafter be provided by Congress; provided that the buildings shall be removed not later than December 31, 1924.

SIMEON D. FESS.
ROBERT LUCE.
FRANK PARK.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross in Washington were constructed in 1917, with the privilege of continuing the occupancy of them by the Red Cross for three years. That time has elapsed, but the work of the Red Cross is going on, and they can not abandon the buildings, and yet to continue the use of them without authority would not be in accordance with law. Therefore the Senate joint resolution made it an indefinite occupation, but we limited it by our amendment to December 31 of this coming year. The Senate has agreed to our amendment. Consequently the Senate has receded from its disagreement and there is no point of difference.

I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9527) to amend section 5136, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to corporate powers of associations, so as to provide succession thereof until dissolved and to apply said section as so amended to all national banking associations.

AMENDMENT TO WAR RISK INSURANCE ACT.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

House Resolution 384 (Rept. No. 1150).

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 8062) entitled "A bill amending subdivision (5) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act." After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided between those for and against the bill, it shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of such consideration the committee shall report the bill back to the House and the previous question shall be considered ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this rule, as stated, makes in order the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 8062) to amend section 302 of the war risk insurance act. Its main purpose is to allow the attendants of totally disabled persons $50 a month instead of $20, as carried in the present act. The bill has the unanimous support of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and is unanimously reported from the Committee on Rules, and I believe it will receive the unanimous support of the Members of the House. It is in accordance with the policy that the House adopted from the very first—that we should do what we could to relieve the sufferings of and to aid and assist the seriously disabled soldiers. I trust the rule, as well as the legislation, will have the unanimous support of the House.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I notice that provision is made for an hour of general debate, one-half to be controlled by those for the bill and one-half by those against. The gentleman stated there was no opposition.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the rule so as to have the time entirely controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW], the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, there have been some requests for time over here, but we are quite willing to leave the distribution of the time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW].

Mr. SNELL. It is understood that he will yield time to the gentleman.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time in my years of service in the House that I have spoken for a rule, and I appreciate the kindness of my distinguished friend from New York in giving me this opportunity. On June 10, 1921, I made some remarks in the House on the subject matter of the bill. To-day I want to say a word about our Government, for which these young men made such terrible sacrifices in the World War. If those upon whom rests the responsibility of government will be guided by their example, by their patriotism, and by their fidelity to this Government, even in the face of death, what they will suffer and endure as long as they live will not be in vain. I speak, not in a spirit of criticism, but because I believe that in these troublous times it is well to pause a moment now and then and express our views upon our Government.

This is essentially a Government of parties, not of men. Great and necessary reforms can be instituted and carried to completion only through party solidarity. The formation of "blocs," each insisting that a public official shall comply with its demands as the price of its political support, is, in my judgment, one of the gravest menaces facing the country to-day, and if persisted in and carried to a logical conclusion, will mean the destruction of our form of government.

The public has the right to say to a public servant:

First. You must not violate your oath of office.

Second. You must serve no interest except the public interest.

I stand unreservedly for those two fundamental propositions. I would emulate, so far as lies within my power, the full measure of devotion which these totally disabled heroes, on the threshold of lives full of promise, gave to their country.

I am an American, through and through, who makes no distinction between American born and American naturalized. While we are the melting pot of the world, we have the best Government on earth, a Government that affords ample protection to life and property, a Government that guarantees to all absolute equality before the law, regardless of race, color, or creed. This is our Government, not a democracy, but a Republic, a representative form of government worth fighting for and worth dying for. Let us never forget that "the men who make a nation great are the men who dare to die." I stand for the Republic—indivisible and indissoluble—first, last, and all the time. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield to me half a minute?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend in the RECORD my remarks on the conference report on the naval bill that passed the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks on the conference report on the naval bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution to its final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves the previous question on the resolution to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8062.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8062. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8062) amending subdivision (5) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8062, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8062) amending subdivision (5) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act.

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (5) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(5) If the director considers the disabled person is so helpless as to be in constant need of a nurse or attendant, such additional sum shall be paid, but not exceeding $50 per month, as the director may deem reasonable."

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "the director considers."

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, this bill presents a simple proposition. Under the existing law a disabled person of the late war who is so helpless as to be in constant need of a nurse or attendant is allowed $20 a month for such attendant. The purpose of this bill is to increase the amount from $20 to $50.

So far as I know, no one objects to the increase of this amount. Everybody is satisfied.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, in previous speeches I have discussed the tariff along general lines, indicating the vicious character of this class of legislation, and now, in a few words, I want to discuss the tax upon the average American consumer concealed in just one of the schedules of the monstrous measure now up for passage through the Senate of the United States.

The schedules on cotton goods are on an average 45 per cent higher than in the present tariff law, and in themselves place an unwarranted and outrageous burden on the American people, but tacked on to the cotton schedules I find the following apparently innocent language in paragraph 905A:

In addition to the duty or duties imposed upon cotton cloth, there shall be paid the following duties, namely: On all cotton cloth woven with eight or more harnesses, or with Jacquard motions, or with drop boxes, or with lappett or swivel attachments, 12 per cent ad valorem for cloths containing yarns the average number of which does not exceed number 80; exceeding number 80, 15 per cent ad valorem.

A careful investigation shows that the language quoted above from paragraph 905A would subject to the additional tax practically every yard of cotton cloth imported into this country; in other words, paragraph 905A is a deliberate attempt to conceal the additional tax on practically all cotton goods.

This paragraph, I find, is the handiwork of ex-United States Senator Lippett, of Rhode Island, now lobbying at the Capitol. I find, also, that Senator Lippett is general manager of the Manville Co., which has extensive plants in the State of Rhode Island.

Section 905A, called in the majority cloakroom a "joker," will be a terrible joke in the average American home if the tariff bill becomes a law. These are some of the things it will do:

On ginghams for aprons and workingmen's shirts—that is, the cheaper ginghams—the rates of duty are increased over the present law 161 per cent.

Cotton imitation flannel is used most generally for women's and children's wear. The present duty is 4 cents a yard; the duty will be 8 cents a yard.

Five to 6 cents a yard duty is now paid on jacquards waisting. The duty will be 13.78 cents a yard, an increase of 136 per cent. This goods is used for women's and children's wear.

On fancy flannelette there is now a duty of 5 cents a yard. The duty will be 200 per cent higher, or 15 cents a yard.

Dotted swisses will be doubled in price.

The duty on cotton handkerchiefs will be increased from 46 cents a dozen to $1.18 a dozen; 153 per cent higher.

Chambray, used for dresses, now pays 2 cents a yard duty, but will pay 4 cents a yard.

Fruit of the loom, used for men's shirts and all sorts of women's garments, would pay an increased duty of 96 per cent; that is, an increase from 3 cents a yard to 5.8 cents a yard.

Colored sateens, a substitute for silk, used, among other things, for women's underclothing and for linings, now pays 11 cents a yard duty. It will be 28 cents a yard, or 146 per cent more.

Fancy dress ginghams will pay 290 per cent more duty. They now pay 2.9 cents a yard and will pay 8.4 cents a yard.

I am going to add here that bleached nainsook, bed sheeting, and pillowcases pay increased duties under the tariff bill of 52 and 36 per cent, respectively, although they do not come under section 905A.

The tariff on laces, 50 per cent more than the present duties, will drive the more inexpensive one practically from the stores.

Cotton hose and half hose will probably be increased in price 50 per cent and the price of cotton gloves doubled. In other words, importations of cotton have always been only a fraction of domestic consumption; section 905A will create an absolute embargo and the cost of gingham, striped-cotton flannel, flannelette, dotted swisses, colored sateens, fruit of the loom, and almost every other kind and grade of cotton cloth can be doubled at retail prices if the tariff bill becomes a law.

Under the present tariff the records of the Department of Commerce show large profits to the cotton manufacturers on an inflated capitalization after paying top-heavy salaries to officers in order to avoid corporate income taxes, wages, costs of production, and income taxes, and no reason has been offered for an increase in the duties, except the selfish greed of a powerful class.

It is estimated that section 905A alone of the tariff, this cynical "joker" inserted at the suggestion of the lobbyist Lippett, will filch from the American people the colossal sum of $750,000,000 annually, an average of $37.50 from every family in the land, and as cotton goods are used by everyone, and as there are more poor people than any other class, the backs of the poor will be bowed under the greater part of this awful burden, and while the golden flood, wrung from the people, is poured into the laps of a handful of rich cotton manufacturers, I say to them that they are depriving the poor of the simplest necessities of life, and I say to them also that their wives and their daughters, when they cover themselves with their gowns of silk, have not been clothed by the worm alone, but their raiment has been spun from the bowels of babes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I have heard this Congress referred to as the "do-nothing Congress." I protest against that expression as flattery. A better term for this Congress is "the bunk Congress," the Congress which does nothing, and yet pretends to be doing a great deal.

There are many illustrations that I could point out to show that "the bunk Congress" has earned its name, but I will not take the time for that. We have a shining illustration of it in the bill now before the House. It is nothing but a concession to the demand of soldier politicians for legislation for political purposes—a concession made for political effect upon the soldier vote and as pure a piece of bunk as was ever put out in any body.

There are very few who can possibly receive any benefits from this measure. The payments which are now being made for nurse hire are of a very trifling aggregate and the number of beneficiaries are said to be only about 100. No hearings have been had on the bill, so that no one has any accurate information. But I know enough to be able to say that its benefits really amount to nothing. The increases which will be given will aggregate practically nothing. There can be no honest pretense that this legislation will reach the great mass of deserving soldiers or that it will reach the great need that disabled soldiers have for legislation.

The war risk act needs many amendments. It is made the instrumentality of gross inefficiency in administering the soldier relief given by a generous Congress. The law ought to be amended in many particulars. Yet our committee have given this subject no consideration. A multitude of amendments are pending before it. Not one of them has been considered. No hearings have been held upon any of them. We are to wind up this session of Congress with this little "spitball" thrown to deceive the disabled soldiers.

There are a multitude of bills pending for the amendment of the war risk act. Numbers of them have merit. They ought to be considered. The Veterans' Bureau is grossly inefficient. Our disabled soldiers are not being well cared for. They are not receiving what they are entitled to. Our committee ought to be devoting itself to seeing to it that they get what they are entitled to. Yet they are doing nothing, and this bill is merely an excuse which they offer for doing nothing.

We find this great committee groaning and rumbling with its many bills, and bringing out this little measure, probably the least important of them all. There ought to be some opportunity for a man who is denied justice by the Veterans' Bureau to take an appeal. There ought to be some board before which he may go and present his case. There should be some record made of the testimony that is offered and some finding of facts upon which he might present his case to the public. There ought to be some machinery whereby those who deal with these important rights of disabled soldiers should be made to go on record. Yet there is not anything of the kind.

We find that when an error is made in the Pension Office the claimant who is injured may take an appeal to the Secretary of the Interior. He may get a remedy from a wrong decision of the Pension Office. The final decision is printed and goes into the archives and is something that people may look to for instruction as to how to proceed. But in the great Veterans' Bureau, dealing with some 1,200,000 or 1,500,000 claims, they are adjudicated by some obscure and inefficient clerk, who rejects them arbitrarily or who renders a grossly unjust decision, and there is no appeal, there is no board which supervises his work, there is no record made, and only God himself knows what inspired or moved the clerk in making the decision.

We find that the grossest abuses to which disabled soldiers are subjected are in the medical ratings which they receive. You gentlemen who have had much experience with the bureau know that many men receive grossly inadequate ratings. It is a very common thing for an applicant to receive a rating of 10 to 20 per cent when really he is totally disabled and ought to have a total rating. Yet what is he going to do about it? There is not a thing that he can do about it except to "cuss the bureau" and blame a generous Government that is really trying to do its part.

A man files a claim for compensation. After long and tedious and unnecessary delay he is directed to appear before an examiner. He goes before that examiner. He is there probably referred to some other examiner. A great many of these examiners have a very small sense of their responsibility. They take a man in and make an examination or a mere pretense of examination, as the case may be—and I want to say to you that I believe in many cases the examination is a mere pretense—then a report is made to a district manager, and then later on the claimant is advised that his rating is 10 per cent. What did the examiner find? It is never disclosed to the claimant what the report was. Did the examiner find that he had tuberculosis, meningitis, a strained finger, or what did he find? The man does not know, and he has no way of finding out.

Gentlemen, it is absolutely incredible that we should have erected a system that makes it impossible for men to have their rights fairly passed on, and that they are never permitted to know what the finding was or what the report was based on, or anything else about it. We must have some changes in the law. We must insure by provisions of the law that these claims of disabled soldiers are justly and honestly decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW].

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have the profoundest respect for the honesty and fearlessness of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] who has just spoken, but I am compelled to say as a result of my experience in dealing with the Veterans' Bureau that I think the gentleman's criticisms are unjust. [Applause.] I do not pretend to say that there have not been many inequalities. I have run up against them many times in dealing with the bureau in behalf of my constituents, but I do say this, that in dealing with the Veterans' Bureau I have never failed to find absolute courtesy on the part of the head of every department, and they always reopen any case at my request and go to the bottom of the thing; and many times I have found that the very types of injustice to which the gentleman from Alabama refers have been straightened out to the delight of the officials who have done the work. Here in Washington we understand that Director Forbes is so tremendously busy that he can not see everybody and look after all individual cases, but his assistants all seem eager to please. I think, therefore, that instead of saying that the Veterans' Bureau is "grossly inefficient," it would be better and fairer to say that it is grossly overworked.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. Does the gentleman not think that there ought to be some remedy or provision for an appeal before a board when a soldier feels that he has been outrageously treated by the decision of the bureau?

Mr. UPSHAW. I do.

Mr. ALMON. That is one of the arguments that my colleague from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] is making.

Mr. UPSHAW. I agree with you thoroughly; but I have never failed to secure an appeal from the decision of the board itself. When I go to the office of the director here in Washington, the courteous reception given me is a positive benediction. I love especially to crown here that uncrowned Mother Queen who directs those who call at the director's office, Mother Busby. With two sons in the Army, this good woman has brought to her work a mother's heart and a mother's patience. It has been wonderfully refreshing to see how motherly and painstaking she has been with every case that I have carried there. I also find Mr. Sweet, the director's secretary, a very courteous and efficient man. I find Mr. Forbes, the director, busy of course, but always courteous and responsive; and as for the director in my home city, Atlanta, Col. M. Bryson, it is a charm and an inspiration to be in his presence. I simply felt constrained to rise in this presence and express my honest conviction that the Veterans' Bureau, laboring under its limitations of insufficient help, is doing magnificent work, and that they are anxious to do their "live level best" for the disabled soldier, as Congress shall grant them the privilege and furnish the equipment with which to work.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I certainly join with the gentleman from Georgia in giving my support to this generous bill in aid of the boys who fought in the Great War with Germany, but I want to ask my good friend if he does not feel that we would be doing more than justice if we extended this privilege so that it would take in the soldiers of the Spanish-American War and the veterans of the Civil War who suffer under like affliction?

Mr. UPSHAW. I think so. You will find me always on humanity's side of every piece of legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. As a matter of fact, does not the gentleman think that Congress has made a very serious mistake, in fact a costly mistake, by not utilizing the fine examining boards established under the Pension Bureau for the determination of all disabilities incurred during their service in the recent World War—examining boards composed of experienced physicians established practically in every county in the United States?

Mr. UPSHAW. My time is up; but I have already expressed my opinion on the general principles involved. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this is not a partisan matter. I am surprised to hear even one partisan matter interjected into it. The whole spirit of it is to take care of the disabled veterans irrespective of cost, and I feel sure that this very meritorious bill providing adequate care for disabled veterans in the matter of nurse attendance will pass.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with the gentleman from Alabama that the bill before us is of unimportance. I can not characterize it as a "spitball bill." This bill amends the provisions of the war risk insurance act and provides for an increased allowance for several hundred service men who are so badly disabled that they require an attendant. Such a bill, it occurs to me, is a bill that is important not only to the beneficiaries who served so well and so faithfully but to the country at large, that is ever solicitous for the care of its disabled heroes.

The Veterans' Bureau informed the committee that there are 195 ex-service men who are beneficiaries of the bureau and who are blind in both eyes. There are 94 other service men who have been pitifully disabled by the loss of both legs. There are 8 others who have lost both arms. There are some 30 or 40 others who have been so severely disabled in other ways as to be totally and permanently in need of constant care and attendance.

The original war risk insurance act provided a monthly compensation of $30 per month for the man who was totally disabled, and to the man who was totally disabled and so incipacitated by reason thereof that he was in constant need of a nurse or attendant an additional sum of $20 per month was allowed.

The Sixty-sixth Congress, of which I was a Member, amended the compensation provisions of the act so as to allow the totally disabled man $80 per month. No change was made in the allowance for an attendant.

The bill before us amends the provision for an attendant so as to permit the payment of $50 per month under regulations and rules to be prescribed by the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. Obviously any man in the condition of these men whom I have described is in the need of an attendant. Clearly $50 per month comes nearer meeting what the service men would have to pay for an attendant. It is a pleasure to join with my colleagues in reporting this bill to the House for your favorable consideration.

I yield back the remainder of my time and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS].

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I feel sure that there can be no serious opposition in the House to this legislation. All Members of the House must have had, as I have had, cases where this higher allowance for a nurse or attendant for a helplessly disabled veteran is sorely needed and where the disabled veteran and his family have suffered on account of the lack of it. I think that the attention of this House should be called very forcibly to one thing at this time in connection with this legislation. It may seem a small matter to those looking at it from the point of view of the whole body of the disabled ex-service people, as it affects only a small number of them, comparatively speaking, but it is surely a very large matter and an important matter to those comparatively few who will be affected by it. So I call your attention to the fact that the bill was introduced on August 3, 1921, and that it is now June 27, 1922, before we have been able to get any action by the committee on this little bill. It would have taken only a little while for this bill to have been acted upon by the committee if it had been called up by the chairman. It has been called to his attention time after time during these months, but all to no avail.

Now, my friends, I do not wish to say anything disparaging about the committee, but the fact remains that from August 3, 1921, to June 27, 1922, this little bill for the increase of allowance for nurses from $20 to $50 per month has not been given enough attention to bring it out of the committee. I doubt if this bill has been given more than one hour's time in committee in all that time.

Mr. Chairman, that brings me to this suggestion that the provisions contained in House Resolution 317, submitted by Mr. CONNALLY of Texas, should be carried out at the earliest possible time by this House; and that is that all matters relating to the Veterans' Bureau and all proposed legislation affecting the veterans of the World War shall be submitted to a new committee, which is needed and which should be created and which should be called the committee on veterans' legislation, or any other suitable name. This resolution has been in since March, and nothing has been done about it.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to interrupt the gentleman, but the rule provides that debate shall be confined to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. According to the rule, all debate must be on the bill.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Very well, Mr. Chairman, this little bill raising the allowance for nurse or attendant from $20 to $50, I am safe in saying, did not get more than one hour's consideration in the 9 or 10 months it has been in the committee. It may be that the committee is overburdened with important work in other lines, so that they could not spare any of their valuable time for a little relief legislation like this for the benefit of helplessly disabled soldiers.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Is the gentleman in favor of this bill?

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Absolutely.

Mr. WINSLOW. If the committee discovered the merits of it in one hour's consideration, was not that long enough?

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. If they had discovered it nine months ago, the hour would have been enough. But you allowed nine months to pass before you even called it up so that the committee could give it the very small amount of time that was necessary for its consideration. The committee may be laboring under a heavy burden of more important legislation, as they see it, and not able to get to these bills, and that is all the more reason for the suggestion that I make at this time, that we should have a new committee. Why should we continue to burden further these already overloaded committees with legislation concerning the veterans of the war? Here we have a little bill for the relief of a small number of helplessly disabled soldiers, and this relief has certainly been very urgently needed all this time, and yet this committee has evidently been so busy with other matters that, during a period of about 10 months or more, the chairman has not seen fit to have his committee devote a few minutes of the valuable time of the committee to even this small bit of legislation of this class. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we certainly need a new committee—let us have a new committee—to handle all matters relating to the Veterans' Bureau and all proposed legislation affecting the veterans, so that we can have prompt consideration and action on legislation of this class. And then these overburdened committees that have other important legislation to consider can be relieved of the burden of considering legislation of this class. I hope and believe that everyone here will vote for this bill to-day, now that we have the chance to do so. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the committee on having discovered that $50 is more than $20. It took a little time to discover it, but they have at last done so, and with these few remarks of congratulation I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER].

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not consume all of the five minutes. It is gratifying to me that this legislation has at last seen the light of the legislative day in the House. As many members of the committee will recall, my colleague from New York [Mr. FISH] and I voted against the Sweet bill, of which we highly approved in principle, as a protest because this amendment was not included. It was stricken out by the House conferees from the Senate bill. However, I have no criticism to make of the gentlemen of the committee. They were operating at that time, no doubt, under great stress, but have now at last recognized the justice of this legislation. It is important legislation; it is not mere piffle or spitball, as the gentleman from Alabama has insinuated, but it is one of the greatest pieces of constructive legislation in favor of the disabled veterans of the World War that has been had in this House. I think the gentleman from Alabama, who is usually very fair and very courteous to his colleagues, for some reason or other, perhaps on account of some unfortunate experience he has had with the Veterans' Bureau, is laboring under some sort of a misapprehension as to my attitude on this legislation and other matters affecting veterans. I want to say that the Veterans' Bureau has greatly improved of late. There has been room, and still is, for improvement, and there is no question but there has been and is a stimulating effect from the proper sort of criticism, and that constructive criticism will in the future stimulate them to even greater effort. I again congratulate the committee on reporting out this bill and trust that it will pass by a unanimous vote.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 25 minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, the original law provided $20 a month for totally disabled soldiers where they needed an attendant. The theory was not that an attendant would be employed in every case, because ordinarily the $20 goes to the soldier himself and that an attendant consists of a member of his family. So $20 was only an increased amount allowed to the soldier by reason of the fact that some of the family had to wait on him.

Now, it is found that there are 336 totally disabled soldiers in need of constant attendance to take care of them, and it is the belief of the committee that this additional attention must be based more upon what it costs really to employ a nurse or attendant. That seems to be the consensus of view of the committee, so that in view of what it does cost to employ a nurse or attendant it is found that the amount has to be increased. Of course, the committee will observe that $50 is not allowed in every case. That is the maximum, but it is such an amount as the director of the bureau may find is reasonable—not to exceed $50. Of course, in practical effect it will mean $50 will be allowed to the disabled soldier in all cases, because it will be found that where a man is in need of a constant attendant it will always require $50. In fact, if we placed the legislation on the basis of what it costs to employ an attendant it ought to be more than $50, because in the average community if the disabled soldier really has to get an attendant it is rare that you can get one for $50.

But the committee thought we ought to go at least this far; and if we are going to place the legislation upon the theory or upon the basis of the actual employment of an attendant, we ought at least to make an additional allowance of something in proportion to what it will cost to pay for that attendant. And now, in this connection, I merely want to advert a moment to the subject brought up by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE]. We have provided in what is known as the Fuller law for the disabled soldiers of the Civil War now in such condition that they require the attendance of a nurse or of an attendant. We allow $22 in addition to the $50 to which he is entitled as a maximum pension. He is entitled to $50 as a maximum pension, and with the additional amount of $22 it makes $72 in case he is in such a condition physically as to require the constant attendance of a nurse or is helpless. It seems to me that the time has come when, if we are going to allow this additional amount to those who are totally disabled upon the basis of the cost of employing a nurse, we must be more liberal not only to the soldiers of the World War but to the soldiers of the Spanish-American War and the Civil War and allow a larger amount than we have heretofore been allowing. In fact, I think the time will soon come when we will have to increase this amount, and I think the time has already come when an increased amount should be allowed to these old men in their seventies and eighties, decrepit and totally disabled, who have to have some one to wait upon them, and we will have to allow more than $22 additional, and it is my intention to file a bill as soon as I can do so to amend the present pension law so as to increase that allowance. I think it ought to be done. In other words, I think we ought to endeavor to try to be equitable and fair to the soldiers of all our wars where the same principle is involved. Now, when it comes to employing a nurse or an attendant for a soldier it costs as much in one case as in another, without regard to how they are hurt or what the service was. When it comes to the question of employing a person or a nurse as an attendant to wait upon him it costs as much in one case as in another, and I think Congress is going to come to the point soon where we must try to be a little more equitable and deal a little more fairly with the old soldiers of the Civil War and of the other wars as well as the soldiers of this war. [Applause.] I yield back whatever time may remain.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if this bill providing for an increase from $20 to $50 a month for the nurses and attendants of the blinded, legless, and armless veterans, totaling about 350 men, was good enough for the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to report out last week, it follows it must have been good enough when introduced on August 3 of last year to have had at that time some slight consideration by that committee. For almost one year—10 months exactly—this bill has been reposing quietly and calmly in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce without a single bit of consideration except when Members of Congress wasted their time writing to the chairman of the committee asking for a hearing or importuning for consideration of the bill. But what of the 300 or more totally disabled veterans who have had to depend on nurses or attendants at $20 a month? What of the blinded men who had to go around the streets guided by attendants who could not speak English and who could not read the names of the streets or the signs on the stores?

I do not know what the gentleman who preceded me was talking about. This bill provides for nurses and attendants at $50 a month; hitherto and at the present time the totally disabled veterans have been and are receiving only $20, and I challenge any Member of the House to go out and hire a nurse or an attendant for a blinded, legless, or armless man at $20 a month. Have you gentlemen ever talked with any of these blinded men? They know what this bill is meant for. It is meant to hire an attendant or a nurse to show them around and to take constant care of them. It will enable them to live at home and be properly cared for.

Only a few weeks ago a hundred or more blinded veterans came over here from the hospital at Baltimore. I talked to a number of these men about this bill, and they told me that they could not get anybody at $20 who could speak English. Is that proper treatment to accord to our totally disabled soldiers after our pledges and guaranties; is that an act of justice; is that consistent with our national gratitude; is that in consonance with our national and sacred honor? There is not a man here who can say it is, or that we have fulfilled our obligations to these heroes.

If it had not been for a single member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce this bill might still be reposing calmly and tranquilly in that committee.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I can not yield. Credit is not due to myself as the sponsor of the bill, but to the gentleman from Washington [Judge WEBSTER], who had the courage single-handed to demand last week the consideration of this bill in the committee, and as the result of his fight, his single-handed fight, he got that bill reported out for your consideration. No wonder, gentlemen of the House, that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS] and all the service men of this House feel that there should be a new committee to consider soldier-relief legislation. It is no reflection on individual members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee if they can not find time to consider all soldier-relief measures because of the other important legislation before their committee. I want to be corrected if it is not a fact they have not given one single hour of consideration to soldier-relief legislation since the second Sweet bill passed this House over a year ago. That is the reason that we demand that there shall be another committee, that is not weighed down with important legislation on railroads and interstate commerce, to consider soldier relief, to consider the workings of the Veterans' Bureau, and the hospitalization and rehabilitation of the veterans.

Fifteen months ago you passed a bill here providing for $17,500,000 for veterans' hospitals. One million dollars was laid aside for a tubercular hospital for veterans in New York State, and up to the present time the site has not even been selected. If we did our full duty to these tubercular soldiers we would subpœna Chairman White of the consultants on hospitalization and call him before some House committee that had the time to consider these matters. In the meanwhile scores of our tubercular veterans in New York have died for lack of adequate or proper care. This amounts to criminal neglect, yet the proof of the pudding is the eating, and we have done nothing up to date to remove Doctor White or hold him responsible.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I contend that the gentleman is not confining his talk to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman should confine his talk to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. FISH. It is self-evident, on the face of this bill, that it should be passed unanimously, and if it is passed unanimously it carries out what everyone of us who have studied this question believe, that if it is good enough to pass now it was good enough to have had consideration 10 months ago. I hope that this measure will pass unanimously. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Seven minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is quite contrary to my nature to get into a personal altercation with any young man on the floor of this House, but this particular Member, Mr. FISH, has developed into a common scold, and I think it is high time for somebody to call attention to his loose statements. In support of this bill he has told Members assembled here that to one man alone was the committee's consideration of this bill due. His inaccuracy is as great as his height. The man who brought this bill to the attention of the members of our committee, as a committee, was the chairman. The gentleman, Judge WEBSTER, of Washington, referred to, was in the committee meeting, but did not say a word about this bill until it was brought up by the chairman in regular order, and while I would not take anything of credit from Judge WEBSTER in respect of his interest in this legislation, I do not propose to have anybody here, talking flippantly and loosely, suggest that other members of the committee have been borne down by the weighty hand of one man of the committee and so made to recognize their duty. It is not that kind of a committee. [Applause.]

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I think those of us who are acquainted with Judge WEBSTER, those of us who are members of the committee, as well as other Members of the House, know if he were in his place to-day he would be the first one to rise up here before this committee and disclaim any such thing as has been said here by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Not now.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman was not present at the meeting?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No.

Mr. FISH. Then I will not say anything more.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I was not present, but I know something about my colleague.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman ask me the question?

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman permit me to read his letter concerning this bill?

Mr. WINSLOW. Unless you are going to introduce new evidence I am ready to answer the question you wanted to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. FISH. I will answer it myself. Will you yield time to me? Here is the letter.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes; I yield three minutes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. When I was interrupted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] I was about to say that the gentleman from Washington [Judge WEBSTER] would be the first to deny that he alone was responsible for the reporting out of this bill, and it seems regrettable to me that when we have before us a measure of this kind of such great importance to these sorely afflicted men who have served their country so well that it should be used here upon the floor of this House by men who have claimed to be such great friends of the measure to make statements about Members of the House and members of the committee that are not in accord with the facts.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. The gentleman says "men." I hope that he does not include me in his remarks. I try to be very fair.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman from California is always fair.

Mr. LINEBERGER. It was not my intention in any way to cast reflections upon the members of the committee, and I tried to make it clear.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman from California is always fair. "The gentleman from Minnesota" takes exception to the statements made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], from the beginning to the end of his remarks. In fact, one might judge that he was more against the committee than he was in favor of this bill.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Is it not a fact that this very proposition that is involved in this bill came before the House when the second Sweet bill was under consideration in the House, and was voted on, and voted down by the House?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes; voted down.

Mr. DENISON. Is not the committee justified in taking that as an indication of the sentiment of the House?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes, at least for the time being.

Mr. KING. The gentleman from New York understands that he is being lectured here?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman from Minnesota would not have asked for the floor at all if the gentleman from New York had yielded to him.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. WINSLOW. No; I propose to take the time myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (5) of section 302 of the War Risk Insurance Act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(5) If the director considers the disabled person is so helpless as to be in constant need of a nurse or attendant, such additional sum shall be paid, but not exceeding $50 per month, as the director may deem reasonable."

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On line 5, strike out the words "the director considers."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in view of certain remarks that have been made here by the chairman of the committee, claiming some interest in the passage of the bill, I am going to read a letter from the chairman of the committee dated May 27, stating that——

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's remarks——

Mr. FISH. That it was unlikely that the bill would receive consideration in his committee, and the date of that letter is only three weeks ago——

Mr. WINSLOW. I make the point of order that the gentleman's remarks are not germane to the amendment pending before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has moved to strike out the last word.

Mr. WINSLOW. Then I will make the point of order later.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I hope this interruption will not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. FISH. As a matter of fact this bill was considered through the single-handed demand of the gentleman from Washington, Judge WEBSTER, and after conference with Judge WEBSTER he agreed that I should state on the floor of the House that he made the fight, and I purpose to give him the credit which he richly deserves.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. FISH. No; I will not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FISH. This is a letter, dated May 27, from Samuel E. Winslow, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I will save time by reading only one paragraph of it. It reads:

In answer, however, I am obliged, in the face of the circumstances existing, to tell you that I can add nothing to my statements made to you verbally several times, to the effect that as yet the committee has not considered, and now does not seem likely to consider, bills of this character.

That is the point—"bills of this character"—soldier-relief legislation. They have other important legislation to consider, but have not got time for bills of this character, a simple act of justice to the blinded and otherwise totally disabled veterans. No wonder there is a cry resounding throughout the country for intelligent supervision and responsibility on behalf of Congress toward the disabled ex-service man.

I do not intend to deal except with facts. The gentleman said that this amendment was turned down in the House. There were three amendments, one doubling this amount to $100, and they all got so mixed up that they defeated themselves. Whereupon I took this bill over to the Finance Committee of the Senate, and they adopted it unanimously. It went through the Senate unanimously, and what happened? The House conferees turned down this very bill over a year ago, and the gentleman who is chairman of this committee, who is now trying to take some little credit for the passage of this bill, knows how he voted, because every Member of this House does know how he voted in that conference on this particular bill.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield to me for a brief question?

Mr. FISH. I certainly will.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Was it after the gentleman received this letter from the chairman of the committee stating that he could not take up legislation of this kind that Judge WEBSTER made his statement before the committee?

Mr. FISH. It certainly was.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. And Judge WEBSTER was there?

Mr. FISH. He was; but the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] was not present.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. The gentleman understands that he has been severely lectured and reprimanded to-day by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. FISH. I do not consider that it is any reprimand, coming from that source. Condemnation from such a source is commendation, indeed. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. I gladly and willingly yield for a brief question.

Mr. WINSLOW. Do you wish to insist on the fact that you know that Judge WEBSTER brought this matter to the attention of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee?

Mr. FISH. I am not insisting on anything. I am stating that Judge WEBSTER made the fight in the committee for this bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. Are you insisting that Judge WEBSTER made a statement before the committee——

Mr. FISH. Is this to be taken out of my time or the gentleman's own time?

Mr. WINSLOW. Are you insisting——

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts in addressing the gentleman from New York should not use the words "are you." He should say "the gentleman from New York." [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. WINSLOW. I addressed my inquiry to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I certainly am not going to engage in any wrangle upon this proposition. I do not believe there is a man in this House who is not in favor of the most liberal treatment of the ex-service men, and particularly the men who will be the beneficiaries under this act. I simply rise to say a word. I do not raise any question with reference to the zeal of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. I admire him for it; but as far as there being any fight in the committee is concerned I want to say that there never was for a minute any fight in the committee upon this proposition. I was present at the meeting of the committee at which this bill was brought up. The first reference to the bill in that meeting was made by the chairman of the committee [Mr. WINSLOW]. The bill was earnestly indorsed by different members of the committee, and the only question whatever in the committee was as to the question of taking up one particular bill that we all agreed was meritorious, or whether we should attempt to take up in the limited time the various amendments that have been proposed to the war risk insurance act. That was the only contest that there was in the committee. I certainly would not detract in any way from any credit to which Judge WEBSTER may be entitled. I am sure if he were here he would be the first one to disclaim exclusive credit for legislation of this sort. The fact is, as we all know, that all of the war risk insurance legislation was sought to be overhauled about a year ago. It was a long task, requiring many weeks' consideration in the committee. A great bill was prepared and reported out of the committee, became a law, and under its provisions hundreds of millions of dollars are being paid to the disabled men and their dependents. It is not perfect, and some provisions must be still further liberalized. Some defects of the law have developed. Various amendments doubtless ought to be made. That is true of any large legislation of this sort. But the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as you all know, has a great variety of things within its jurisdiction. For many, many weeks we have been in session practically every day considering proposed amendments to the transportation act. I am sure there was not a member of that committee who was not anxious to take up at the earliest possible moment not only this bill but the many other meritorious bills that various Members have introduced proposing amendments to the war risk insurance act, and I am sure that in good time and in good temper on the part of every Member of this House we are going to do full justice as far as possible to every ex-service man, particularly those who were disabled. I regret exceedingly that there should be any personal animosity or partisan wrangle upon this thing. There should be nothing of that sort, and I am sure this American Congress, at every opportunity, is going to give assurance to the ex-service men and to the people of the country that the Republic is not unmindful of the debt which it owes to these men who offered their lives for its protection. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8062, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered under the rule. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WINSLOW, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional judges for certain courts in the United States, for printing under the rule.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the following number of district judges for the United States district courts in the districts specified in addition to those now authorized by law:

"For the district of Massachusetts, two; for the eastern district of New York, one; for the southern district of New York, two; for the district of New Jersey, one; for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, one; for the western district of Pennsylvania, one; for the northern district of Texas, one; for the southern district of Florida, one; for the eastern district of Michigan, one; for the northern district of Ohio, one; for the middle district of Tennessee, one; for the northern district of Illinois, one; for the eastern district of Illinois, one; for the district of Minnesota, one; for the eastern district of Missouri, one; for the western district of Missouri, one; for the eastern district of Oklahoma, one; for the district of Montana, one; for the northern district of California, one; for the southern district of California, one; for the district of New Mexico, one; and for the district of Arizona, one.

"A vacancy occurring, more than two years after the passage of this act, in the office of any district judge appointed pursuant to this act, except for the middle district of Tennessee, shall not be filled unless Congress shall so provide, and if an appointment is made to fill such a vacancy occurring within two years a vacancy thereafter occurring in said office shall not be filled unless Congress shall so provide: Provided, however, That in case a vacancy occurs in the district of New Mexico at any time after the passage of this act, there shall thereafter be but one judge for said district until otherwise provided by law: Provided further, That from and after the appointment of a district judge for the middle district of Tennessee, the present district judge for the eastern and middle districts of said State shall cease to be a district judge for the middle district of Tennessee.

"SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Chief Justice of the United States, or in case of his disability, of one of the other justices of the Supreme Court, in order of their seniority, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, and annually thereafter, to summon to a conference on the last Monday in September, at Washington, D. C., or at such other time and place in the United States as the Chief Justice, or, in case of his disability, any of said justices in order of their seniority, may designate, the senior circuit judge of each judicial circuit. If any senior circuit judge is unable to attend, the Chief Justice, or in case of his disability, the justice of the Supreme Court calling said conference, may summon any other circuit or district judge in the judicial circuit whose senior circuit judge is unable to attend, that each circuit may be adequately represented at said conference. It shall be the duty of every judge thus summoned to attend said conference, and to remain throughout its proceedings, unless excused by the Chief Justice, and to advise as to the needs of his circuit and as to any matters in respect of which the administration of justice in the courts of the United States may be improved.

"The senior district judge of each United States district court, on or before the 1st day of August in each year, shall prepare and submit to the senior circuit judge of the judicial circuit in which said district is situated, a report setting forth the condition of business in said district court, including the number and character of cases on the docket, the business in arrears, and cases disposed of, and such other facts pertinent to the business dispatched and pending as said district judge may deem proper, together with recommendations as to the need of additional judicial assistance for the disposal of business for the year ensuing. Said reports shall be laid before the conference herein provided, by said senior circuit judge, or, in his absence, by the judge representing the circuit at the conference, together with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

"The Chief Justice, or, in his absence, the senior associate justice, shall be the presiding officer of the conference. Said conference shall make a comprehensive survey of the condition of business in the courts of the United States and prepare plans for assignment and transfer of judges to or from circuits or districts where the state of the docket or condition of business indicates the need therefor, and shall submit such suggestions to the various courts as may seem in the interest of uniformity and expedition of business.

"'The Chief Justice and each justice or judge summoned and attending said conference shall be allowed his actual expenses of travel and his necessary expenses for subsistence, not to exceed $10 per day, which payments shall be made by the marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the written certificate of the judge incurring such expenses, approved by the Chief Justice.'

"SEC. 3. Section 13 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 13. Whenever any district judge by reason of any disability or necessary absence from his district or the accumulation or urgency of business is unable to perform speedily the work of his district, the senior circuit judge of that circuit, or, in his absence, the circuit justice thereof may, if in his judgment the public interest requires, designate and assign any district judge of any district court within the same judicial circuit to act as district judge in such district and to discharge all the judicial duties of a judge thereof for such time as the business of the said district court may require. Whenever it is found impracticable to designate and assign another district judge within the same judicial circuit as above provided and a certificate of the needs of any such district is presented by said senior circuit judge or said circuit justice to the Chief Justice of the United States, he, or in his absence the senior associate justice, may, if in his judgment the public interest so requires, designate and assign a district judge of an adjoining judicial circuit if practicable, or if not practicable, then of any judicial circuit, to perform the duties of district judge and hold a district court in any such district as above provided: Provided, however, That before any such designation or assignment is made the senior circuit judge of the circuit from which the designated or assigned judge is to be taken shall consent thereto. All designations and assignments made hereunder shall be filed in the office of the clerk and entered on the minutes of both the court from and to which a judge is designated and assigned.'

"SEC. 4. Section 15 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 15. Each district judge designated and assigned under the provisions of section 13 may hold separately and at the same time a district court in the district or territory to which such judge is designated and assigned and discharge all the judicial duties of the district or territorial judge therein.'

"SEC. 5. Section 18 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 18. The Chief Justice of the United States, or the circuit justice of any judicial circuit, or the senior circuit judge thereof, may, if the public interest requires, designate and assign any circuit judge of a judicial circuit to hold a district court within such circuit. The judges of the United States Court of Customs Appeals, or any of them, whenever the business of that court will permit, may, if in the judgment of the Chief Justice of the United States the public interest requires, be designated and assigned by him for service from time to time and until he shall otherwise direct, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, when requested by the Chief Justice of either of said courts.

"'During the period of service of any judge designated and assigned under this act he shall have all powers, and rights, and perform all the duties of a judge of the district, or a justice of the court, to which he has been assigned (excepting the power of appointment to a statutory position or of permanent designation of newspaper or depository of funds): Provided, however, That in case a trial has been entered upon before such period of service has expired and has not been concluded the period of service shall be deemed to be extended until the trial has been concluded.

"'Any designated and assigned judge who has held court in another district than his own shall have power, notwithstanding his absence from such district and the expiration of the time limit in his designation, to decide all matters which have been submitted to him within such district, to decide motions for new trials, settle bills of exceptions, certify or authenticate narratives of testimony, or perform any other act required by law or the rules to be performed in order to prepare any case so tried by him for review in an appellate court; and his action thereon in writing filed with the clerk of the court where the trial or hearing was had shall be as valid as if such action had been taken by him within that district and within the period of his designation.'"

"SEC. 6. Section 118 of the Judicial Code as amended is hereby further amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 118. There shall be in the second, seventh, and eighth circuits, respectively, four circuit judges; and in each of the other circuits three circuit judges, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. All circuit judges shall receive a salary of $8,500 a year each, payable monthly. Each circuit judge shall reside within his circuit, and when appointed shall be a resident of the circuit for which he is appointed. The circuit judges in each circuit shall be judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit, and it shall be the duty of each circuit judge in each circuit to sit as one of the judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit from time to time according to law: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent any circuit judge holding district court or otherwise, as provided by other sections of the Judicial Code.'

"SEC. 7. That all laws or parts thereof inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"An act for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the fourth judicial circuit, for the appointment of additional district judges for certain districts, providing for an annual conference of certain judges, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying report.

The Senate struck out all after the enacting clause of the House bill (H. R. 9103) and inserted a new bill.

The conferees have written a new bill, embodying the substance of the original House bill and of the Senate amendment.

The effect of the bill as submitted by your conferees is to increase the number of judges from 22, as provided by the House, to 24. Two districts not in the House bill are provided with an additional judge each, namely, New Jersey and New Mexico. The additional judge for the northern and southern districts of Georgia has been eliminated.

The provision for an annual conference of judges to be called by the Chief Justice of the United States has been written, the requirement for a report from the Attorney General to the conference of judges has been eliminated, and certain clarifying changes in phraseology have been adopted, but otherwise the provision remains practically the same.

The amendments to sections of the Judicial Code have also been rewritten with no substantial changes in effect.

The provision for designation and assignment of judges of the Court of Customs Appeals has been retained, but the authorization for designating and assigning a district judge to sit in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has been dropped. An additional circuit judge has been provided for the fourth judicial circuit as carried in the Senate amendment.

The title has been amended to conform to the text as agreed upon in conference.

A. J. VOLSTEAD,
JOSEPH WALSH,
Managers on the part of the House.

CHARTERS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill H. R. 9527, to amend section 5136, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to corporate powers of associations, so as to provide succession thereof until dissolved, and to apply said section as so amended to all national banking associations, for printing under the rule.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MILLER, for 10 days, on account of death of his mother.

To Mr. HERRICK, indefinitely, beginning June 27, for the purpose of returning home to attend to pressing private business.

CORRECTION.

Mr. GERNERD. Mr. Speaker, on February 6 last I am recorded as being present. As a matter of fact, I was absent, being sick at the time. I ask that that correction be made.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made in the Journal and in the RECORD in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

There was no objection.

FISCAL AFFAIRS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER appointed as a committee to investigate the fiscal affairs of the District of Columbia the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. EVANS; the gentleman from Colorado, Mr. HARDY; and the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. WRIGHT.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10101. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 297. Joint resolution requesting the President of the United States to call a conference of maritime nations with a view to the adoption of effective means for the prevention of pollution of navigable waters by oil-burning and oil-carrying steamers by the dumping into such waters of oil waste, fuel oil, oil sludge, oil slop, tar residue, and water ballast;

H. R. 11634. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Norman and the town and village of Halstad, in said county, in the State of Minnesota, and the county of Traill and the town of Herberg, in said county, in the State of North Dakota, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States;

H. R. 11128. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Rio Grande between the cities of Del Rio, Tex., and Las Vacas, Mexico;

H. R. 11362. An act declaring Tchula Lake, Holmes County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream;

H. R. 10770. An act to legalize a bridge across the south arm of Pokegama Lake in Itasca County, State of Minnesota; and

H. R. 6110. An act amending section 97 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 28, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 28, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

COLLECTION OF ADDITIONAL COTTON STATISTICS.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, a few days ago I introduced a bill (S. 3677) authorizing the Director of the Census to collect additional statistics of cotton, showing the number of bales on hand tenderable under the law. Since that time I have consulted with Secretary Hoover and the experts of the Department of Commerce in the Bureau of the Census and Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and have prepared a bill covering all matters in line with their suggestions. This bill has the indorsement of Secretary Hoover.

There are no accurate world statistics of cotton tenderable under the law; in fact, we have no reliable statistics for the United States. It is admitted that included in the amount of cotton on hand in this country that much of it is very low-grade cotton and does not come within this class. In order to prevent the speculators from gambling in cotton and influencing the market to suit the speculators it is necessary to know the amount of cotton on hand in the world. The producer and manufacturer of cotton wish a stable market, and they should have the actual facts. Under this bill statistics of tenderable cotton on hand in the world will be published August 1, December 1, and March 1. The last two will enable the farmer to know how much cotton is on hand before he plants his crop, and if there is a large surplus of cotton he will not plant so much, and thus avoid an overproduction of cotton, which always lowers the price below the cost of production. Our manufacturers of cotton, like our producers, compete with the world, and they should know conditions.

The boll weevil is so destructive of the cotton crop at this time that the amount produced this year, even with last year's holdover, will not be sufficient to supply the demand for next year. We must stop gambling in cotton. The farmers are the ones that suffer most, and the best way to accomplish this is to get accurate world statistics of cotton on hand at different seasons of the year and keep the low grades separate from the others.

I ask that this bill may be referred to the Committee on Commerce as a substitute for the other bill.

The bill (S. 3757) authorizing the Department of Commerce to collect and publish additional cotton statistics and information was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM M'KINLEY.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement with reference to Confederate bodies honoring William McKinley, a gallant Federal soldier and former President of the United States, who was so much beloved in the South.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The statement referred to is as follows:

CONFEDERATE BODIES TO HONOR MCKINLEY—BRONZE TABLET TO LAMENTED PRESIDENT TO BE UNVEILED AT ATLANTA.

ATLANTA, June 26.—Time heals deep wounds and sentiment bridges any chasm, and one more link binding the South and the North will be forged here on July 4 when Confederate bodies will meet in Piedmont Park and pay honor to the late President William McKinley.

THE INSCRIPTION.

Following the Spanish-American War President McKinley made a tour through the South, and in a speech delivered in Atlanta in 1898 advocated the Government sharing in the care of the Confederate veterans' graves. Twenty-five years later his words have reaped a harvest of honor and glory in the form of a tree set out in his memory last February by Confederate and Spanish War bodies, and these same bodies will unveil at the tree a bronze tablet which bears the following wording:

"This tree, planted in 1922 under auspices of the Atlanta Writers' Club by the Atlanta Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy; John B. Gordon Camp, Sons of Confederate Veterans; and Fitzhugh Lee and Theodore Roosevelt Camps, Spanish War Veterans, in honor of President William McKinley, who in 1898 in Atlanta said: 'Every soldier's grave made during our unfortunate Civil War is a tribute to American valor, and the time has now come in the evolution of sentiment and feeling, under the providence of God, when, in the spirit of fraternity, we should share with you in the care of the graves of the Confederate veterans.'"

ATTRACTIVE PROGRAM.

An attractive program for the tablet unveiling has been arranged, which will include short speeches, a military salute by a squad of soldiers from Fort McPherson, a band concert which will include the rendition of the two "McKinley" songs, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," his last words, and "Lead, Kindly Light," his favorite song.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fernald	La Follette	Sheppard
Ball	Gerry	Lodge	Simmons
Brandegee	Glass	McCumber	Smith
Cameron	Gooding	McKinley	Smoot
Capper	Hale	McLean	Spencer
Caraway	Harreld	McNary	Sterling
Colt	Harris	Nelson	Sutherland
Culberson	Harrison	Newberry	Trammell
Cummins	Johnson	Norbeck	Underwood
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Kellogg	Overman	Warren
Edge	Keyes	Pepper	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	King	Poindexter	Willis

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 6, 62, 92, and 93 to the said bill and concurred therein; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 13, 64, 65, 86, and 91 and concurred therein each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, and 13 to the bill (H. R. 11450) to provide for the printing and distribution of the Supreme Court Reports, and amending sections 225, 226, 227, and 228 of the Judicial Code; that the House concurred in the amendment of the Senate numbered 7 to said bill with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, and that the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12073) to provide additional compensation for certain civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8062) amending subdivision (5) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 6110. An act amending section 97 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911;

H. R. 10770. An act to legalize a bridge across the south arm of Pokegama Lake in Itasca County, State of Minnesota;

H. R. 11128. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Rio Grande between the cities of Del Rio, Tex., and Las Vacas, Mexico;

H. R. 11362. An act declaring Tchula Lake, Holmes County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream; and

H. R. 11634. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Norman and the town and village of Halstad, in said county, in the State of Minnesota, and the county of Traill and the town of Herberg, in said county, in the State of North Dakota, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States.

PAYMENT OF COURT OF CLAIMS JUDGMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 226).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims and requiring an appropriation for their payment—under the War Department, $31,853.65; under the Post Office Department, $267.02; and under the United States Housing Corporation, $18,880.55; in total amount, $51,001.22—which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SCRAPPING OF NAVAL VESSELS (S. DOC. NO. 227).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Navy Department, fiscal year 1923, to meet certain expenses pertaining to ships whose construction has been suspended, $5,000,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions of sundry citizens of Springfield, Mass., praying for a reduction in the proposed duty on lightweight kid gloves, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILLIS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Marietta, Ohio, remonstrating against inclusion in the pending tariff bill of proposed high duties on linens, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 3758) to repeal the bankruptcy laws of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3759) to authorize allotments of lands to Indians of the Menominee Reservation in Wisconsin, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

INCREASED PENSIONS TO THE DISABLED.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars, and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to refund legacy taxes illegally collected under the act of June 13, 1898, under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States v. Jones, and McCoach v. Pratt (236 U. S., etc.), intended to be proposed by him to House bill 12090, the third deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO HOUSE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment providing for improvement work on the Sabine-Neches Canal with a view to revetment of the north bank from what is known as Blands Bend Road on the north through the city to the southern limit of said city, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10766, the river and harbor authorization bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

ORDER FOR THE FOURTH OF JULY.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted the following order, which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Ordered, That whenever a session of the Senate shall include the 4th day of July, on that day, or if that day falls on a Sunday, then on the day following, the Senate shall meet, and immediately after the reading of the Journal, the Declaration of Independence shall be read to the Senate by a Senator to be designated for the purpose by the Presiding Officer; at the conclusion of which the Senate shall adjourn.

(The motion follows in general terms the motion submitted by Senator Hoar and adopted in the Fifty-sixth Congress, ordering the reading of Washington's Farewell Address on the 22d of February.)

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8062) amending subdivision (5) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PUBLICATION OF SUPREME COURT REPORTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives concurring in the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, and 13 to the bill (H. R. 11450) to provide for the printing and distribution of the Supreme Court Reports, and amending sections 225, 226, 227, and 228 of the Judicial Code; concurring in the amendment of the Senate numbered 7 with an amendment proposing in lieu of the sum provided by said amendment to insert "$8,000," and disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 7 and agree to the House amendment in lieu thereof. This amendment relates to the salary of the reporter. The Senate increased it from $7,500 to $8,500, and the House reduced it to $8,000, being a reduction of $500.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator. This is a complete agreement?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; a complete agreement.

Mr. NORRIS. It will not have to go back to conference?

Mr. NELSON. It will not have to go back if the Senate agrees to the House amendment and recedes from amendment numbered 11.

Mr. NORRIS. I am opposed to sending anything back to conference, because we decided day before yesterday that we must not do that. Whatever the House says we have got to agree to. That is the settled precedent and established law now. I am glad no one contends that this bill ought to go back to conference. We must not have any more conferences in such cases.

Mr. NELSON. Amendment numbered 11 struck out the words "composition, plating, printing, and binding, and such additional amount as shall equal as nearly as may be one-half," and in lieu thereof inserted "production including in such cost." The House provision provided for one-half the cost of the reporter. We amended the bill so as to provide that it should include all the cost of the reporter. It is that amendment which the House has amended, and I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now the Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 11.

The motion was agreed to.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment as amended in paragraph 701, page 99.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. We are voting now only on the first bracket in paragraph 701?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 99, line 6, the committee proposes to strike out "less than 2 years old, 1 cent per pound; 2 years old and over, 1½ cents per pound," and insert in lieu thereof—weighing less than 1,050 pounds each, 1½ cents per pound; weighing 1,050 each or more, 2 cents per pound.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. RAWSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL. Transferring my general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], I vote "yea."

Mr. COLT (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is necessarily detained from the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

I wish also to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]; and

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL].

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] and will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—48.

Ashurst	Ernst	Ladd	Pepper
Ball	Fernald	La Follette	Pittman
Brandegee	France	Lodge	Poindexter

Frelinghuysen	Nicholson	Shortridge
Hitchcock	Owen	Stanfield

So the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance will be stated.

The next amendment was, in paragraph 701, page 99, line 10, before the word "cents," to strike out the numeral "2" and to insert the numeral "3½," so as to read:

Fresh beef and veal, 3½ cents per pound.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, on yesterday the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] offered an amendment to the pending bill which is to be found on page 9491 of the RECORD. That amendment related to paragraph 701 on page 99 of the bill. It was an amendment to a proposed committee amendment and proposed to reduce the duties on cattle. The amendment to the amendment was debated on yesterday afternoon, and my recollection is that there was a yea-and-nay vote upon it, but the RECORD does not disclose that fact. I should like to know whether there was a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. There was no yea-and-nay vote on that amendment or on any of the amendments which I offered on yesterday. There was a viva voce vote.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the information I sought. The RECORD does not disclose a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On page 99, line 10, in the committee amendment, I move to strike out the numeral "3½" and to insert the numeral "2."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that the Senator from Massachusetts may accomplish the same result by asking to disagree to the committee amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the committee amendment proposes to raise the tariff duty upon fresh beef 75 per cent over the emergency tariff law and 133⅓ per cent over the Payne-Aldrich law. As is well known, under the Underwood law fresh beef is admitted free of duty.

The consumption of fresh beef in this country is enormous, the annual per capita consumption being 60 pounds. If this duty becomes effective, it means a tremendous increase in the prices the American consumers who purchase fresh beef must pay. From 1912 to 1916, which were average normal years, we produced in the United States 6,600,000,000 pounds of fresh beef and veal annually. An increased price of 3½ cents per pound upon this production will amount to a tax upon the consumers, if the tariff duty is reflected in increased prices, of $231,000,000 annually. The per capita increased price will be $2.27, and the family increased price, assuming five to the family, will be $11.35. It is by long odds the most excessive increase in the burden upon the consumers of America proposed by any rate of duty on fresh meats in this bill unless it be lamb and mutton. It is a rate never before suggested, never before contemplated, and never before proposed until the agricultural bloc assisted the Senate Finance Committee in rewriting the House bill. As I said a moment ago, the rate is 133⅓ per cent increase over the rate provided in the Payne-Aldrich law.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. BURSUM. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that railroad freight rates have about doubled, while the rates for water transportation have been lowered, and that an increased duty is necessary to equalize conditions between the domestic grower and the foreign producer on account of the low water freight rate on the foreign competing article and the much higher rates which exist on the railroads of this country to-day.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, of course it is some years since freight rates were doubled, and there has been no recent change in the effect of these freight rates. There is probably no industry in this country that has thrived and prospered more than the fresh-meat industry. Yesterday attention was called to some of the enormous profits of the packers engaged in the production of fresh meat. There is no question that when fresh beef was admitted free of duty during the years from 1913 until 1921 this business prospered as never before. Yet it is proposed now to increase the rate of duty upon fresh beef to the excessive amount of 3½ cents per pound. Add to this the interest and increased costs on large investments and the result will be an increase in all probability of 5 cents per pound.

Mr. President, there is no serious threatened competition from abroad. The records do not support the suggestion that there is danger of large importations of fresh meats. In the first place, as was pointed out yesterday, the meats which at times have been imported into this country are insignificant in quantity and are of a different quality than the American fresh meats. Experts claim Argentine beef and American beef are not competitive. The fresh meats from the Argentine come from cattle fed with grass, while our cattle are fed with corn. The American consumer has a prejudice against frozen beef, and especially beef that comes from cattle which are grass fed; but the records do not show any threatened competition that is likely to destroy this business. The records do not show that there is any danger whatever of the prices of fresh beef being forced down by reason of importations from abroad. It seems to me that the issue here is very clear: Do we want at this time, when everything is being deflated, when wages are being cut, when an attempt is being made to reduce the cost of production by our manufacturers and our producers, to give notice to the country that the most important food used by our people—fresh beef—is to bear from this day on an increased burden—an increased tax—of 3½ cents? That is the issue, and that is the only question before us.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just for a moment? Is there anything in this record to show that markets reached by water transportation from the Argentine and Mexico are supplied by the local producers of meat? For instance, I understand that it is sought to impose this duty in order to protect American fresh meats against importations of mutton and lamb from New Zealand, and beef from South America and from Central America. Is there anything in the record to show that the local cattle raisers supply markets reached by these countries?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. There is nothing that I know of in the record to that effect.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that the chief markets of the country for live stock are Chicago, New York, Buffalo, New Orleans, San Francisco, Seattle, Denver, Kansas City, and Omaha; and cattle are shipped to those markets from all over the United States.

Mr. STANLEY. I am talking about fresh meats. I am not talking about cattle on the hoof.

Mr. BURSUM. Fresh meat is shipped by the refrigerator system all over the country.

Mr. STANLEY. Who supplies those American markets? That is what I want to know.

Mr. BURSUM. The people of the United States, when we have an adequate tariff, supply them.

Mr. STANLEY. Do the people of the United States supply them, or do the meat packers supply them?

Mr. BURSUM. The farmers.

Mr. STANLEY. Do local raisers ship beef into New York and San Francisco?

Mr. BURSUM. The farmers do not engage in the butchering of their own beef; but they sell the beef, for instance, to market, and in turn the beef is butchered mainly by the packers all over the country. They are the chief source that the farmers depend upon for the sale of their cattle.

Mr. STANLEY. Exactly. That is what I want to get at. The farmer raises the beef, whether you have a duty or not. Suppose you impose a duty of 500 per cent; that excludes Mexican and New Zealand and Central American fresh meats. Let us assume that an embargo is put on the importation of fresh beef.

Mr. BURSUM. Oh, it could come into this country if you permitted it to come in free; yes.

Mr. STANLEY. This is merely a hypothetical case to get the facts. We will assume that all meat is excluded from the United States except our own meat. In that event the farmer would ship his meat to Kansas City or to Chicago or to some other point where it could be packed and refrigerated and shipped to these great central consuming markets like San Francisco and New York and Seattle and other such places.

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; that is the only way in which the country could be supplied—by the shipment of the live stock to central markets where they have packing houses.

Mr. STANLEY. Where they have the facilities.

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; where they have the facilities—Denver, Omaha, Kansas City, Chicago, New York, Buffalo, New Orleans, and so on.

Mr. STANLEY. Where the large packing houses are located.

Mr. BURSUM. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] calls my attention to the fact that they have a very extensive packing system in Savannah, Ga., also.

Mr. STANLEY. Now, I understand the Senator, and what he says is evidently true. The only way in which these markets are reached is through the packing houses. The able former Senator from Iowa, Mr. Kenyon, and the accomplished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] introduced a bill here not long ago to regulate the packers; and it was universally conceded, and I am not questioning that statement, that the price of fresh meat was not dependent upon the cost of production; that it was not determined by the market at all, either by the cost to the packer or by the legitimate demand in the country, but that the price of this commodity was absolutely fixed by a lawless monopoly with five heads in the form of the five beef packers of the United States; and both sides of this Chamber, with startling unanimity, voted for a bill that practically provided for the Government regulation and control of the operation of the industry and the prices of these commodities. That bill went to the House, where it is said its teeth were pulled and its claws were trimmed.

If the price of American beef is not fixed by the producer, if it is not fixed by the cost of production, if it is not fixed by the legitimate demand, if it is fixed by a lawless monopoly, that monopoly is going to charge all that the traffic will bear; and any additional price that is placed upon this beef by virtue of an impost upon its importation from abroad will, every dime of it, go out of the pockets of the consumers of beef and into the pockets of the packers.

It is inconceivable to me why you want to give this inordinate bonus to a lawless industry which you but lately denounced and have introduced all character of stringent regulations to control, whose predatory operations have been denounced on this floor as a national scandal by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and a half dozen other Senators. Your Trade Commission has reported that the price of beef is not fixed by the cost of its production, is not fixed by any natural law, but is in the absolute and ironclad control of a lawless and insatiate monopoly, and that there is absolutely no competition between the sellers of beef in this country. In that event the only competition that exists in the wide world is from abroad, from somebody that will sell a pound of beef that is not prepared by a packer; and you first affirm, and solemnly by your votes confirm the statement, that there is no competition at home, and then in the next breath you deliberately attempt to destroy competition abroad. From the Senator's own statement, it is a crime to put additional millions into the pockets of people that you have already said were robbers.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I suggest to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] yesterday called attention to a very pertinent factor which affects the tariff on beef, which is that to open the markets of this country to the trade of the world and have beef on the free list simply means giving the packers additional power with which to crush an industry in this country, for the reason that it is notorious that the Argentine beef, which can be imported into this country, and which has been grazed on cheaper land and produced by cheaper labor and at a lower cost, is controlled by the packers of this country, and can be handled only by them; so that in failing to give adequate protection to the grower of this country against the ruinous competition of other countries we are simply putting into the hands of the packers a club with which to destroy our own industry, and whenever that industry is destroyed we will pay the price.

It is not only for the best interests of this country, but I think it is for the best interests of the world, that America should maintain her live-stock industry. Unless we permit the live-stock industry to thrive and continue to exist and to raise cattle in this country, there will be no market to which the American farmer can sell his grain and sell his corn, and if we destroy that industry we will destroy the American farm, and if we destroy the American farm there will be very little use for the metropolitan cities and industries of this country.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, if I may state a fact which I think will help the discussion which the Senator from Kentucky has opened up, a good deal is said about the destruction of this industry. What are the facts? Can the beef industry be destroyed by foreign importations? What is the record of 1921? The total production in this country is 6,194,000,000 pounds. What was the importation in the year 1921? Twenty-seven million pounds, four-tenths of 1 per cent, imported into this country. If a tariff is justified upon an importation of four-tenths of 1 per cent, then it is justified on every single thing that is produced in America. What are the exports? Fifty-two million pounds, twice the imports.

So here is an industry producing 7,000,000,000 pounds, and exporting twice as much as is imported, asking for a tariff duty which is an increase of 133 per cent over the Payne-Aldrich bill and an increase of 75 per cent over the emergency law and over the House bill. It can not be justified on the facts that are disclosed here, that the importations are one-half the exportations, and that the importations are only four-tenths of 1 per cent of the production.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I am somewhat puzzled by the ambidextrous mental operations of the protectionists. We are told that if you put this duty on you may make the production of beef more profitable, that is, you raise the price; and then, when you are reminded that it would work an injustice to the consumer, it is said that it will curb monopoly, prevent its extortions. The only way you can do that, of course, is to lower the price of beef.

Protectionism under this new arrangement works a good deal like the mint juleps used to in my country before the Volstead law went into effect. In cold weather you took them to warm you, and in warm weather you took them to cool you. It will raise the price of beef to the man who is selling, and automatically lower it to the man who is buying.

How the beef packer can be hurt by a duty which will insure him the absolute control of the American market, because he happens to have a slaughterhouse in Rio de Janeiro or Buenos Aires, is beyond my ken. How this industry is to be destroyed by a failure to put a duty on a commodity that can only affect one-half of 1 per cent of the total output is beyond my ken. How a duty can affect an industry that is not affected by it is beyond my ken.

The production of beef in this country is the business of the farmer. The packing and selling of beef is the business of the packer. It is admitted by everybody that the packer fixes the price when he buys the beef without regard to a tariff, and fixes the price when he sells it without regard to a tariff. It is admitted by everybody that the only reason the farmer is not out of business now is because the packer is wise enough to see that if he did not pay just enough to keep the other fellow raising beef he would quit raising it, and the farmer lives now by grace not of the generosity but of the astuteness of the packer and the wise limits he places upon his own cupidity and not from any tariff duty whatsoever.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Massachusetts likewise referred to the fact that the importation of beef, compared with the entire consumption in the United States, is very small. Of course, that is a fact, but it seems to me that the effect upon the beef market can not be considered in the same way, for instance, as a small importation of clothing or a small importation of wheat or a small importation of cotton. The fresh-meat market is sui generis.

For instance, if a cargo of beef from Argentina should reach the New York market, you would have in that one cargo not a small percentage of the meat demand of the city of New York but you would have perhaps 100 per cent in that one cargo of the meat requirements of the city of New York. Fresh beef is something which must be consumed within a relatively short time after it is produced. It is a perishable article, in a sense. It is true we can keep it in our abattoirs for a considerable length of time, but, generally speaking, that is not the custom of the trade, and when one cargo comes into New York City it simply gluts the market, and I think it is not susceptible to the general argument which is presented on the floor of the Senate time and again, regarding the very small importations compared with our whole consumption, because when these cargoes come into New Orleans, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, or Boston the one cargo destroys that market absolutely, at least for a time. It demoralizes it, to say the least, in my opinion.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the Senator from New Mexico call my attention to that phase of the situation. Notwithstanding the fact that I am bitterly opposed to an extension of Federal authority, or Federal usurpation, I have often thought of the propriety of passing certain laws which should govern the District of Columbia alone. We have plenary control here. For instance, we could, without stretching the tether of our constitutional authority, provide that merchants in the District of Columbia should put the purchase price of commodities in the same figures in which they put the selling price, and enable the purchaser to know the difference between the cost of a pair of shoes and the price of a pair of shoes, between the cost of a loin of beef and the price of a loin of beef, between the cost of a suit of clothes and the price of a suit of clothes. That would be of comparatively small importance as far as a few consumers in the District of Columbia are concerned, but it would be hard to measure the moral influence of that sort of thing all over the United States.

In the same way a few markets where actual competition is possible might furnish a graphic exposure of any profiteering by profiteers elsewhere, whether by packer or retailer.

If, for instance, the inordinate demands of the Beef Trust or the butcher should raise the price of chilled meat to such an extent as to overcome the handicap of the cost of transportation and the inferiority of the frozen meat shipped here from New Zealand, or from South America, and it should be shipped into New York, or Charleston, or San Francisco, and you could, in the markets of these cities, where they had the benefit of foreign competition, buy a steak for 25 cents for which you would pay 90 cents in an inland town, it would call the attention of the country graphically to the extortion of this great combination, which you say absolutely controls the very staff of life.

It is bad enough to have a monopoly upon tobacco or upon medicines or upon clothing or upon lumber, but when monopoly fastens its fangs upon the vitals of the American people, upon that which is necessary to their life, and their strength, and their vigor, and their comfort, and their physical and mental development it has committed a still more odious crime; and when we for any reason are tender with monopoly which touches so vital an article as meat there is excuse for every other character of extortion upon steel products, upon barytes, upon graphite, upon chemicals, and upon everything else.

I have precipitated myself into the fight against this iniquitous duty, notwithstanding the fact that I have constituents who may deem themselves affected by it. There is not a man upon this floor who has a constituency more generally engaged in the raising of cattle than I. You have your vast ranges in New Mexico, in Wyoming, and in Texas, but my State is one emerald lawn from the mountains almost to the Mississippi, and the raising of cattle is universal. There is not a farmer who has not a vital interest in it; but because my constituency might possibly be profited by it—though I do not think they would be—or because they believe they would be profited by it, I will never shut my mouth to the iniquity of this thing.

Years ago poor old General Hancock, now of blessed memory, said that the tariff was a local issue, and he was laughed to scorn. There was a time when men consistently believed in protection and defended it and maintained it as a great, sane, and well-founded policy, men of the type of Clay, of Webster, and of Hamilton, who demanded a reasonable duty for a reasonable revenue, economically expended. They are dead and gone, and their sane though mistaken policy is forgotten, and to-day you have not the faith of protectionism; you have the fetish of protectionism, not a wise policy, but a Chinese joss, which they worship without understanding, under the insane and absurd delusion that there is no end to the amount of wealth that may be obtained by the amount of wealth that is taken; that the more you tax a people the richer they are; that the greater the impediment you put upon commerce the freer it is; the higher things are to purchasers the greater their comfort and the wider their prosperity.

On the other side we are against protectionism, we are against this infamous and outrageous fallacy, so long as nobody in my neck of the woods gets the benefit of the unclean and abominable thing. There is no more excuse for a duty on hides than there is for a duty on steel. There is no more excuse for a duty on long-staple cotton than there is for a duty on iron ore. There is no more excuse for a duty on beef than there is for a duty on finished linen, and the quicker we face the music the better. The measure of the iniquity of a duty is the harm that it does the fellow it hits, and this thing hits at the mouth and the table of the people of America; and whether my people raise cattle or not, I will not hesitate, so long as I occupy a seat on this floor—and God gives me the strength and the courage to say it—to declare that it is a naked abomination in the sight of gods and men.

GEORGE WASHINGTON AND THE BONUS QUESTION.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I fully agree with the brilliant Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] that there never was a tariff that was not dishonest and immoral. The very essence of it is the robbery of one man to enrich another, the stealing of one man's money to put it in the pocket of another. Disguise it as we may, that is what tariffs are; that is what they have always been. From the time the shoemakers of Lynn, Mass., asked the first Congress to give them a protective duty, the manufacturers have been robbing the farmer, until to-day the farmer is sunk into the depths of despair.

However, Mr. President, that is not the purpose for which I rose. I wanted to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] appears to have obtained his opinion of George Washington from the biography written by Parson Weems. Some of the biographers do not seem to have read the 14 volumes of George Washington's writings. For instance, I heard read in the Senate the other day a statement by one of these biographers to the effect that Washington never bought or sold negroes. Begging the pardon of the Senate for interrupting the tariff debate for just an interlude, allow me to read, from page 190 of volume 2 of the "Writings of George Washington," the following statement:

> I doubt not but you will be surprised at the badness of their condition unless you will consider under what terrible management and disadvantages I found my estate when I returned from the public service of this colony; and that besides some purchases of land and negroes I was necessitated to make adjoining me—in order to support the expense of a large family—I had provisions of all kinds to buy for the first two years, and my plantation to stock, in short, with everything; buildings to make and other matters which swallowed up, before I well knew where I was, all the money I got by marriage—nay, more—brought me in debt, and I believe I may appeal to your own knowledge of my circumstances before.

On page 211 of the same volume I find a letter to Capt. John Thompson:

> SIR: With this letter comes a negro (Tom), which I beg the favor of you to sell in any of the islands you may go to, for whatever he will fetch, and bring me in return from him—

I hope, Mr. President [Mr. WILLIS in the chair], you will listen to this. I regret that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] is not present.

> One hogshead of best molasses.
> One hogshead of best rum.
> One barrel of limes, if good and cheap.
> One pot of tamarinds, containing about 10 pounds.
> Two small ditto of mixed sweetmeats, about 5 pounds each.
> And the residue, much or little, in good old spirits.

That was in clear violation of the Volstead law and the Willis-Campbell Act. Here was the Father of his Country converting a runaway negro into West Indian fire water!

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. With pleasure.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I was a little surprised at that statement. I was always under the impression that George had his own stillhouse and made his own liquor.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I am not prepared to say at present whether the impression of the Senator from Kentucky is correct or not, but in the biographies it is said that the first thing he did on rising in the morning was to take a drink of rum, and that at his dinner table he always had small cider or beer and finished up with two glasses of Maderia wine.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the Senator believe that is one reason why he never told a lie?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. That is certainly one of the reasons.

Let us see what Washington said about the negro, Tom, whom he wanted to sell:

> That this fellow is both a rogue and a runaway—though he was by no means remarkable for the former, and never practiced the latter till of late—I shall not pretend to deny. But that he is exceedingly healthy, strong, and good at the hoe, the whole neighborhood can testify, and particularly Mr. Johnson and his son, who both had him under them as foreman of the gang; which gives me reason to hope he may with your good judgment sell well, if kept clean and trim'd up a little when offered for sale.

That is what the Father of his Country said. Assuming that Captain Thompson kept this negro, Tom, clean and well trimmed up and got a good price for him, there came back to Mount Vernon at least 1 hogshead of molasses, 1 hogshead of the best rum, and the residue, which must have been considerable if Tom was kept clean and well trimmed up, in good old spirits. Did he anticipate that the time would ever come when we would have the Volstead law and the Willis-Campbell Act?

Mr. President, as I said, this simply shows that we can not trust biographers, because Parson Weems does not tell us a thing about this, and even the scholarly biography of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] does not tell us that George Washington sent off undesirable negroes to the West Indies to have them sold and converted into rum, to drink them up, so to speak.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. With pleasure.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to remind the Senator that the world progresses, that both slavery and rum have been abolished in this country.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I wish I could believe that.

Mr. MYERS. They have been abolished by edicts of law. Of course, it takes some little time to put the edicts of law into effect some times.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Unfortunately, those things simply change their shape. The same old thing persists, but it takes on a different form. There are three things mankind has never been able to dispense with. I shall not name either one of the three, because if I named one I might be called upon to name the other two.

Now, Mr. President, I have just read in the morning papers that a certain association of disabled veterans have met at Philadelphia and denounced the soldiers' bonus, upon the idea that the disabled soldier has not been provided for. Why, Mr. President, whoever is in charge of that convention was ill informed. This Congress has been most generous to the disabled soldier. So far as I can recall, not a single appeal has been made in his behalf in the Senate that fell upon deaf ears or upon hardened hearts. There has been a prompt response to every appeal made for the disabled veteran, and if he is not now receiving at the Walter Reed Hospital and all other similar hospitals the most generous, attentive, kind, and scientific treatment, then the law which we have passed here has not been faithfully carried out by those to whom it was intrusted. It is not our fault, Mr. President, if the disabled soldier is not being cared for in a manner more liberal than ever was planned before in the history of mankind.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make the observation that Congress has done its full duty with respect to furnishing funds. Thirty-five million six hundred thousand dollars has been appropriated by Congress for new buildings and extensions of buildings.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I gladly bear testimony to the zeal of the Senator from Arizona in behalf of the disabled and diseased veterans. No man on this floor has been more courageous and more insistent upon giving these men the very best that the Government had, and if they are not now getting it it is not his fault, it is not my fault, it is not yours, it is not that of any colleague of mine on the floor of the Senate.

Can we in behalf of the soldiers cite the great authority of George Washington in favor of a bonus? Mr. President, when in the history of the world did any soldiers ever render such service to their country, at their country's command, as was rendered by the soldiers in the World War? Heretofore in every war we have ever had the soldier was within reach of his family, his kindred, his friends, by correspondence and by furlough. The soldier could go home and refresh himself among the associations of his family and his kindred and his friends.

When before was the soldier denied the right to send a letter to his mother, to his wife, to his sister, to his sweetheart, to his friends? Never before. When ever was he compelled to go 3,000 miles from home, put his foot upon foreign soil, and fight for that which he did not fully understand? Never before.

Let us come to what Washington said. I want to read it into the RECORD. I want the country to know it. There is one paper which will carry what we say here. No matter how much the metropolitan press may emasculate what we say, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will carry exactly what we say, and it goes to the people sooner or later.

There is no authority higher than that of Washington, and when he has spoken in behalf of rewarding the soldier, over and above his pay, then we will defy the opponents of the bonus to produce a witness who is of the same class as he whom we produce. I do not know what other Senators have resolved, but I have reached this resolution and shall stand by it. While the tariff makers are here from day to day voting bonuses to the profiteers who made money, who made millions, who made billions, off the sacrifices of our soldiers in France—while these bonuses are being voted to the American manufacturers and the American trusts who stand at the headwaters of life and charge the people down below on the stream for that which shall make them live, that which conserves life, that which they must have to eat and to wear and to work with—while these bonuses are being granted by Congress to the profiteers of the war I shall do all in my power, God being my helper, to see that the man who carried the rifle shall have his bonus, too.

Not one additional tax would I put upon the American citizen. He is taxed to death now. If I had my way, I would either adopt the plan of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and make the foreign debt the basis of a soldier's bonus, or, preferable to that plan, in my judgment, would be, to cause the Government to reissue an amount of currency equal to that which has been called in and destroyed by the Federal Reserve Board, ruining our country by contraction of the currency in such colossal proportions as never before were known. If that money were reissued, over two thousand million dollars of it, it would do what it did when it was put in circulation; it would tingle through the veins of business like new blood in the bodily system; it would resurrect those industries that have died and have been buried; it would give employment to every idle hand; it would give hope to every despairing farmer.

Here is a letter from Fairfax City, Va., dated 24th of June, 1771:

SIR: Your letters of the 15th of December from Georgia, and 20th of April from Charlestown, came duly to hand. In answer to them, I have only to inform you that my advertisements which you referred to were issued in consequence of instructions from our late governor and council, and that I have nothing more to do in the affair than to receive and deliver to them the several claims of the respective officers and soldiers who embarked in the service of this colony in the year 1754 (under a proclamation of the then governor offering a reward of 200,000 acres of land to all those who should voluntarily engage in an expedition against the French, who were at that time encroaching on His Majesty's lands on the Ohio).

Some may think that this means that those volunteers were to be paid in land for their services. I wish to show, Mr. President, that this bounty in land was over and above their pay. It was a bounty pure and simple. Here it is:

Letter to Lord Dunmore—

Who was then the Governor of Virginia—

Mount Vernon, 3d April, 1775.

Omitting the first part, which is not important, the general trend of the letter being to urge the governor to redeem the promise made by Governor Dinwiddie in his proclamation of 1754. Washington quotes from that proclamation, at page 467 of the same volume 2 of the Writings of George Washington:

For an encouragement—

This is a quotation from the proclamation of the governor—

For an encouragement to all who shall voluntarily enter into the said service. I do hereby notify and promise, by and with the advice and consent of His Majesty's council of this colony, that over and above their pay—

Washington himself underscores those words—

over and above their pay 200,000 acres of His Majesty the King of Great Britain's lands, on the east side of the Ohio River, within this dominion * * * shall be laid off and granted to such persons who by their voluntary engagement and good behavior in the said service shall deserve the same.

There, Mr. President, is a bounty pure and simple. It is "over and above their pay." Here is a bonus, here is a bounty, here is a reward given to the soldiers for fighting whom? For fighting a lot of Indians, who probably had no arms except bows and arrows and tomahawks.

Our soldiers in the World War went abroad and faced the deadliest missiles that ever were hurled in war; they faced the perfected rifle; they faced the perfected cannon; they faced the terrible poisonous gas; they faced everything that the devils in hell could have faced. They were true to the test; and now this country, which promised them so much when they were being enrolled, which said to them as they were mustered under the flag, "Nothing that we can do will be too good for you when you come home"—this country is now treating those soldiers as if they were a lot of merely tolerated nuisances. They are almost begging their bread from door to door and street to street. It is a shame to the Republic to treat these soldiers in this way. Go on from day to day and vote your bonus to the war profiteers; go on and vote your bonus to the Powder Trust and the Steel Trust and the Salt Trust and the Cement Trust, and then wait and see what the people will say to you when they come to the ballot box in November.

On page 356 of volume 2 of the Writings of Washington there is another letter to Lord Dunmore and council, under date of 5th of November, 1772. In that letter General Washington is still urging the governor to keep faith with the soldiers. "Keep your word; do what you said you would do," that is the essence of the letter.

He sets out on page 357 the number of acres that each man should get:

Col. Joshua Fry's heir, being short of his full ninth at the last distribution, 7,232 acres.

George Washington's name comes next, and he is also short of his ninth and should have more land.

Then he goes on and gives a list of those who were short in the distribution and should have more. On page 458 he says that the shortage due to George Washington was 3,500 acres of land. And, mind you, that was over and above his pay.

Let no man contend that these soldiers were paid in land for their services. This is distinctly stated to have been over and above their pay, as a bonus, a bounty, a reward, a gratuity from a generous people grateful to the soldiers who had protected the border from the Indian's tomahawk and his torch.

We in our day, Mr. President, can not realize what it used to be out on the frontier in the West and in the great Northwest, when the English ministry were hiring the Indians to make war upon the scattered settlements, and when the head of a family, going to bed at night after a hard day's work clearing up his farm, did not know what hour of the night would arouse him with the Indians' war whoop or when the flames might enwrap his cabin and his family be slaughtered on the threshold. We have forgotten all that, and yet it does not take much imagination to recall the time when the border was the scene of unspeakable outrages day after day and night after night.

On page 361 of volume 10 of the Writings of George Washington I find a letter to John Witherspoon, dated Mount Vernon, November 10, 1784. That was after the Revolutionary War had ended. The eight years' struggle was over. No longer would northern troops or southern troops march barefooted over the frozen ground, leaving bloodstained footprints where they marched with naked feet; no longer would they shiver and hunger in camp for lack of clothing and lack of food. The great struggle was ended, and 3,000,000 American colonists, who had been aroused by the eloquence of Patrick Henry and of Samuel Adams and Dabney Carr and John Adams, had thrown off the shackles of a tyrannical king, and at last the thirteen American Colonies stood erect in the plenitude of State sovereignty, each one by name recognized by King George as free and independent States.

REVEREND SIR: The recourse which I have had to my papers since I returned home reminds me of a question which you asked me in Philadelphia respecting my lands to the westward of the Alleghany Mountains, to which I was unprepared at that time to give a decided answer, either as to the quantity I had to let or the terms upon which I would lease them.

Upon examination I find that I have patents under the signature of Lord Dunmore (while he administered the government of this State) for about 30,000 acres, and surveys for about 10,000 more, patents for which was suspended by the disputes with Great Britain which soon followed the return of the warrants to the land office.

That is a modest way of stating the Revolutionary War—"disputes with Great Britain"—the attempt of England to keep these American Colonies in subjection and to hold them down in their commerce with tariff laws which did not even allow an American manufacturer to make a horseshoe nail.

He says:

From this description of my lands, with the aid of Evan's or Hutchin's map of that country, a good general knowledge of their situation may be obtained by those who incline to become adventurers in the settlement of them; but it may not be improper to observe further that they were surveyed under the royal proclamation of 1763, granting to each commissioned and noncommissioned officer according to his rank, and to the private soldier certain quantities, and under a yet older proclamation from Mr. Dinwiddie, then lieutenant governor of the Colony, issued by the advice of his council to encourage and benefit the military adventurers of the year 1754, while the land office was shut against all other applicants. It is not reasonable to suppose, therefore, that those who had the first choice, had five years allowed them to make it and a large district to survey in, were inattentive either to the quality of the soil or the advantages of situation.

In a letter to Robert Stobo, dated November 27, 1771, General Washington said that each field officer was allowed a bonus of 15,000 acres; each captain, 9,000; each subaltern, 6,000; each cadet, 2,500; sergeant, 600; each corporal, 500; and each private soldier 400 acres apiece.

Again, writing to Edmund Randolph, then considered one of the ablest lawyers in America, and who was the private attorney of George Washington, under date of the 18th of March, 1784, he writes about his lands as follows:

The land was obtained under a proclamation of Mr. Dinwiddie, issued by the advice of his council February 19, 1754, for encouraging the raising of troops for an expedition to the Ohio. It was surveyed pursuant to warrants granted by Lord Dunmore and patented December 15, 1772.

This is in Virginia, Mr. President. It is not in the wilds of the Ohio. It is not on the banks of the Kanawha. It is in Virginia—10,990 acres in Fincastle County; 4,395, 2,448, and 2,314 in Botetourt County, one of the best counties in Virginia. There were more than 9,000 acres in Botetourt and 10,990 acres in Fincastle, every acre of which was over and above his pay, every acre of which was a bounty, every acre of which was a reward for his military services; and George Washington, a man of the highest sense of honor, had no scruples whatever about accepting it.

Here is what he said in writing to Israel Putnam—General Putnam—who is said to have galloped down a certain stairway during the Revolutionary War when the British were after him. It just so happened that there was no stairway there. The Daughters of the American Revolution, however, with a nice sense of what should have been, put the stairway there, and it is there now; and no doubt if it had been there at the time that General Putnam galloped down the hill he would have galloped down those very steps. In writing to General Putnam, under date of June 2, 1784, Washington says:

I wish it was in my power to give you a more favorable account of the officers' petition for lands on the Ohio and its waters than I am about to do. After this, and information respecting the establishment for peace, were my inquiries solely directed as I passed through Annapolis on my way to Philadelphia, but I could not learn that anything decisive had been done in either.

He says further:

At Princeton (before Congress left that place) I exerted every power I was master of and dwelt upon the arguments you have used to show the propriety of a speedy decision. Every member with whom I conversed acquiesced in the justice of the petition; all yielded or seemed to yield to the policy of it, but plead the want of cession of the land to act upon. This is made and accepted.

That referred, Mr. President, to the cession of the magnificent tract of land known as the Northwest Territory by the State of Virginia, which then owned it—the magnificent territory out of which several States were subsequently carved. These officers had the backing of Washington in asking for a bonus, a bounty, out of that land, and Congress finally yielded.

Washington was not only speaking collectively to the Congress but, according to his own statement in this letter to Gen. Israel Putnam, he was lobbying with each individual Member of Congress to donate that land to the officers and men, as they afterwards did.

Mr. President, on page 267 of volume 10 of the Writings of Washington will be found another letter to the President of the Congress of these thirteen independent States, dated 1783, urging Congress in the strongest terms to grant bounties to these officers and soldiers; but, not wishing to weary the Senate, I will conclude by reading from a lengthy letter which Washington addressed to the governors of all the States, when he came to disband his army. He issued this letter from his headquarters at Newburgh, on the 8th of June, 1783. The great soldier was about to sheathe his sword. The invincible army was about to disperse. The soldier who had left his plowshare in the field and had met the red line of Great Britain and had crushed it down in defeat was about to return to the peaceful pursuits of civil life; and while Washington himself—then a very wealthy man, partly on account of these bounties he had received in the Indian wars and in the French war, and partly on account of his marriage—would take no salary himself, he was urgent, insistent that the new Republic, independent at last after eight years of arduous struggle, should not prove itself ungrateful to those men who had borne its muskets, had made its marches, and had won its triumphs.

Here is what he said in that circular letter, almost equal if not quite equal to his farewell address, found at page 262 of volume 10 of the Writings of George Washington:

Rewards, in proportion to the aids the public derives from them, are unquestionably due to all its servants. In some lines the soldiers have perhaps generally had as ample a compensation for their services by the large bounties which have been paid to them, as their officers will receive in the proposed commutation; in others, if, besides the donation of lands, the payment of arrearages of clothing and wages (in which articles all the component parts of the army must be put upon the same footing), we take into the estimate the douceurs many of the soldiers have received, and the gratuity of one year's full pay, which is promised to all, possibly their situation (every circumstance being duly considered) will not be deemed less eligible than that of the officers. Should a further reward, however, be judged equitable, I will venture to assert, no one will enjoy greater satisfaction than myself, on seeing an exemption from taxes—for a limited time (which has been petitioned for in some instances), or any other adequate immunity or compensation granted to the brave defenders of their country's cause; but neither the adoption or rejection of this proposition will in any manner affect, much less militate against, the act of Congress, by which they have offered five years' full pay in lieu of the half pay for life, which had been before promised to the officers of the Army.

That is, for the soldiers—

* * * * * * *

Nothing but a punctual payment of their annual allowance can rescue them from the most complicated misery; and nothing could be a more melancholy and distressing sight than to behold those who have shed their blood or lost their limbs in the service of their country without a shelter, without a friend, and without the means of obtaining any of the necessaries or comforts of life, compelled to beg their daily bread from door to door. Suffer me to recommend those of this description belonging to your State to the warmest patronage of your excellency and your legislature.

As to the idea which, I am informed, has in some instances prevailed that the half pay and commutation are to be regarded merely in the odious light of a pension, it ought to be exploded forever.

Let the country listen to this:

Who does not remember the frequent declarations at the commencement of the war that we should be completely satisfied if, at the expense of one half, we could defend the remainder of our possessions?

Washington, the war being over, remembered what was said when the men were being called to the flag. He remembered what had been promised. He remembered how the country felt when it went into that struggle, 3,000,000 colonists against the greatest empire in the world, an empire which had lost battles but had never lost a war until she fought America. Battles she had lost all over the globe, wherever England's drum beat had been heard and wherever her thin line had been thrown out to fight, but she never lost a war until she lost two of them to us; and if she tackles us again, she will lose the third one. But, Mr. President, Washington had a long memory. He did not forget how the country talked to the soldier when it asked the soldier to come out from private life and shoulder a musket. Shall we forget? Have we forgotten?

What has become of all the songs that were sung, of all the speeches that were made, all the music that was heard, all the garlands that were entwined around the necks of those heroes who were about to leave their native soil to fight 3,000 miles from home? Has the country forgotten them? Are these departments treating these men as if they were half enemies? Is every doubt resolved against the soldier? Has the country become ungrateful? Is Congress forgetting the soldier and remembering only the manufacturer, who wants to increase his grapple on the throats of the American consumers? That is the real question here in the Senate, no matter who speaks or what he says.

MOB VIOLENCE AT HERRIN, ILL.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, with reference to the horrible Herrin, Ill., massacre, about which I made some remarks in the Senate on Saturday, I have an editorial which appeared in yesterday's Washington Post. It is entitled "From tragedy to travesty." I will read it. It is as follows:

FROM TRAGEDY TO TRAVESTY.

A coroner's jury in the enlightened State of Illinois has declared that responsibility for murder rests on those who arouse the enmity of men performing the act of killing. Miners on strike slaughtered a score or more of defenseless human beings and mutilated the dead bodies. The verdict of a jury, representing "the united sentiment of Williamson County," exonerates the butchers, puts the single direct charge of murder on one of the dead victims, who is said to have killed one of the attacking mob, and ironically recommends that an investigation be held to fix the blame for the massacre personally on individuals owning the mine where the riot was staged.

Comment is superfluous. How long are the mental processes which hold the killing of individuals by unions to be beyond punishment by law to go unchecked and uncorrected? That is the abstract question. The concrete one is whether the State of Illinois will let this case rest as it now stands—whether it will disgrace itself and humiliate the rest of the country by allowing wholesale murder to go without rebuke.

When I made my remarks in connection with this subject on Saturday last, I made the prediction that there would be nothing done about this horrible atrocity; that no punishment would be meted out to the perpetrators of it; and, from the very peculiar action of the coroner's jury which sat upon the bodies of the dead victims, it appears very probable that my prediction will prove to be true.

That massacre was one of the most atrocious assaults that has ever been made in this country on constitutional government, on the constitutional guaranty to every resident of the United States of the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; it is one of the worst acts of defiance to all law and government ever committed in this country. If that sort of thing is to continue and to go unpunished, constitutional government can not endure. If the time has come when that sort of thing can exist without punishment, without vindication of the law, constitutional government in this country is nearing its end.

That act was one of the most horrible and reprehensible that has ever disgraced the annals of this country. It is anarchy pure and simple, ruthless defiance of the Federal Government and State government, defiance of the Federal Constitution and the State constitution, defiance of all constituted law and authority. It substitutes for all thereof the lawless individual will and judgment of the perpetrators of the atrocity.

What is worse than the commission of the crime itself is the fact that the united populace of the county where it occurred appears to approve of it. The populace of Williamson County, Ill., appears to be unitedly and 100 per cent disloyal to the United States and its Constitution. There we have an instance of an entire county being in rebellion against the Government of the United States and its Constitution, and against the government of the State in which it is situate and its constitution as well, disloyal to both Federal and State Governments with no prospect of anything being done about it.

There has been a good deal said of late about the usurpations of the courts on the rights of the people, but there is little room to talk about other usurpations so long as such usurpations as this, upon not only the rights but the lives of people by lawless individuals can exist and go unrebuked and unpunished.

There is little room to talk about lynching in the South on account of heinous crimes so long as this sort of thing can be permitted to occur with impunity in other sections of the country and go unpunished. There is little use for us to talk about the atrocities of the Turks perpetrated upon the Armenians so long as a thing of this kind can happen in this country apparently without any punishment for it.

If this horrible crime and atrocious assault upon Government is to go unpunished, the dereliction of the officers who neglect to do their duty will be worse than the commission of the crime itself, and I see no indication of any intention on the part of the officials of the county in which this atrocity occurred, or of the officials of the State of Illinois, to mete out any punishment to the perpetrators of the shocking crime.

The belief of the perpetrators of this atrocious crime apparently is that men who want to work and do not belong to their union have no right to live, and that the penalty is death. These men constitute themselves the judge, court, jury, and executioner of their own self-made, private law. They will not themselves work and will not permit anybody else to do so. They put themselves above the law, above the Constitution, above society.

If that sort of thing can prevail in the United States, our boasted liberty and freedom of the individual and his constitutional rights amount to nothing. I predicted Saturday that the probability was that there would be no punishment for this offense; I again predict it; and if there be nothing done to remedy this awful wrong and to vindicate the law, either by Federal or State officials, I predict that it is going to create the greatest and most powerful wave of indignation amongst the law-abiding people of this country that the country has ever known. If the officials of the State of Illinois do nothing more than they have done, apparently, to uphold the dignity of the law; if they do nothing to punish this atrocious assault upon constitutional government and upon the lives and persons of peaceful people, the State of Illinois will not be entitled to a place in this Union of States and will be a disgrace to the Union. The public is waiting to see if this is a Government of law and order. The sequel is of tremendous importance.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 310, giving consent to an adjournment of the House, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

This is in a little different form from similar resolutions which have been offered heretofore on occasions of this kind, in that, while it is usual, when one of the Houses is about to adjourn, for the resolution to come from that House and go to the proper committee of the other House, this resolution has been offered in the Senate and referred to the Appropriations Committee, and is reported, to be effective when the business of the Congress has reached a point where it is proper for the House to adjourn.

The House desires to adjourn until the 8th of August, after the completion of certain work that must be done and after the final passage of certain bills which seem very important. That, of course, requires the consent of this body. Hence, after arranging with the floor leaders and managers on both sides, the resolution was offered and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and it is now reported back with a recommendation that it be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 310) submitted by Mr. CURTIS on the 26th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the consent of the Senate is hereby given to an adjournment of the House of Representatives to Tuesday, August 8, 1922.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I understand this resolution was presented originally here in the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Just a moment, please. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming if the House has requested this action?

Mr. CURTIS. I offered the resolution at the request of the floor leader of the House, after consultation at the other end of the Capitol with Members on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. POMERENE. Would it not be a little more regular if the request were to come in the formal way, by a resolution duly passed by the House?

Mr. CURTIS. That matter was discussed with them, and they preferred this course. In fact, they drew the resolution, because they thought if they passed a resolution and sent it to the Senate, we might pass it, and that might cause an adjournment on their part before they were ready to adjourn. There are certain matters in conference and certain bills which they want to get through before they take their adjournment, and they will simply take advantage of this resolution at the proper time, if it is passed in this way.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not know that I am going to object to it, but to give our consent to the House adjourning before there is any formal presentation of that request by the House strikes me as a little out of order.

Mr. CURTIS. They want to have it handled in this way so that when they complete their business they can adjourn without sending a resolution to the Senate. If they should send one here now and we should adopt the resolution fixing their adjournment on a particular day, they might not have their business completed and be ready to adjourn at that time, which would necessitate a reconsideration of the resolution. As I stated a moment ago, this resolution may be passed in this form, as it was drawn by Members of the House and introduced at their request. Members on both the Democratic and Republican sides of the House have talked to me in reference to it.

Mr. POMERENE. It looks to me a little like a repetition of the old story, "Here is your hat; what's your hurry?"

Mr. CURTIS. They ask for it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator not to push the resolution now. I have not had a chance to consult with members of my own party in the House as to their position on the resolution. Of course, there is a great deal of important legislation now pending in the House of Representatives. Whether they desire to adjourn and leave that legislation to await reassembling after the adjournment is, of course, a question for the House to determine. I would not desire to express an opinion as to what they should do, but I would not be willing to foreclose the proposition, so far as my party colleagues in the House are concerned, without knowing their viewpoint. Therefore I could not consent to the proposition coming up by unanimous consent.

Mr. CURTIS. Very well, Mr. President; let the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to find out what their position is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, my understanding was that the House Members who were interested in having the Muscle Shoals matter determined at an early date wanted more time to consider the proposition, and that while they were marking time in the House with not much to do they would have a chance to thresh out all of the bids over there and decide what disposition they would make of the Muscle Shoals project. The very next day we are asked to consent for the House to adjourn. I would like to have a chance to look into the matter, as my colleague has suggested. It strikes me that the House would want to stay here and see if it can not settle upon a policy regarding the great Muscle Shoals project. It is a great national project and this matter ought to be determined as soon as possible. Let the House act now on the Ford offer. Mr. Ford is entitled to know whether his offer is going to be accepted or not. The farmers of the South and West are interested in early action on this matter, and they want favorable action on the Ford offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution has been laid on the table.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say in this connection that I understand the expectation of the House is not to adjourn for two or three weeks, until important matters are completed which are being considered there now. I have no information and no intimation which would lead me to think that the matter of Muscle Shoals is connected with the resolution in any way.

I wish to say with reference to the adjournment of the House that the promise of the managers is that there shall be no adjournment, of course, until all appropriation matters are finished, and a number of important matters which I think they have agreed on both sides of the House shall be taken up and disposed of, so far as they are concerned, before adjournment.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me ask the Senator a question. As I understood him a moment ago, he stated to the Senate that his understanding was that the House would continue in session for two weeks or thereabouts.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; or for a very considerable time.

Mr. POMERENE. That being so, what special reason is there for action upon the resolution now?

Mr. WARREN. The special reason which seems to exist upon the other side, very important to them, is for this very arrangement of their program and keeping a quorum for the finishing of the necessary legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. Did the Senator mean they are going to stay in session on the other side two or three weeks now, or did he mean when they returned here August 8 they will be in session two or three weeks?

Mr. WARREN. They have to remain in session until certain legislation which they have over there is completed, which, of course, includes the appropriation bills from this side. They may adjourn three days at a time, but they will not adjourn for a lengthy time. I do not know when the adjournment takes place—what period it will cover. It may be for 5 days or 15 days.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood they thought they would get rid of their bills by Friday and adjourn. That is why I thought the Senator was mistaken.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not understand why the resolution does not come from the House as a House resolution. I do not believe there would be any disposition on the part of anybody here to object. I am sure I would be glad to agree to a resolution to permit them to adjourn if they wanted to adjourn, but we are extending an invitation to the House to adjourn before they have said anything about it. I am afraid they would not take it kindly if we should say, "You fellows can quit any time you have a mind to."

Mr. CURTIS. As I stated, the resolution was introduced at the request of Members of the House on both sides, and it was drawn by Members of the House. They prefer that it shall be presented in this way rather than send a resolution here from the House, for fear that we might act on the resolution and thus cause them to adjourn at a day certain when they would not be ready to adjourn.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I thought the Senator had yielded.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I had to yield; there was not any question about it. I give later consent so as to validate the thing that happened before. So I say I yield to the Senator.

I heard what the Senator stated; I heard him before. He has said it twice in my hearing now. He repeated it very accurately the second time, and has done a very good job of it. I am not criticizing him in any respect, but I still assert the House has made no request. There seems to be an idea among some—that means the House—that if somebody—that means the Senate—asks it, they should adjourn. They ought to get over that. "Introduced here at the request," the Senator said first, "of the House, or some Members of the House," and they assume that they are the House, and we assume they are the House, and we put it through, and they are the House when they go back to the rank and file of it again.

But the Constitution says neither House shall adjourn for a longer time than three days without the consent of the other House. If the House of Representatives want to adjourn for more than three days, they have to get our consent. I am not going to assume that the House do want to adjourn because somebody says somebody else at somebody's request introduces a resolution in the Senate giving that permission.

There is nothing wrong about the House adjourning. I should think they ought to adjourn, since the Senate is going to stay in session the balance of the year with tariff legislation and other things like it. It is perfectly proper that they should want to adjourn. I am glad to give my consent to permit them to adjourn. But I want them to ask for it. The Constitution goes on that theory. We have no official notice here that the House want to adjourn. We may send the resolution there and they will say to us, like they said about the amendment on which we had all agreed. We thought we represented the Senate and the House about Muscle Shoals, that we should appropriate enough money to go on with the work; but when it got over to the House we were charged with being hypocrites, and our amendment was said to be a piece of hypocrisy. What will they say now when our messenger goes into the House and says, "The Senate has passed the following resolution: That the House is at liberty to adjourn when it wants to adjourn"? Will not that be considered by the House as an insult? Will they not call it worse than hypocrisy? If it comes back here, will we all plead guilty, like the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry did yesterday to the charge when they voted that "it was hypocrisy, and we agree with the House"?

If the House want to adjourn, there is a constitutional way for them to get the consent of the Senate, and when they present that request I for one would be in favor of granting it to them at once. I think they are justified in wanting to adjourn, but not because some man in the House, whose name even is not here disclosed, comes to see the Senator from Kansas and says the House want to adjourn. If the House want to adjourn, let them say so, and until they do I am not in favor of passing any resolution extending the consent of the Senate. We mix up in somebody else's quarrel in that way. They may have a great fuss over there as to whether they shall adjourn or not when they get the resolution before the House. We would see the charge made in the House by perhaps those who are opposed to an adjournment that "this was all fixed up in advance and pushed through the Senate before we were consulted; we were not considered at all, and the Senate says we can adjourn until a certain day." It may be they will want to adjourn until the day after August 8, or perhaps they will not want to adjourn that long. Let them determine that and make their request of the Senate and I am sure no Senator will object. Until that time comes I am opposed to any resolution originating in the Senate granting a consent that has not been asked.

NIAGARA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, yesterday the Vice President handed down the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 3458, a bill providing for the building of a bridge over Niagara River. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] objected at that time to concurring in the amendments of the House. He has since advised me that he will not now object. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the House be again laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3458) to authorize the Niagara River Bridge Co. to reconstruct its present bridge across the Niagara River between the State of New York and the Dominion of Canada or to remove its present bridge and construct, maintain, and operate a new bridge across the said river, which were, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "heretofore, under lawful authority then existing"; on page 1, line 6, to strike out all after "Canada" down to and including "States," in line 8; on page 2, to strike out lines 9 to 18, inclusive; and page 2, line 19, to strike out "3" and insert "2."

Mr. CALDER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], who has stepped out of the Chamber for a moment, desires to address the Senate in favor of the committee amendment now under consideration. While waiting for him to return, I wish to call attention to the fact that the record prepared by the Tariff Commission shows that during a period of 15 years there was only one year when the imports were more than the exports of fresh beef. The record shows that during the last 15 years the exports varied from twice to fifteen times as much as the imports of fresh beef. I ask that the table which contains the facts to which I have referred, as to the exports of beef during the last 15 years, may be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to give the figures for the past year?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In reply to the Senator from Ohio I will state that in the year 1921 the total number of pounds of beef produced in this country were 6,194,000,000. The imports were 27,000,000, about four-tenths of 1 per cent of the production. The exports were 52,000,000 pounds. So the Senator will observe that in the last year the exports were almost twice as much as the imports of fresh beef. In one year—1916—the imports were but 19,000,000 and the exports 287,000,000 pounds, but in no year except one did the imports exceed the exports.

Mr. President, may I have permission to have the table to which I have referred inserted in the RECORD?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection permission is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

[1] Includes differences between quantities in storage at beginning and end of year.

Since the passing of the big western ranges, cattle raising and beef production suffered a steady decline until the advent of the World War. The totals show that the war greatly stimulated production until the end of 1918. Since that year there has been rapid falling off, the 1921 total being over a billion pounds less than that of 1918.

Exports of beef at one time formed a large and important branch of our foreign trade, but by 1913 they had largely disappeared and foreign beef began to come in. The exports were large from 1915 to 1918 solely because of the war needs and have since fallen to a pre-war basis.

Imports of meat previous to 1913 were so small that they were not enumerated separately in the commerce reports. Imports of beef in 1914, however, were quite considerable. At this period the sources of cheap beef in the Southern Hemisphere, especially Argentina, had developed enormously, and they had in fact supplanted the United States in the overseas trade with Europe.

Consumption of beef, as seen in the table, was at a low point in 1915, having decreased 24 pounds per head of the population during the preceding eight years from 1907. Since the war it has receded 7 pounds per head.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, a great many of the paragraphs of the agricultural schedule are substantially a renewal of similar provisions of the emergency tariff law, in some instances increasing the rate and in other instances lightly reducing the rate. No measure that has been before Congress in many years has received quite so much discussion in this Chamber as did the emergency tariff law and the items contained therein. At the time of the original enactment of that measure there was a pretty thorough discussion of it; twice, I think, we have extended the time of its operation, and both times there was renewed discussion. So it may be said that the provisions of the agricultural schedule of the pending bill, which embrace substantially the same commodities as does the emergency tariff act, have been pretty thoroughly thrashed out; and I want to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that, so far as I am concerned, and I hope, so far as other Senators on this side of the Chamber are concerned, our discussion of these matters will be as brief as possible because we have so thoroughly considered them heretofore.

I have never approved of the rates provided in the emergency tariff act. I did not do so at the time the bill was before the Senate. I think the rates which the pending bill carries upon agricultural products are less justified and more absurd than the original rates in the emergency tariff law; first, because the time that has intervened since that measure went into effect has demonstrated, in most instances, its ineffectiveness to accomplish the purpose and the professed object of its promoters; and, in the second place, such rates as have been effective have shown themselves to be entirely sufficient without further increase.

Throughout the discussion upon the pending bill, whenever we on this side of the Chamber have been able to show to the Senate a situation such as exists with reference to most of the items in the emergency tariff act, a number of thoughtful Senators on the other side have now and then deemed it proper to warn the majority of the Finance Committee that they could not be expected to support increases in rates in those instances where it was shown that there were large exports and practically no imports. That situation will be found to exist, I am quite sure, as to many of the items in the pending bill which are also covered in the emergency tariff act. There were no imports of consequence of agricultural products at the time of the enactment of the emergency tariff law, and there have been none since. There were considerable quantities of exports at the time of its enactment, and those exports probably have since increased.

Mr. President, some of the rates in the emergency tariff law have been effective. It was well known at the time they were proposed and adopted that they would be effective in increasing prices. Such is true of wool. I think the rates imposed upon wool in the emergency had an effect upon the price of wool. It is utterly impossible that they should not have had, in view of the fact that we import probably not quite half of the wool which we consume. The same thing is true of sugar, and probably of dairy products; I am not quite certain as to that; but, with the exception of a few products that may be counted certainly on the fingers of two hands, and I think on the fingers of one hand, the rates of the emergency tariff have had practically no effect in advancing prices of agricultural products. They will have no effect if they are continued, and they will have no effect if the rates of duty are increased. That is very largely true of the item that we have now under consideration.

It was said by the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] that if these rates were impotent and did not accomplish any good in the way of enhancing prices because there were no imports, they would do no harm. Mr. President, that is true sometimes and sometimes that is not true. It is certainly not true with respect to rates of this character. Represenatives of certain interests upon this floor, who want to placate or satisfy the farmers of their sections and want to have them believe that something is being done here in their behalf, ask for and obtain these rates that are of no value to the farmer, and then, because of the fact that they have secured them for the farmer, are enabled to go back home and claim to have accomplished something of value for the farmer. The representatives of these interests enter into not an agreement but a concert of action by which day after day they vote "yea" on excessive and oppressive rates that will be effective upon the multitude of articles which the farmer must of necessity buy, either in connection with the operation of his business or as a part of his living necessities.

It is for that reason, Mr. President, that I should like to see the rates on agricultural products go out of the bill. They furnish a pretext of helpfulness to the farmer, and they furnish an inducement to him to—not being in possession of accurate information—give his consent and his approval to the action of his Representatives in voting for high duties which he will have to pay on other commodities. I think, as a matter of fact, it will be found that, while a very small percentage of the farmers, as a result of the proposed rates on their products, may in rare instances have the price of certain of their products advanced to a slight extent, on the other hand the additional amount which they will have to pay on other commodities by reason of the action of his Representatives, with his sanction and consent, because he has been led to believe the rates on agricultural products would be helpful to him, will probably be five or six times as much as he profits by the duties on agricultural products. The farmer in gaining $1 will lose $5.

I have had a practical demonstration of how farmers have been misled with reference to this matter. On a recent occasion, Mr. President, a gentleman from my State, engaged in the growing of peanuts, came to see me to urge me to support the emergency tariff rate on peanuts. I asked him what had been the usual selling price of peanuts in years gone by, and he stated what the price had been. I then asked him what the price was at that time—and the interview occurred this year—and he said, "At the barn door from 3 to 3½ cents, probably." Then I said, "The rate upon peanuts in the emergency tariff act is 3 cents a pound, so that manifestly you have not, although the act has been in operation now nearly a year, derived any benefit from it whatever, because, according to your statement, peanuts are selling lower to-day than ever before; the farmer is getting less than ever before, and the total amount he is getting for his peanuts is but a half a cent more than the rate fixed in the emergency tariff act." He went home satisfied that the duty on peanuts meant nothing to him. That happens in a great many instances, Mr. President.

I can take the last report just brought out by the Tariff Commission and, adopting their own figures, I think I can show that there has been practically no increase in the price of the chief agricultural products, leaving out the two or three items which I have mentioned which have been getting some slight benefit from the tariff rates since the adoption of the emergency tariff act. Therefore I say the emergency tariff act has been utterly ineffective. I know it will be continued. No argument that can be made against it will prevail, as has already been demonstrated. So I was satisfied to let those rates practically be extended again. Although I thought it bad policy, I did not wish to take any time; but, Mr. President, notwithstanding the fact that at the time the emergency tariff act was adopted every Senator in this Chamber thought that we had gone to the very limit of protection; that the rates were exceptionally high and found no parallel in our tariff legislation of the past, the Finance Committee, for some inconceivable reason—for there is no reason resulting from any change in the situation with reference to these items since the emergency tariff act was first adopted—have seen fit in many instances to make a tremendous increase in the rates.

The item which we now have under consideration is an illustration of that. The rate in the emergency tariff act on fresh beef is, I believe, 2 cents a pound. It is proposed now to raise that rate to 3½ cents a pound; that is, it is proposed practically to double the emergency tariff rate upon this particular item.

Where is the justification for that increase—an increase of 75 per cent over the emergency tariff rate which I have just said at the time of its adoption was regarded as an excessive rate, considered by the rule by which we ordinarily measure tariff rates and have heretofore imposed tariff duties? Why has the rate been almost doubled? Has there been any increase in importations since the emergency tariff was adopted? Is there anything in the change in the importations with reference to this article or in the present importations of this article that makes it necessary to raise that rate?

Now let us see how that is.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], in his very able and very clear exposition of the lack of justification for this increase, has called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the present importation of fresh beef is less than four-tenths of 1 per cent of the production of fresh beef in the United States, and that contemporaneously with those small, insignificant, and negligible imports there have been exports of more than twice the imports. Now, I want any friend of protection who is advocating that system because he believes it is an honest and fair policy, and one which should be applied to the industries of America, to tell me upon what theory he justifies raising an already high rate, when the facts show that under that existing rate importations into this country have fallen to the low level of four-tenths of 1 per cent of the domestic production? What good will it do to exclude that little, infinitesimal quantity of imports from our markets? Can they possibly affect the price? Can anybody believe that when we are producing in this country practically 7,000,000,000 pounds of fresh beef the importation of 27,000,000 pounds, four-tenths of 1 per cent of the production here, can possibly affect injuriously the price of the domestic product? And can any sensible man believe that by cutting off that 27,000,000 pounds that come in we will thereby increase the price of the 7,000,000,000 pounds that we produce in this country?

If that be so, if the emergency tariff rate has been so effective as to reduce the imports to these insignificant figures, upon what theory can the Committee on Finance ask the Senate practically to double the existing rates? It can not be upon the theory of absolute exclusion, because exclusion under these circumstances would not affect the American price. There must be some other object than that of keeping imports out of this country. What that object is I do not know, but I suspect that the object is to induce the farmers of this country to believe that the Republican Party, especially at this time, is zealous in their behalf.

Therein, I say, is the vice of this whole thing. It is a manifest, a transparent, attempt to deceive the farmer, and to what end, Mr. President? I say to a vicious end; to the end that they may induce him to forego his opposition—and it was the strongest single influence in the country—to forego his opposition and resistance to the excessive rates that they propose to hand out to the manufacturing industries of this country. To this end, Mr. President, a propaganda has been begun in the agricultural districts such as never was carried on before, financed, I have no doubt, largely by certain great high-protective tariff organizations in the North and the East, to delude the farmer into the foolish idea that he can be as much benefited by these high tariff duties as the manufacturer has been shown to have been benefited; that as the manufacturers have accumulated vast fortunes through the tariff, so the farmers may likewise, if they are given protection, accumulate vast fortunes. I think the American farmers have too much sense to believe such bunk.

Mr. President, as I have said, there are rare cases where you can enhance the price of a farm product by placing a duty upon it, but that is the very case where you enhance the value of the manufactured product by putting a duty upon it. It is where there is no trust but an insufficiency of production in this country. Where there is a trust you can also in manufacturing, and you could likewise in agriculture, help them by putting on a duty, although they might be producing the entire amount that this country needs and consumes; because that would enable them, being a trust able to fix their prices, to advance their prices further and still be exempt from any foreign competition. But the cases in which the American farmer is producing less than the American demand for his products are exceedingly rare. They are confined to a very few articles. Upon the whole, the American farmer is producing a great deal more of his product than this market will take, and under those circumstances it becomes a matter of as much importance to him to have a market for his surplus as to have a market for that part which is consumed in the United States.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. GOODING. I might say to the Senator from North Carolina that if we had had proper protection on farm products, the same as there has been on manufactures for a great many years, we would not have had any surplus of farm products in this country. We would have a balanced condition. We would be producing all the sugar that we consume in America. We would still be growing hemp in America. We would grow more flax in America. We would have about 80,000,000 sheep instead of 35,000,000 sheep. So that if we had had proper protection for these industries instead of having them on the free list and destroyed, we would have had a balanced condition in this country, so that there would not be the great surplus that we have now.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have been hearing that appealing story about sugar and wool for the past 30 years. We have been told: "If you will just give us protection, we will produce all that is necessary." There has been but a very short period of time during that long stretch of the years when sugar has not been tremendously protected, and for the most of that period of time wool has been protected; and neither the production of sugar nor the production of wool and sheep in this country have seemed to prosper and grow any faster under protection than under free trade. But, Mr. President, of course the policy of the Senator, if pursued, would restrict the products of the soil of this great domain of ours—the richest upon the face of the earth when you consider it as a whole, where the climate and the soil and every other condition lend themselves as nowhere else in the world to agricultural production, a country which to-day very largely supplies the demands for food and agricultural raw materials of the rest of the world, especially the European Continent—the Senator's policy would lead to a restriction of the efforts of agriculture in every line of endeavor and enterprise to the particular wants of the American people.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina further yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SIMMONS. Just a minute further, and I will yield the floor to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in the case of agriculture there is no such thing as restricting the farmer's products to the limited demand of this country. It would be an idiotic policy and would mean stagnation. It would mean that millions of acres of our fertile lands would grow up and become idle and useless and scores of our greatest factories would of necessity close down. We have a great population here in this country. We must have something for them to do. They must labor in the fields or they must labor in the factory. We are now "quantity producers" and must have a foreign market for our surplus. In many, many lines of industrial production we long ago passed the point of a sufficient domestic consumption, and it is imperative that we now reach out in the world for markets for our surplus manufactured products.

If an undue proportion of the people of the United States shall go into manufacturing, then it will be but a short time before we will be producing everything in the shop and the factory in excess of our demands, and we will be entirely dependent upon the world in order to keep the wheels going. If an excessive proportion of the people go into agriculture and we limit the market for our agricultural products to the United States, we will soon find that there will be such a superabundance of products in this country that the prices will fall below starvation prices. We must either have a foreign market for these agricultural products, and a large and ever-extending foreign market for our surplus agricultural products, or our farm population will have to come to the city and go into the factory, or they will be producing surpluses which will be thrown back upon the domestic market and destroy the prices and values of their products.

I am thinking not only of the American market for the manufacturer and for the farmer; I am thinking equally of the foreign market, because it is as plain as daylight to me that wherever a large surplus is produced and must be sold elsewhere in this country the domestic price is going to be measured by the foreign price. Tariff or no tariff, that is an inexorable rule. When the foreign market fails us, then we always have a glutted market at home and always a reduced price for the farmers' products.

Mr. President, I have indulged in these general observations, of course, not because I do not wish the farmer to have his share, if it will be of benefit to him, along with the manufacturer; but I want to say to my Republican friends that even if you admit that the farmer can be helped by these duties which you have imposed, you have been less friendly to him in measuring them than you have been to the manufacturer.

One Senator has claimed that the farm bounties amount to over 21 per cent. He means that would be the average if all the rates were operative. But when you consider the fact that only a very few of them will be operative, or have been operative since the emergency tariff bill was passed, you will find that the average rate would be very much below that.

One other point, Mr. President, and I shall be through. I want to say that in every case, as I have been able to study the bill and understand it—I may have missed some particular case, because there are a great many items in the bill—in every instance where, in my judgment, the rates upon agricultural products will be effective in the direction of enabling the farmer to advance his price they are rates on products which are not grown generally by the farmers throughout the country. They are products grown or produced only by a relatively small number of farmers in particular localities. That is true of wool. Even if these duties shall help the woolgrower by increasing his price, the number of woolgrowers in this country compared to the number of farmers in this country is small, indeed, and whatever advantage may come to the woolgrower by reason of these duties will be a burden to a much greater extent imposed upon the great majority of farmers in the United States who do not produce wool.

Likewise with reference to sugar. In the State of Louisiana and a few western States, if the rate on sugar is increased to the extent proposed in this bill, certainly to the further extent the Senator from Utah will ask that it be increased, the sugar producers, embracing only a small number of farmers, relatively speaking, will be benefited; but to the extent that they are helped, and to a much greater extent the American farmers generally, who do not participate one particle in those benefits, will be burdened. So that we see, with reference to the few articles, how the tariff will be operative; a small number of the farmers will get a benefit, while the great majority of farmers will suffer much more in consequence of those increases.

We know that the duty on wool is very much more than this 20 per cent referred to, and that the duty on sugar is probably more than that, although I have not calculated it; but if the general farmer, who does not produce wool or sugar, will be burdened by those rates to the very same extent or a much greater extent than the producers of those products will be benefited, what are we to say about the burden which the farmers of the United States are going to be asked to assume by the votes of men in this Chamber who claim to be their friends? What shall we say of the additional burden that is going to be placed upon the farmers by an increase in the duties upon practically every manufactured article which they consume, and must purchase, by an increase in the average rate of duty from 24 to at least 66⅔ per cent? Recent estimates, I think, have placed the duties in this bill as high as 75 per cent on the average.

No man has yet quite adequately estimated, in my judgment, the greatly increased burdens which will be imposed upon the farmers by these rates for which their professed friends here are voting.

I do know that the American farmers consume about one-half of the production of this country, and I do know that it is estimated that the ultimate retail price of these products, which is the price the farmer pays, by virtue of the duties which will be effective on the manufactured products which the farmer buys, will reach at least $3,000,000,000, and a billion and a half of that burden will be flung upon the farmers of the United States, who are engaged in the most depressed industry in the country, the one great occupation which found itself in a state of bankruptcy within a year after the recession of the great tide of prosperity which swept over us during the war. For a little effective duty on sugar and wool, and a few other farm products, which will slightly help a mere handful of farmers in this country, relatively speaking, even the friends of the farmer here, and especially his "professional" friends, are going to vote to cast upon his shoulders, as the purchaser and the consumer of one-half of the manufactured product consumed in this country, a burden of, certainly, more than a billion dollars.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, before voting on this amendment I desire to offer a few observations.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GOODING. I would like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. KENDRICK. I ask the Senator to withhold his request if he will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield for that purpose.

Mr. KENDRICK. I want to hurry along, and I shall keep the Senate just a few minutes.

It was not my intention to have anything to say upon this particular schedule because of my personal interest in this industry, and for that reason I come to the task of answering a few of the statements made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and others on this particular schedule without anything like satisfactory preparation. As one of those more or less familiar with the needs of this industry it becomes necessary to say a word in behalf of the millions of men engaged in the live-stock business.

In the course of his remarks the Senator from Massachusetts made this statement: "This schedule is entirely indefensible." I have no hesitation in saying that such a statement is based upon either a lack of information or misinformation. If all the facts connected with the process of production in this industry were known, the schedule is not only defensible but it is justified by every economic and business principle.

The Senator asked the question as to how it would be possible to destroy an industry of this kind, involving such an enormous volume of production. I am not going to deal extensively in figures, as I am going to talk only a little time; but I want to give the Senator a suggestion of the decline in the production of cattle between the years 1900 and 1920.

In 1910 we had of beef cattle 50,000,000 head. I give the even figures. In 1920 we had 41,000,000 head.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield.

Mr. GOODING. Probably among all the Senators in this body there is no man who has had greater experience in the live-stock industry than the Senator from Wyoming. I should like very much to suggest the absence of a quorum, so that Senators may hear a discussion of the live-stock industry by one who has grown up in the industry and has made it a life study and a life business.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I again ask the Senator from Idaho to withhold his call of a quorum because of my lack of preparation to deal with the subject properly, and because also of my anxiety to hurry consideration of the bill. We have had one call after another for a quorum and by the time the call has ended there were fewer Senators in the Chamber than there were when the call began. I want to say here that so far as the Senator from Wyoming is concerned he ought to be fairly well informed on the tariff bill, because as a listener he has not infrequently been the sole survivor.

Mr. GOODING. I think we ought to bring more Senators to the Chamber to listen to the Senator discuss the question. However, the modesty of the Senator causes me to withdraw my request.

Mr. KENDRICK. As I said, in 1900 we had 50,000,000 beef cattle. In 1910 we had 41,000,000, and because of the increased activity and encouragement that producers had to redouble their efforts contingent upon the war and after the war there was an increase of about 2,000,000 head, making 43,000,000 in 1921. These figures are better understood when we consider them in connection with the fact that during the intervening time from 1900 to 1920, as I recall the figures, our population had increased about 20,000,000, which suggests a very much smaller per capita supply of beef products. In 20 years we had increased our population 20,000,000 people and we had decreased our number of beef cattle about 7,000,000.

As another illustration of how the industry has been affected by the reconstruction period, I want to give a few figures in reference to the decline in the value of the product. In 1921 the meat animals, as marketed through the central markets of the country, returned to the producers $1,968,000,000 as against $2,913,000,000 in 1920, showing a shrinkage in the income of live-stock producers of nearly $1,000,000,000 that year. The cattle producers contributed about $447,000,000, swine producers $460,000,000, and the sheepmen $37,000,000.

In addition to the losses which the flockmasters were compelled to take in marketing their sheep, they lost millions of dollars on their wool. It will take a decade of high prices under normal conditions for the flockmasters to wipe out the disasters of the last three years which reduced the flocks in Wyoming from 4,000,000 in 1916 to 2,000,000 in 1921. In 1919 it cost the Wyoming flockmaster 48 cents per pound to produce his wool. In 1920, owing to the drought of the year before followed by a winter of unprecedented severity, it cost him 67 cents a pound to grow his wool.

Closely following the physical disasters of 1919 and 1920 came the break in prices in May, 1920. During the early part of that month wool sold as high as 60 cents per pound. Suddenly and without warning eastern buyers were withdrawn from the field and wool remained unsalable for many months; finally the greater part of the 1920 clip was sold at prices which ranged from 11 to 15 cents net to the grower, after he had paid marketing costs.

I quote from a statement made before the Interstate Commerce Commission by Dr. W. S. McClure, of Nampa, Idaho, a widely known authority on the production of mutton and wool:

> In 1918 I sold my wool for 60 cents a pound. In 1919 I consigned it, as was the custom, to a cooperative wool warehouse and storage company. I received an advance of 35 cents a pound on the wool. I, of course, had to pay the freight and handling expenses, so that the charges against that wool—and it is not sold yet—approach 45 cents a pound. I am willing at this time to give the warehouse holding my 1919 wool that clip and my 1920 wool and 1921 wool to make up what I now owe on that one year's clip.

In other words, the losses incurred on the product for the year 1919 were so great that to discharge his debt the producer must surrender not only the product of that year but the product of the two succeeding years as well. Men who were out of debt on January 1, 1920, a year later, could not have sold their flocks for enough to pay off what they owed for running them during that time.

It is not an exaggeration to say that at the beginning of the present year the average maintenance per head on Wyoming sheep was five or six dollars, so that it will take a long time for the sheepman to pay out and begin to make money for himself even if conditions continue to improve under an adequate protective tariff.

Mr. President, Wyoming has for many years been the greatest wool and mutton producing State in the Nation. Woolgrowing is one of the basic industries of the State. The men who are engaged in the industry are home builders and contribute in a noteworthy way to the development of the State. So important is the influence which their industry has upon general business conditions that unless it is prosperous the merchant and business man do not prosper.

It is hard to realize the vicissitudes and hardships incident to the sheep industry. There is scarcely a winter passes that does not have its story of disasters which have cost the owners of flocks the savings of a lifetime.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, I believe, provides for a reduction of 1½ cents per pound on fresh beef.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It proposes to restore the House rate.

Mr. KENDRICK. Then it proposes to reduce the Senate committee rate 1½ cents per pound. I want to say to the Senate that the differential in freight rates in marketing the products of the country on the Atlantic seaboard in favor of foreign producers as against domestic producers is equivalent, as nearly as I can figure it out, to about 1 cent per pound on the product. I am going to give the exact figures on that particular point as nearly as I have been able to get them. It has been somewhat difficult to secure the actual ocean freight rates, but from points in Argentina to Boston and other Atlantic ports the freight rate during the last week or two has been as low as $1.08 per hundred pounds.

The freight rate from Omaha, which is one of our largest western markets, to New York is $1.34, and the rate per hundred pounds on live stock on the hoof from the Rocky Mountain territory—that is, the eastern part of the cattle-producing territory—to Omaha is about 50 cents per hundred pounds. There would be a still higher rate from points farther west, like points in Idaho. I make this statement to show that there is a protection or an advantage in favor of the foreign producer as against our meat products coming from far western points. The freight rates are that much higher and give him that much of an advantage over the western producer.

There were some statements made here yesterday and perhaps this morning in connection with the quality of beef produced in other countries when delivered in this country, the suggestion being, as I recall the statement, that the beef was of an unsatisfactory kind or one that would not compete with our domestic products.

Of course, I believe it would not compete with our grain-fed beef, because, as I have been informed, there are no imports of grain-fed cattle into the country; but the grass-fed cattle produced in South America and Australia, and the grass-fed sheep and lambs, as I have been informed, are more or less on a par with those which we are producing in this country. They are in every sense as good. The herds and flocks are bred to the point of producing the best quality of beef and mutton. They come from ranges equally as good as ours and in every way they are competitive in quality.

Mr. President, the question of protection on these products is the all-important thing. That is the point around which the whole question hinges. My faith is strong in the economic principle of protection of home industry, and I believe this principle is as logical as any Senator can advance on this floor who argues for free trade or even for a tariff for revenue only. My viewpoint is that protection of our commodities is not necessarily in the interest of the producer. It should be the fundamental policy of the country to insure an adequate supply of its essential products without having to depend on foreign countries to any greater extent than is necessary.

The Senator from Massachusetts a moment ago discussed the question of a tariff on sugar. I would like to ask the Senator, who has had opportunity or occasion to think of the question of a tariff on sugar, if he would be entirely willing to have our domestic sugar production eliminated and in such event to become dependent upon a foreign monopoly or upon foreign production for this most essential product? I believe on that point hinges a good deal of the difference in the views of Senators. We are certainly well enough informed, without having the figures, to know that our producers of sugar in this country, not only the producers of sugar from cane but the producers of sugar from beets in the West, can not compete with foreign countries in the production.

As an illustration of the direct and practical effect of the way the tariff acts on sugar production, let me say this: We have a sugar factory in my town, a small city of 12,000 people. The effect of that factory has been to increase tremendously the population of the community, to employ hundreds of people, and it has had the direct effect of increasing the value of farm land throughout the entire irrigated section to the extent of $20 to $25 per acre. Yet the men who have their money invested in that factory have never up to this time, as I have reason to know, received a penny in dividends upon their investment.

Can anybody doubt whatsoever the wisdom and the practical benefits derived from that kind of an industry in our country as against the plan of sending to a foreign land every dollar involved in the purchase of the product? The same thing is largely true of many other of the commodities of which I have occasion to know.

At the time of the World War the supplies of mutton and lamb and of frozen beef shipped into this country in addition to the surplus of our own supply, which accumulated because there was not a demand for it to feed our troops and the troops of our allies, literally ruined the domestic market for those products for which, according to the figures already given, the value and price were reduced about 50 per cent in one year's time. It is a well-known fact that of our normal production of live stock we export about 8 per cent. The remainder of our meat product is consumed in this country. I say to Senators here and now that it is in the interest of the consumers as well as the producers to grant legitimate protection in order to insure a dependable supply here at home. I believe in legitimate and reasonable protection on these products. We have just as good a right to ask the man who comes into the American market with his products from a foreign country to contribute to the payment of our taxes and to contribute, if necessary, to the protection of the industry, as we should have to tax the peddler who comes into an organized community and contributes nothing to the support of the community in which he temporarily resides, but merely takes his money when he has concluded trading with the people and leaves the community that much worse off for the experience.

To concede that the cost to the consumer is necessarily in exact proportion to the amount of duty would compel a different conclusion, but we do not concede this point. The real truth of the matter was voiced yesterday by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] in his statement, in effect, that the prices charged our consumers for foreign products do not necessarily have any direct relation to the price paid by the importer of the product. In other words, they buy just as cheaply as they can and they sell for all the traffic will bear, as shown by many illustrations during the course of this debate. The tariff, therefore, is only incidental in its influence.

The production of cattle and of other kinds of live stock has since my earliest recollection proceeded in cycles of long or short duration, according to the different classes and the length of time involved in production. It is longer in the case of cattle and is necessarily shorter in the case of sheep and swine, but it has been, as I believe may be readily demonstrated, an unfailing law that when production was profitable it became abundant, and automatically the price was reduced to the consumer. As production became unprofitable it decreased in volume, and the unfailing effect was to increase the burden of cost to the consumer, and thus the business has proceeded from high to low points in cycles of about 10 to 15 years' duration, and this without protection upon these products.

From my viewpoint the most definite effect of reasonable protection upon meat food and farm products of the Nation will be that of fairly well stabilizing values, and this will tend to make uniform the volume of production.

I will go a step further and say to Senators—and I ask them to pay attention to this statement—that I believe it may be shown beyond the shadow of a doubt that both the production of meat and other food products and the production of wool in this country has proceeded for many years, not on a basis of the cost of production but with a real loss to the producer. The production of live stock would not have proceeded so fully and extensively and as evenly as it has except for the fact that to a large extent it is not based upon the cost of production in any sense whatever, but is based on the necessity of keeping live stock on the farm, where they have been used as scavengers. So when we do something here to stabilize the price of this product, we act directly in the interest of the man who has, to my certain knowledge, produced the product and has sold it without sufficient remuneration for the past 20 or 30 years.

I want to say here, too, that the country may just as well make up its mind that the farmers and live-stock producers are going to require and demand a more satisfactory remuneration for their products in the future than they have had in the past.

Everyone who has given any study to the question of foreign competition in the American market will understand the great difference between conditions existing in foreign countries and in the United States. As an illustration, let me cite old Mexico, across the Rio Grande River, where labor costs are next to nothing and where lands and live stock in many instances are without actual taxation.

Information furnished by the Pan American Union indicates that in 1917, when the western live-stock man was paying his men $100 a month or higher, the highest rate of wages on the farms in South America, including all kinds of farm labor, was $20 a month and board. Brazil was paying from 50 to 90 cents a day without board; Argentina, from $10 to $20 a month and board. Wages for sheep and cattle herders in Australia and New Zealand ranges between $25 and $50 a month, according to the best information obtainable. The Bureau of Markets about a year ago placed the annual cost of a running sheep in Australia at $1.96 per head. In comparison with this figure the Tariff Commission, in its report on the wool-growing industry of America, placed the annual cost of running sheep in the United States in the years 1918 and 1919 around $8.50 per head.

Mr. President, in the western section of our country to-day the taxes on grazing lands are equivalent easily to all the lands will earn if rented for grazing live stock.

Those who have given any consideration to the subject understand that in South American countries such as Brazil not only is the value of the land on a basis, perhaps, of one-third of ours, but the land has greater carrying capacity, and as a rule there is an exemption from taxes either on the land or on the live stock, in some countries the exemption being on the live stock and in others on the land. So that the producer in the United States who meets competition coming from those countries is at a tremendous disadvantage.

Furthermore, I wonder if anyone except those who have given great thought and study to this question realize that the man who produces live stock in this country also trades and deals with his neighbor. He buys the products of the factories and looms of the East; in fact, he affords a market for the products of all American industries; he is a part of the great community of things. On the other hand, the foreigner who sends his products into this country for sale and merely takes the cash away contributes practically nothing at all to the country, except in so far as the taxes levied at the customhouse on his products are concerned. My impression is, as well as my belief, that if a man comes into this country and sits in our game he ought to play the game according to our rules, and when we go to foreign countries, as we will go to foreign countries, with any product which we have to export, we will take our chances with any other country, tariff or no tariff. As I view the tariff, particularly in its relation to the theory of protection, I consider it a fundamentally sound economic doctrine so long as the duty levied is legitimate and reasonable.

I think that the majority of Senators in this Chamber agree on the principle that it is unwise and unnecessary to levy a tariff on a commodity the prices of which are controlled, but nobody can charge that the 5,000,000 producers of cattle and the 4,800,000 producers of swine in this country have formed or could possibly form any sort of combination to control prices. I may point out the fact also, Mr. President, that those producers themselves constitute a great portion of the consumers of the country.

Mr. President, there has been a great deal said in reference to the control of prices by the great packing houses. It has been contended that the packers control not only the price of their raw materials but as well the selling price of their products. No Member of the Senate who has listened to any discussion of the subject in which I have ever indulged on this floor has heard me make any charge that the packers were entirely responsible for the conditions in our live-stock market. During the discussion of the bill to regulate the packing industry I insisted that such charges had been made against them; but I stated over and over again that when the day of supervision came the packers were going to be found as little vulnerable and as little in the wrong in their dealings as any market agency. The truth of that statement has already been demonstrated. The packers have been charged here recently, and perhaps justly—I have not been able to examine the figures—with making enormous profits, but I think, in all justice, it may be said that they have also shared tremendously in the losses of the country, the same as producers in every other line. I say this in justice to them. The sole intent and purpose of this law was to insure fair and equitable dealing in our great live-stock markets.

When the law regulating the live-stock markets was passed, the packers accepted it in good faith and have cooperated in a splendid spirit in its enforcement. I should like to believe, and I am inclined to believe, that the voice of criticism of this great industry is to be stilled in the Halls of Congress; and it was one of my plans and purposes in promoting the passage of this legislation to bring about that very situation. We have the law, now let us have peace and an end to controversy.

Mr. President, I hope that everyone voting on this amendment will bear in mind the fact that he is not necessarily imposing a burden on those who consume the product, but that he will be assuring to a great extent a sufficient and satisfactory supply of that product in his own country, and that it will not raise the price of this product to the consumers of the country to the extent of one penny.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, as I understand, the question now is on the adoption of the committee amendment, and a vote against the adoption of the committee amendment is a vote for the restoration of the House rate of 2 cents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I want to say very briefly, in answer to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]—and I hesitate to question anything he says about the live-stock industry—that so far as I have been able to learn there are only two ways to increase prices to American producers or American manufacturers. One way is to create a trust to control the entire output of a given product, and the other way is to stop competition from foreign countries.

The condition that the Senator has described could be related of almost any industry in this country during the last few years. There is no doubt that the live-stock industry has suffered very, very greatly from conditions which have been prevalent in practically all other lines of trade and business. How can they be benefited unless they have an opportunity to increase their prices? And how can they increase their prices when we can not remove competition, because the industry is so widespread that prices can not be controlled except by the packers?

There are no imports forcing down prices. Therefore, the imposition of tariff duties for the purpose of preventing foreign competition can not be successfully applied in this case. There is no foreign competition. There are practically no imports. Four-tenths of 1 per cent can not be said to be a factor in fixing prices in this country.

Eighty-one per cent of the fresh beef business of this country is in the hands of the packers. They will be the first persons to get the benefit, if there is any benefit, from increased prices. This amendment increases the price of fresh beef 75 per cent over the emergency law and 75 per cent over the House rate, equaling in ad valorem terms 28 per cent of the present price of beef. Why make it only 3½ cents a pound? Why not make it 5 cents per pound? Why not make it 10 cents per pound? Upon what basis have we determined upon 3½ cents instead of 2 cents, instead of 4 cents, instead of 5 cents?

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENDRICK. I want to answer the Senator. According to my judgment the difference between the two would be that if the tariff were made excessive it would result in keeping out the products of foreign countries. So far as the producers of live stock in this country are concerned they are perfectly willing to meet the foreign producers on a basis that absorbs the difference between the cost of production here and abroad. If the tariff is made too high they can not meet that tariff and can not come in; and the Senator is entirely mistaken if he has been led to believe that there is not an abundant supply of this product in other countries, that reaches our shores for a less cost of transportation and under just as favorable conditions, to reduce the number of beef cattle in this country a million head a year.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think the Senator is consistent. He believes in tariff protection to all industries. He believes that an industry that produces all that is necessary for consumption in this country should be protected as well as an infant industry or as well as an industry that is exporting in large quantities from this country. He is perfectly consistent in asking for tariff rates upon cattle and upon fresh beef.

Mr. President, I want to conclude with this suggestion: This rate, in terms of ad valorem duty, amounts to 28 per cent. The Payne-Aldrich rate, in terms of ad valorem duty, was only about 10 per cent. It seems to me that a case has not been made out here warranting this very large increase in duty by the Senate committee over the House bill.

I ask for the yeas and nays upon the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think a few errors have been made in some of the remarks concerning the effect of the emergency tariff upon prices in the United States. Of course, the only way to determine whether or not a tarfff has any effect upon prices is to determine what the world's level of prices generally is in the case of the product under consideration, and then to compare it with the level of American prices.

In 1920, after the first half of the year, there was a very heavy decline all over the world. Prices were headed downward on every product. We then, on the 27th of May, I think, passed the emergency tariff bill. No one claimed that that was going to stop the downward tendency of prices. All we claimed was that it would, as far as possible, check the downward tendency in this country, and hold the general level of prices in this country above the world level of prices. That has been accomplished to a great extent, I think, in the case of every article.

I have here an advance sheet from the commission's report. We want to see what effect the duty we gave upon cattle had upon the decline, which was running very rapidly at that time and up to the present time.

We will take the first months of 1921. From January 1 to June 1 the average price of good steer beef in New York was $17 per hundred pounds. From the 1st of June to the 31st of December it was $15.61.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator is giving now the average price of the first six months of the year 1921?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator read, if he has it there, the price month by month from January, 1921, down to June, 1921?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not it in this table. I think I have it in other tables; but I am giving this table, which epitomizes it. From June 1 to December 31 the average price was $15.61. That was a decline of $1.39 a hundred. The percentage of decline was 8.2 per cent.

Now, let us take Toronto. They both sell for about the same price in the foreign markets. The cost of getting them into the foreign markets is the same. In Toronto, the price of this grade of beef was $19.02 in the first months of 1921. It dropped to $14.65 in the last months of 1921, or a decline of $4.37, a percentage of decline of 23 per cent, as compared with the 8 per cent in the United States.

I will not read all of the figures. I will put this table in the RECORD.

The decline in Winnipeg was 20.7 per cent. In London, in the case of English beef, the decline was 29.7 per cent. In Buenos Aires the decline was 15.6 per cent in the case of good beef. In the case of another quality of beef the decline was 24.1 per cent. So it will be seen that while the decline after the emergency tariff bill was enacted was 8.2 per cent in the United States it ranged from 15.6 per cent to 29.7 per cent in these other countries.

I could take the same table upon steers. I will take native beef cattle. This is the Chicago monthly average of prices of 1921:

In January of 1921 light native beef cattle, weighing 750 to 1,050 pounds, brought $7.90 per hundred. By June the price had declined to $7.55. In August it was $6.90. This is 1921. We will see, now, that after we got our emergency tariff, unlike foreign countries, this commodity held its price here. In August the price was $6.90; in September, $6.90; in October, $6.75; in November, $5.90. The average from June to November was $6.90.

Now, if we will turn to the table of Canadian prices, we will find that the price of heavy-finish cattle in January of 1921 was $6.59, and up until the 1st of June it averaged $6.80. It dropped right along. In June it was $5.87; in July, $5.04; in August, $4.65; in September, $4.22; in October, $3.92; in November, $3.83. So Senators will see that while we hold up our prices with practically no decline, or very little decline, after June the Canadian went down from $6.60, in May, to $3.85. If we take the different products, we will find that in Canada they have all declined to about the same extent.

That was in reference to the Winnipeg prices. Let us take Toronto prices. The heavy finish in January was $8.59; up to May and during May it was $8.46. While we held our prices from June on to December about the same, averaging $6.90, the Canadian went down in Toronto, in June, to $7.20; in July, $6.55; in August, $6.81; in September, $6.64; in October, $5.98; in November, $5.84.

There was a steady decline, and, as stated in regard to the figures which I gave from the first table, our decline after we had adopted the emergency tariff, instead of keeping pace with the general world decline, averaged only 8 per cent, while the decline in other countries went from 15 to nearly 30 per cent; and I think that if we follow everything included in the emergency tariff, we will find about the same result.

It is somewhat amusing to read the report made by the Tariff Commission in this connection. It is a bipartisan commission, and their principle is never to express an opinion. They will give you facts, but never in any way give you even their best judgment as to the cause of those facts for fear they will be charged with political activity. When we get an expert from the Tariff Commission to advise us upon any matter, that expert is cautioned before he talks with a member of the committee that he must not under any circumstances express an opinion as to what should or should not be done, or what conclusions or opinions the commission may or may not have reached. He is to give facts and figures and to go not a single step further.

So, in making this report, this commission, composed of both Democrats and Republicans, are extremely anxious not to express any opinion; but I will read just one paragraph relating to wheat, and, of course, this relates entirely to hard spring wheat raised in the Northwest. They say:

> Under conditions of free trade between the United States and Canada, Winnipeg prices of No. 1 Winnipeg wheat normally exceeded the Minnesota prices of No. 1 northern spring by 5 or 6 cents per bushel.

We all understand why that is so. It is because Manitoba No. 1 wheat must weigh 60 pounds to the measured bushel and must have a higher percentage of the hard wheat than is required of the Minnesota No. 1 northern, which must weigh not less than 58 pounds, I think, to the measured bushel, and which may have a greater amount of wheat other than that known as the hard variety. That is why Winnipeg averaged 5 or 6 cents above Minneapolis and Duluth, and in the Liverpool markets the Winnipeg was quoted from 5 to 6 cents a bushel above the American wheat of a nearly similar grade. The commission go on to say:

After the passage of the emergency act, however, Minnesota prices gradually came to exceed Winnipeg prices by 25 to 27 cents per bushel.

Keep that in mind:

After the passage of the emergency act, however, Minnesota prices gradually came to exceed Winnipeg prices by 25 to 27 cents per bushel. Therefore, after allowance is made for the higher quality of the Canadian wheat, it appears that the differential between the prices in the two markets is now almost equal to the duty.

Of course, they do not say that is because of the duty, because that would be expressing a political opinion upon the tariff, and that, of course, they are not permitted to do, according to their theory of the whole idea of a Tariff Commission, that it is to collect facts and not express opinions.

I give just these two examples to show that the emergency tariff has had a great, buoyant effect in holding up American prices and preventing them going down in the same ratio the general world prices of agricultural products went down during the same period.

I have never claimed, for one, that the protective tariff upon our wheat would have the same effect upon wheat raised down in the Southern States of an entirely different variety, or of wheat raised in California or Ohio, more, possibly, than through a little reflex action. If we have a better price it would tend at least to buoy up the prices of the same varieties of articles in other sections of the United States.

We will suppose, for example, that in this country there is a big demand for Albemarle pippin apples, and we put a tariff duty upon apples, to protect the Albemarle pippin, we will say. If we are exporting our apples heavily it will not have any particular effect, possibly, upon the other apples which are imported, but it will have a big effect upon that particular kind of an apple for which the demand is greater than the supply or equal to the supply in the United States, assuming, of course, that some other country, like Canada, could produce the same article and could supply the United States demand.

I could take wool, I could take barley, I could take oats, or practically anything that comes under the emergency tariff law, and show a similar gain in price, or the check of the downward tendency of prices of the American articles; and that is all we claim for it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in connection with what the Senator has said, he has used some average prices of beef and beef steers, I believe. I desire to have incorporated in the RECORD, in this connection, some figures collected by the Tariff Commission of the prices of beef steers in Chicago and Toronto by months, from January, 1921, down to and including January, 1922.

I also desire to have incorporated the prices of good steers in the New York market, in the London market, and in the Argentine market, during each month of the last year, showing what the price was before the emergency tariff law went into effect, and what effect, if any, that law had on the prices, and also the prices month by month since, showing that there has been a gradual decline not only here but elsewhere, and that the emergency tariff law, according to these figures, had very little effect, if any, upon beef steers.

Mr. McCUMBER. Do not the very figures the Senator is putting in the RECORD show that the decline by percentages in the United States is only about one-third what it was in the other countries?

Mr. HARRISON. I will take some of the figures. I did not want to take up the time of the Senate, because I might be accused of filibustering.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was just asking as a general proposition.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I do not agree to that statement. We will take some figures and see what the decline was. Take good steers. In January, 1921, the price in the New York market was $19 per 100. In Argentina it was $14.72.

In February, the New York price was $16.50, and the Argentine price was $15.92.

In March, the New York price was $16.50, and the Argentine price was $19.46.

In April, the New York price was $16.25, and the Argentine price $19.64.

In May, the New York price was $16.75, and the Argentine price $18.21.

In June, the New York price was $15.75, and the Argentine price $16.29.

All of those figures are for 1921. I shall not read further, but the facts speak for themselves along that line. The Senator took an average, but did not give the figures month by month.

I desire also to incorporate the prices of wheat during those months in 1921, before and after the emergency tariff law went into effect, showing the prices in Minneapolis, Winnipeg, and Buenos Aires. These figures will all speak for themselves, and I ask to have the tables printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Underwood Act, 20 cents per bushel; emergency tariff act, 30 cents per bushel.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. POMERENE. There is some confusion here as to just what the question is and how it is presented.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 99, line 10, after the words "fresh beef and veal," the committee proposes to strike out "2" and to insert in lieu thereof "3½," so as to read:

Fresh beef and veal, 3½ cents per pound.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL. Making the same transfer of my pair as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The senior Senator from Virginia is necessarily absent, and I promised to pair with him for the day. I find, however, that I can transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON]. I do so, and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. GLASS. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. RAWSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR];

The junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 18, as follows:

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in running through the list of items carried in the pending schedule, where a higher duty is sought to be imposed than was even carried in the emergency tariff law, my interest was excited this morning by the discovery among my papers of two very interesting documents. They are really curiosities. I am sure they will be of interest to Senators on the other side. Even though they may have been forgotten by some Senators and are now, for all practical purposes, of little use—only relics of antiquity—disregarded and repudiated, they are most interesting in view of your present action in adding these higher rates on certain necessaries of life.

One of them was the Republican campaign textbook of two years ago. Amongst the pages of that textbook I find that the leader on the other side of the aisle, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], made a speech. It was called the keynote speech of the Republican convention at Chicago. The speech was published and circulated broadcast throughout the country. He sounded the keynote and pledged the Republican Party to certain propositions and promised to do certain things should they again be intrusted with power. Mr. LODGE in this speech, among other things, spoke on a question that should be of great interest at this time, because you have just voted to place 3½ cents a pound tax upon beef, and you propose to go down the line and increase the tax on flour, corn, mutton, pork, lard, veal, potatoes, onions, rice, lemons, woolen and cotton goods, sugar, salt, eggs, and other food necessities. Here is what was said by Mr. LODGE, who does not honor me with his presence at this time, but I hope my voice may penetrate the cloakroom, where he may now be reclining, so that it may bring back to his memory this remarkable speech in which he promised to reduce the high cost of living should the Republican Party obtain control of the Government. Here is what he said. Listen, Senators, you on the other side of the aisle who applauded the Senator from Massachusetts when he made this speech in the convention at Chicago, you who sent it out to your respective States and made it a pledge or a promise to your people to redeem should you again be elected. Under the heading, "The high cost of living," he said:

The rise in prices, the high cost of living which reaches daily into every home, is the most pressing as it is the most difficult and most essential problem which confronts us.

Now, do you indorse that statement? "No," some one on the other side of the Chamber just said. Of course, you say "No" now because by your votes you are repudiating it here, and yet here you come and vote to increase the price of beef and sugar and everything that goes upon the breakfast table and upon the backs of the people. Mr. LODGE further said:

Profiteering, the charging of extortionate and unjustified prices, which is stupid as well as unlawful, is subject now to ample punitive laws. Those laws should be enforced, others, if necessary, added, and the offenders, both great and small, should be pursued and punished.

And yet in the face of that statement I heard the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] the other day, with his "Punch and Judy show," his cuckoo clock and his monkey, and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], with his circus, parade to the Senate and to the country that importers were making 2,000 per cent profit. Yet that was denounced by the leader of the Republican Party in the Senate, the keynoter at the Chicago convention, who said that if you should be elected you would punish them, you would bring them to trial, you would stop that practice. The gentleman who made this speech was HENRY CABOT LODGE—H. C. L.—High Cost of Living.

But that is not all. I could quote the speech of the standard bearer of the Republican Party and his running mate in that campaign. I could quote from other distinguished Republicans where they inveighed against the high cost of living and said they would reduce it to the people should they be returned to power.

Now, I have here another remarkable document. This is a good one. This just happened to come to my attention. I remembered that I had seen it somewhere. It is no doubt familiar to all of you. It was published in 1920. It is Speakers' Series No. 1, published by the Republican National Committee, sent out to millions all over the country to elect President Harding and Vice President Coolidge. Here was the promise that was made then to the people in Speakers' Series No. 1, the first and most important pamphlet that was issued by the Republican committee in that campaign. What is it? It will look familiar to you as soon as you see it. There it is on the outside of the book, in big black type, "The High Cost of Living." You thought the issue was so big, you thought it important enough to print and circulate it as the first of all the campaign literature issued by the management of the Republican Party.

The high cost of living and the Democratic administration in Washington helped the profiteers to plunder the people—is what you said, and you fooled them by virtue of that instrument and the speech of the senior Senator from Massachusetts. Of course I could quote others along the same lines. I am only going to read a few passages from this pamphlet. It is well to call your attention to it at this time when you are trying to increase the cost of beef and sugar and mutton and chops and pork and all the other food articles carried in this tariff bill,

Here is what you said, in part, in this pamphlet on "The High Cost of Living":

Imagine, then, that the emergency passes; that the justification for this huge corner in the necessaries of life suddenly comes to an end; that all this monopoly of crops and packs and meats and clothes and building materials ceases to serve any good purpose, yet the great corporation refuses to act on the facts—seeks to hold back its vast supplies from the people of the country, tries to prolong the scarcity of all things that the people need, attempts to keep up the famine prices which it has established by its policy, lets food rot in storage rather than sell it in America, ships it to Europe to prevent its falling into American hands, sells it to foreigners at half or quarter its value rather than market it in the United States and so reduce prices to the American people.

* * * * * * *

The high cost of living of to-day had its beginning in the waste and extravagance in the great emergency of war. But we are not concerned with its beginning so much as we are with its continuance after this emergency had passed. We want to know why prices since the armistice of November 11, 1918, have continued to go up. We want to know why, with the enormous supplies which the Government then possessed, aggregating billions of dollars, lower prices were not made available to the consumer. We want to know why the President of the United States and his administration, although given full power and adequate money to eliminate profiteering, to eliminate illegal combinations which protected profiteering, have done nothing except those things which have made the situation worse.

* * * * * * *

And while the Wilson administration were marketing the vast supplies of meats and canned goods in Europe at half price or quarter price and on long-time credits, Americans were forced by the scarcity of foodstuffs at home to pay 68 cents a pound for butter, 40 cents for oleomargarine, 57 cents for bacon, 35 cents for roast beef, 18 to 20 cents a can for vegetables, and almost any price for sugar that the dealer might ask when he had any sugar at all to sell.

And yet every item there enumerated in this bill is sought to be taxed further, so that the price to the consumer may be increased.

On August 8, 1919—

Says this pamphlet—

On August 8, 1919, President Wilson sent a special message to Congress on the high cost of living. Attorney General Palmer had become convinced that "under the stimulation and temptation of exceptional circumstances combinations of producers and combinations of traders had been formed for the control of supplies and prices which are clearly in restraint of trade."

To meet this situation the President called for more appropriations with which to prosecute offenders, extension of "the present food control act," and the enactment of a penalty for profiteering, although a penalty up to $5,000 fine or two years' imprisonment had already been provided in the act to which he referred. In no way, however, did the President recognize the plain fact that his administration had been the greatest hoarder of foodstuffs that this country ever saw, the most monopolistic manipulator of prices, the most aggressive promoter of combinations to restrain trade and prevent the people from getting the benefit of a plentiful supply of the necessaries of life. He had nothing to say of Secretary Baker's desperate and successful efforts to keep up the terrific strain of war prices, to ship food and clothes anywhere or everywhere except to places where American citizens could get them, and to let foodstuffs rot in the warehouses rather than let them compete in the market with the products for which the American people were paying famine prices. Not a word, not a word!

Says this remarkable document. Then the Republicans in this pamphlet deal with the price of sugar and condemn the Democratic Party for the high cost of sugar. Then they say:

Thus our Government enters the class of profiteers. The more this silk is sold for the more the companies will make, the more the Government will make.

And yet by this bill you are doing everything possible to increase the cost of silk as well as calico to the women of the country.

It further says:

It seems impossible for Secretary Baker and this Democratic administration to get the point of view that our Government should act to reduce the cost of living. They act only to help the big business concern to enjoy great business prosperity.

The Republicans were talking about the Democrats then.

Then this pamphlet refers to leather and asks why shoes cost $15. We shall see when we reach the hide and leather and boot and shoe items how Senators on the other side of the Chamber will vote. We will ascertain then whether you were honest with yourselves, if you were sincere, when you made those statements as carried in this campaign pamphlet—whether you are still willing to decrease the price of shoes.

If you vote for the recommendations of this committee and lay these tariff duties the committee has incorporated in the bill, then you should be ashamed to face the American people, especially after issuing such campaign literature as this in the last campaign.

Mr. President, I shall not read more than this. There are some other passages in this pamphlet which I should like to incorporate in the RECORD, but the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], from which I have read, shows the hypocrisy of your action and the deception in you promises. It is the basest betrayal of campaign promises ever recorded, and would, if you had a political conscience, bow your heads in perpetual shame.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance is, in paragraph 702, on page 99, line 13, after the words "Sheep and goats," to strike out "1 cent per pound" and to insert in lieu thereof "$2 per head."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the same underlying principles apply to the other amendments in this paragraph as apply to the amendments in the paragraph upon which we have just voted. The Senate committee amendment changes the rate on sheep and goats from 1 cent per pound, as provided in the House bill, to $2 per head, an increase of about 150 per cent in the rate.

The rate on fresh mutton and goat meat is increased from 1½ cents per pound, as provided in the House bill, to 2½ cents per pound; the rate on fresh lamb is increased from 2 cents a pound, as provided in the House bill, to 5 cents per pound, or 150 per cent.

Under the Underwood tariff law sheep and goats were on the free list, as were also fresh mutton, fresh lamb, and goat meat. Under the Payne-Aldrich Act sheep 1 year old or over were dutiable at $1.50 per head and less than 1 year old at 75 cents per head. On all other live animals not specially provided for, which included goats, a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem was imposed, and on fresh mutton and lamb a duty of 1½ cents per pound was provided. The emergency tariff law fixed the duty on sheep 1 year old at $2 per head and less than 1 year old at $1 per head; on fresh mutton and lamb, at 2 cents per pound; and on other meats, which would include goat meat, at 25 per cent ad valorem.

The increase in the tariff duties on sheep and fresh lamb is even greater than on fresh beef and cattle. The difference between the emergency tariff law rate on fresh beef and the Senate committee rate is a 75 per cent increase, while in the case of sheep and fresh lamb there is an increase of 150 per cent over the emergency tariff rate and an increase of nearly 250 per cent over the Payne-Aldrich rate.

What is the justification for such an increase? We come back to the old question, Is the sheep-raising industry subject to such competition from abroad that we ought to erect tariff barriers to remove that competition in order that this depressed business may be revived by increased prices? I can not understand how any tariff duty can be of any benefit in increasing prices unless foreign competition exists and can be removed by the imposition of protective-tariff duties. As to lamb there is no serious foreign competition. The figures for the calendar year 1921 show that we produced 650,000,000 pounds of fresh lamb and we imported only 9,000,000 pounds, or about one-half per cent of our consumption, while we exported 20,000,000 pounds, or 3¼ per cent of our production.

If such a record makes out a case for tariff protection, then there is no point at which we can stop in the extension of protective duties, for here is an industry that produces more than we consume and exports twice as much as is imported.

Those are the bald facts regarding this industry at the present time. With this enormous increase from 2 cents a pound to 5 cents a pound, when the increased cost of doing business with a corresponding advance in prices is considered and the increase in investment is considered, in all probability the rate, if it is effective, will result in an increase of price to the consuming public as high as 6 or 7 cents a pound. As there are nearly 700,000,000 pounds of lamb and mutton consumed in this country in a year, we can very easily estimate, if these duties are reflected in increased prices, as is desired and as is expected by those who urge them—for the only purpose in putting them in this bill is to increase to the farmer the price which he can get for the sheep which he sells to be slaughtered and to increase the price which the packer who sells the lamb will exact—this one item alone means an increased burden of $31,500,000 per year to the consumers of America. I have ascertained that, if this duty is effective and is reflected in increased prices, the increased cost for lamb to the people in the State of Massachusetts alone will be $1,250,000.

The imports of sheep have always been negligible. We are producing in this country sufficient to take care of the consumption—indeed, more than necessary—and are, as the figures show, exporting lamb in much larger quantities than we are importing it.

I have a telegram and a letter from a firm in New York interested in the tariff duty on fresh meat, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NEW YORK, June 27, 1922.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have taken the liberty of reaching you by telegram to-day regarding the prohibitive measure that is now being discussed before the Senate, and I thought some important facts, such as outlined in the Journal of Commerce on the last page of the issue of Monday, the 26th, would perhaps furnish you with some extra argument in defeating this iniquitous measure, as proposed by the McCumber-Fordney bill.

I have traveled on every ocean and in every country during the last four years where packing-house products are produced, and I believe that it would be disastrous to enforce this bill upon 110,000,000 of people at the present time when we are passing through the reorganization of the economic world, such as we have never seen before in our history. There is not a family, rich or poor, that will not feel this tax very severely in some form or other; and whether the Shipping Board get a subsidy or not they will be, perhaps, one of the biggest losers, by reason of the fact that unless we buy from South American countries and the far-off continent of Australasia we can not hope to maintain an American merchant marine without trading with those countries, and it is not in the interests of the manufacturers to have a bill with such a high tariff wall.

There are, perhaps, a few in the country who are in favor of the bill, but the rank and file of the Nation—and I come in close contact with many of them, owing to the nature of my business—all say that it is a dangerous measure, and one that will cause trouble between employer and employee, owing to the increased cost of living that is bound to be brought about if the bill becomes law.

MEAT SITUATION.

Meat in all producing countries to-day is lower in price than it has been for 20 years; and I have just made a trip taking in the continent of Australia, and meat in those countries is selling at such low values, away below the cost of production; and yet in the United States to-day meat is dearer in the retail as well as the wholesale than pre-war, and this bill would certainly be the means of gouging the American public without bringing any revenue to the Government.

The outcome would be increased taxation all around and higher cost of living for the Nation. This same position exists in the Argentine Republic and Uruguay, two of our greatest customers for all our manufactured products, and unless we maintain and develop our foreign trade in these countries we can not hope to be successful with a merchant marine with no freight offering on the high seas, and I can speak with some authority in view of the fact that we have been and are still constant shippers on the United States Shipping Board vessels on all the seas, and we feel that in placing this situation before you we are rendering a service to the country and to the business interests at the same time, and in conclusion I beg to request that you will protest against any measure that means increased cost of living to the people of this country, as this bill will surely do, and I believe that the bill in its present form should be rewritten entirely, particularly on meats, wool, butter, hides, tallow, etc., as all of these products have been taxed to such an extent that would make it a burden on every home without any compensation to the farmer or the Government.

I would draw your particular attention to the United States Department of Agriculture's reports on the 6th of March, 1922, on wool imports from 1912 to 1921. In the latter year the United States produced 224,564,000 pounds, which is the smallest since 1889, showing conclusively that there is an extreme shortage in domestic wools, and the average imports for these years have exceeded the production, consequently there are certain wools, namely, the finer clothing wools, that this country must import, and if the prohibitive tariff of 33 cents is placed on this commodity it means gouging the people to pay for it.

I beg to remain, respectfully yours,

A. W. BENJAMIN.

P. S.—During my trip in Australia and New Zealand I particularly noticed that 75 per cent of the automobiles operating there, and in fairly large quantities, are of American manufacture, and this equally applies to the South American countries, where our manufactured goods are to be seen everywhere.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, there is not anything further that I desire to say. I might continue the discussion here for an indefinite time, but I would only be debating this question: Do these facts warrant the application of the principle of protection, assuming the principle to be that for which the Republican Party has heretofore stood in the levying of protective duties? I can not see how any argument can be made for protective duties under the circumstances stated in this case, unless we intend to depart from the previous policies and apply protective duties to every industry, regardless of whether they have extended beyond the demands of the local market or not. I therefore shall ask that the committee amendment may be rejected and, at most, the rate fixed in the House bill levied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may the committee amendment be stated first? I do not care to ask for a roll call on the first item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 99, line 13, it is proposed to strike out "1 cent per pound" and insert "$2 per head," so as to read:

Sheep and goats, $2 per head.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think we had better have a roll call on that.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I was going to ask for one on the next amendment, which covers the main issue in this paragraph. If the Senator wants to have roll calls on both, I am willing, but I was intending to ask for one only on the question of the rate on lamb and mutton.

Mr. McCUMBER. All right; I will not ask for it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 99, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "mutton, 1½," and insert "mutton and goat meat, 2½," so as to read:

Mutton and goat meat, 2½ cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to

The READING CLERK. On page 99, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "2" and insert "5," so as to read:

Fresh lamb, 5 cents per pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McKINLEY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. RAWSON], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]; and

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL].

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Borah	Hale	McKinley	Shortridge
Broussard	Johnson	McNary	Smoot
Bursum	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Spencer

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is in paragraph 703, swine. On page 99, line 18, it is proposed to strike out "of" and insert "and other," so that, if amended, it will read:

Bacon, hams, and shoulders, and other pork—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On the same page and line, it is proposed to strike out "1½" and insert "2," so as to read:

Bacon, hams, and shoulders, and other pork, prepared or preserved, 2 cents per pound.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, this is a very important amendment.

One of the great industries of this country is the raising of hogs and the exportation of pork products. This amendment proposes to raise the duty upon bacon, hams, shoulders, and other pork products, prepared or preserved, from 1½ cents to 2 cents per pound. If there is any item in this bill upon which a tariff duty should not be levied, it is the particular product now under discussion; and I do not know of any better way to present the views of those who feel that this amendment is not justifiable than to read from the Tariff Commission's report which was submitted yesterday. Let us see what they say about fresh pork, because this industry is so clearly upon an exportation basis that very little can be said in favor of a tariff duty.

I read from the report made by the Tariff Commission upon the operation of the emergency tariff law under the heading of "Fresh pork":

The United States is by far the leading producer and exporter of pork and pork products. Domestic production of pork amounted to 8,933,000,000 pounds in 1919. Of the 1919 production, 2,112,000,000 pounds was marketed as fresh pork. As will be noted in the following table, imports of fresh pork are a small fraction of 1 per cent; exports have averaged several times as large, but rarely over 1 per cent of domestic production marketed in the fresh form.

So far they have been discussing fresh pork only.

Most exports leave the country in the cured forms. Imports are almost entirely of Canadian origin, mainly received at Chicago, the world's largest packing center. Exports go to widely scattered markets throughout the world, though chiefly to Canada and Great Britain. The former country usually imports about ten times as much as she exports to the United States.

Mark that; Canada imports from the United States ten times as much as she exports to us.

Since the United States markets a large part of its enormous corn crop in the form of pork, and during recent years has exported from 750,000,000 to nearly 2,000,000,000 pounds of pork and pork products exclusive of lard, it is probable that no duty can have more than nominal effect on domestic prices. Because of our heavy exports of fresh and cured pork no duty could appreciably affect the domestic market for fresh pork. Statistics of fresh pork are presented in Tables 1 to 3, following.

Mr. President, that statement seems to cover the case admirably, and proves beyond doubt that we are exporting in very, very large volume the pork products which are produced in this country.

For the year 1921 the statistics show that 8,475,000,000 pounds of pork and pork products were produced in this country. Only 1,000,000 pounds were imported, about one one-thousandth of our production. Seven hundred and forty-eight million pounds, over seven hundred times our importations, were exported.

Mr. POMERENE. That means that the imports amounted to about one one-hundredth of 1 per cent per capita for the people of the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. One one-hundredth of 1 per cent of the entire production.

Mr. POMERENE. I am comparing the imports with the population. There are 110,000,000 people in the country and 1,000,000 pounds imported.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Exactly.

Mr. POMERENE. That would be one one-hundred-and-tenth of 1 pound per capita.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator's figures are correct. The consumption per capita appears to be about 72 pounds, and if these duties shall become effective, the amount paid by the American people in increased prices for pork and pork products will be about $105,000,000.

We are back again to the old question, is there any state of facts which can be presented which determines when a product should be given protective tariff duties and when a product should not be given protective tariff duties. Evidently we have reached a stage in our legislation when it makes no difference whether we export in large quantities or whether we are in a situation of not producing enough to take care of our consumption and home producers must compete with imports. The same principle applies. Everybody who comes and asks for tariff protective duties is going to get them and is receiving them in this bill. So the amount given in the bill appears to be largely a matter of speculation.

Mr. President, I do not see any justification whatever for this Senate amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, much of the debate upon this bill, as well as some of the votes, reveal that the question of the power of the Federal Government to lay taxes and imposts is entirely ignored. So far have we wandered from the safe paths and from the principles established by the fathers of this Republic that there has developed throughout the country an antipathy to discussion or consideration of constitutional questions, and the suggestion as to the constitutionality of an act or the power of the Federal Government is brushed aside with irritation. I sometimes think that Senators, as well as the people, forget that the question of taxation is involved when tariff bills are being considered.

The tariff, of course, is a tax, a domestic tax, a tax upon consumers. It is as much of a tax as if the tax gatherer were authorized to collect from each individual in the United States a given sum per annum. It has been the purpose of many statesmen to conceal from the people the burdens of taxation, and this has developed a vicious as well as an oppressive system of taxation which, in general terms, is denominated "indirect taxation." Many of the tariff laws which have been enacted in the United States have sought to benefit individuals or corporations or interests rather than to obtain revenue. The power of the Federal Government to tax for legitimate governmental purposes has been perverted, degraded, and prostituted to serve predatory wealth and special interests. To such an extent has this power been employed that many regard it as entirely legitimate and proper for the Federal Government to transfer by means of tariff legislation the property of many to the pockets of the few. This view has become, I was about to say, almost pervasive—that is putting it in the extreme, but it may be said that too many of the people of the United States and too many in this body ignore constitutional limitations, the rights of the Federal Government and its limitations, and support policies which indirectly rob the masses to add to the wealth of the classes or special interests or particular sections.

Men who support the most inequitable tariff schedules would revolt at a proposition to compel by force a section or group or class to make contribution of their money or funds to enable some other group or section or class to increase their profits or to engage in and perpetuate a particular line of industry. When this Government was established the States granted to the Federal Government the power to tax for certain purposes. Congress had the power to tax for the maintenance of the Federal Government within its sphere of action. It could lay taxes to maintain the Army and the Navy and to meet the legitimate expenditures of the various departments of the Government. The States never would have granted nor did they grant the power to the General Government to tax without restriction or for all purposes, or to enable one section or one class to derive advantages at the expense of another section or class. The taxing power is a destructive power. It should never be exercised except when there is an imperative necessity. It should only be exercised in the interest of the Government to protect it, to defend it, and to preserve it.

No one can defend this bill which is before us—a measure which ignores every fundamental principle of taxation, every principle of equality and justice, and which confessedly seeks to swell the profits and fortunes of those who come within its terms and who are generally labeled as its beneficiaries.

Those who advocate these schedules conceive that the bill will add to the profits of the industries or enterprises which are embraced within its terms. They concede that the purpose of the bill is to maintain prices which are unjust and extortionate or to increase them even though such increase adds to the burdens of the people and transfers from their pockets their hard-earned wages to the coffers and the bank accounts of protected manufacturing institutions. And the pity of it all is that this bill bears most heavily upon the poor, upon the wage earner, upon the clerks, the educator, the professional classes, upon those who work in the factories, in the mills, and in the mines, and that great body of our citizenship who do not produce and whose labor and services and activities are indispensable to the progress and welfare and prosperity of the country.

Mr. President, I express my profound regret that some Democrats have become inoculated with the virus of protectionism and support schedules and provisions in this bill. I regret that there are some within the Democratic Party so inoculated with the poison which manifests itself in unconstitutional taxation, in tariff bills, which rob the many to aid the few, as to support this bill or some of its schedules.

If the Democratic Party has any creed that is worthy of survival it is that the States are sovereign, that power rests with the people, and that the Federal Government has only such powers as are delegated to it and which are enumerated in the Constitution of the United States. The spirit of Democracy means justice, equality, and equal opportunity to all and special privileges to none. The Democratic creed denies that the Federal Government has any authority to tax the people without their consent, and they have only in such a manner and to such an extent as the Constitution permits.

The Democratic Party believes that the Constitution should be strictly construed and that the power to tax must be specifically granted and must only be exercised for the public good and within specific limitations found in the organic law. Never in the history of this Republic has there been so crying a need for a party imbued with the principles of Jefferson and led by men of the courage of Jackson and Cleveland. If political parties trim their sails to every wind that blows, if they seek favor at the sacrifice of principles and are willing to barter their principles, their honor, for temporary gains or victories; in other words, if they are willing to prostitute their creed, their principles, and organization for temporary victory or for power, then they are unworthy the support of the people and should speedily come to an ignoble end. If the Democratic Party becomes an opportunist party and is willing to sacrifice the fundamental principles upon which the party rests, then a new party should arise that will seize the banner of justice and liberty and carry it forward.

I have heard persons inquire as to what was the difference between the Democratic and Republican Parties. There have been many situations which seem to indicate a merging of the parties. Many patriotic Americans are losing faith in both great national parties. Many have said and many daily say that both parties are "time servers"; that they are radical or reactionary and progressive or "stand pat" as the exigency demands or the prospect of obtaining votes points the way. I hope that these statements are unfounded.

The Democrats have denounced the Republicans for their devotion to predatory interests and because of their unconstitutional reactionary and destructive policies. We have declared that they have prostituted the taxing power of the Government to serve special interests and to put money into the pockets of rich corporations and great manufacturing interests.

The tariff laws passed by the Republican Party after the termination of the Civil War were dictated by special interests. They were in the main the redemption of pre-election pledges and promises, and have resulted in building up great fortunes in the hands of certain interests that have been powerful in the political as well as in the industrial life of the Republic. The Democrats have denounced these unholy alliances between wealth and the Republican Party and the injustices which resulted therefrom. These same evil forces which have dominated the Republican Party in the past are driving through this bill. They dictated its schedules. They are all profiting by its provisions and expect to reap greater rewards when it is enacted into law. Yet there are some Democrats who give it support.

Mr. President, the Democratic Party now has the opportunity to serve the country, to rescue the people from plutocratic and menacing forces, to vindicate its glorious record of the past, and to restore the vital and undying principles upon which this Government is founded. We may fritter away the opportunity. We may forget our duty to the illustrious dead who bequeathed to us a great patrimony. We may betray the people who seek justice and emancipation from plutocratic rule. We may strike hands with the predatory interests and join with them in celebrating the victory which they anticipate in placing upon the statute book this cruel, sordid, and inequitable bill which it has become apparent will receive the approval of this body, but if we do an outraged people will visit upon us their wrath and consign us to well-merited obloquy.

Mr. President, the time has come for a separation of the sheep and the goats, for American people to declare whether they are for special privileges, class legislation, predatory interests, and for the degrading of the taxing power of the Federal Government under the guise of tariff legislation, to the enrichment of special favorites or interests. The time has come for Democrats here and elsewhere to avow their fidelity to the principles and creed of the party; there can be no union between the forces that seek to corrupt the Government and pervert it to private ends and those who seek to carry into effect the principles upon which a just, enduring, and free Government rests. This bill can not be defended upon Democratic principles. It can not, therefore, in my opinion, be supported by Democrats.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on one other occasion I referred to this, and I want to refer to it in this connection again. The late lamented McKinley, in defending the McKinley bill in 1890, referred to the fact that sugar and other articles were placed upon the free list, and boasted that the Republican Party had made the workingman's breakfast table free.

In the pending Republican bill, the McCumber-Fordney bill, all those articles are placed on the high protected list. My question is this, Was McKinley, in the eyes of the present-day Republicans, a Republican or was he a free trader? If we are to judge Republicanism by this bill, what was McKinley? I would like to have him classified.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, Mr. McKinley, if I read his life work aright, was caught after the war by the swirling waters of the protection theory, a doctrine that was being so earnestly advocated by certain interests of the North, and he went to the extreme in his advocacy of protection; his party drifted from the principles and spirit of Lincoln and became too often the pliant tool of special interests. His party magnified the Federal Government, weakened the States, and sought by gratuities and appropriations and contribution to debauch them; it also sought to dazzle the eyes of the people by imperialistic policies and glittering shows put on by rapidly accumulated wealth which found its way into the coffers of predatory forces. In this manner it was hoped that the people would be unaware of the misuse of authority and the abuse of power occurring under Republican administrations.

However, if we are to judge from the last public address of President McKinley, we are justified in concluding that he had reached the point where he regarded the high protection wall as an obstacle to international trade and commerce and as disadvantageous to the American people. While advocating reciprocity this remarkable speech of President McKinley breathed a truly fine international spirit and seemed to recognize the interdependence of nations and the necessity of America enlarging its markets and expanding its commerce.

Mr. President, there have been and are great Republicans who have recognized and who now perceive that the tides which carry forward this country bear on their majestic bosom all other lands, and that whatever ministers to the prosperity of the American people adds wealth to other lands, and whatever brings advantage to the latter brings benefits to the American people. The most provincial and dogmatic Republican is willing to export America's surplus products. He would be glad to find a hundred foreign ports bidding for the products produced in this Republic. And yet such Republicans, and others who claim to be of a more liberal school, driven by the demands of special interests or terrified by the expressions of local interests, give support to this measure, which contravenes sound economic laws, interrupts a return to national and international prosperity, violates the Constitution of the United States, and declares the purpose of the Republican Party to be to permit the taxing power of the Government to be employed to enrich or benefit a part of the American people.

President McKinley in his great address not only advocated reciprocity, which in some instances would result in free trade with respect to many commodities, but he advocated a greater foreign trade, which meant greater imports as well as increased exports. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has referred to the statement made by President McKinley about the "free breakfast table." Even in the days when Mr. McKinley was vigorously advocating protection he perceived that tariff duties were taxes which were added to the burdens of the people. When he spoke of the "free breakfast table" he appreciated that if the articles consumed by the workmen were subject to tariff duties they would be taxed and their price to that extent increased. It can not be contended that the tariff does not increase prices and at the same time insist that the tariff lowers prices.

This bill confessedly was the taxing power of the Government to raise prices and thus multiply the burdens of the people. I am not contending that it is unconstitutional to raise revenue from tariff duties, but I do insist that it is immoral, illegal, unconstitutional to use the strong arm of the Federal Government and take the money or the property of one or more through tariff legislation to add to the profit or the wealth of one, or a group, or many.

Mr. President, I believe that there are some Republicans who, like Saul of Tarsus, are beginning to see the truth. The scales are falling from their eyes and the light is dawning upon their minds. It is to be hoped that they will join the forces who are seeking just legislation—that they will cease persecuting as Saul persecuted those who were seeking the truth. There are many Republicans who recognize in this McCumber-Fordney bill not only an impolitic but an unjust measure. Unfortunately, the Republicans, as a party, are still wedded to their idols; and may I say—and I say it with regret—there are some Democrats who, for reasons best known to themselves, indicate a purpose to support this measure.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. The protection system, as it has been devised and enforced by the Republican Party, and as it finds expression in the bill now before us, is cruel and unjust, and its passage will be fraught with national and international evils. I now yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BROUSSARD. With the permission of the Senator from Utah, I would like to ask him a question. I think reference was made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and also by the Senator from Utah to the fact that under the McKinley bill it was sought to have a free breakfast table. In 1890 sugar was placed on the free list. Previous to that there was a duty of 3¼ cents per pound, but the sugar producer in the domestic industry was given a bounty of 2 cents. I will now ask the Senator if it is not a fact, notwithstanding that in 1890 sugar was placed on the free list, that the price of sugar went up and remained up during the time sugar was on the free list?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, assuming what the Senator says to be true, it is not pertinent to the point which I am attempting to make, nor does it relate to the question which I am so imperfectly discussing. I rose merely to express my views in a brief way upon what I believe to be the duty and the mission of the Democratic Party, and particularly what I believe was its duty with reference to this or any other measure which proposed to pervert the taxing powers of the Government or to secure benefits and privileges in behalf of the few or in behalf of favorites and special interests. I wanted to say that the Democratic Party was opposed to class legislation, to the granting of special privileges, to usurpations by the Federal Government, to measures which confessedly were not for revenue, though called revenue bills, but were designed to transfer from the pockets of the people to beneficiaries of the law the earnings, the wages, small though they were, which had come as the result of their toil and effort.

I am challenging the protective system as it has been applied by Republicans and as they are seeking to apply it now. I am challenging this bill before us, even though supported by some Democrats, because I believe, as I have stated, that it is an unjust and oppressive measure. I am opposing this bill because it is not only impolitic and unsound as an economic or industrial policy but in its application and in its consequences it will prove harmful to the American people and to others who do not live under our flag.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may be heard for just a moment in reply to my very good friend from Louisiana, I do not know what the price of sugar was after sugar was placed upon the free list, but certainly he will not contend that it would have gone lower if the duty had remained at 3½ cents.

What I was calling attention to was the doctrine of McKinley. I lived in his district. We were neighbors. I thought he was the very personification of high protection. He was perfectly sincere about it. No one who knew McKinley ever questioned his character, his good name, his integrity of purpose. But I was calling attention to his argument which he made during the campaign following the enactment of the McKinley tariff law. I heard him speak. I heard him use that argument. As a young Democrat I did not know how to answer it. It appealed to me. I do not understand this transformation.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I rose merely because reference was made to Democrats. I am voting for the bill right along and expect to vote for the bill when it comes to its final passage. I merely wanted to show that all the arguments made are not sound. For instance, the emergency tariff law increased the duty on sugar from 1 cent to 1.61 cents, and the price of sugar has gone down notwithstanding that fact. These are facts. They do not require argument, except to explain, if anyone may explain, why it was that when we increased the duty on sugar in one instance the price went down, and when we put it on the free list the price went up.

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand it is the position of my good friend from Louisiana that a tariff on woolens and wool will reduce the price of woolens and wool, or that a tariff on cotton goods will reduce the price of cotton goods?

Mr. BROUSSARD. My statement is very plain and it needs no argument. I am stating facts. I am talking now of sugar because sugar was mentioned, and it is one article which has a world price. My argument is that we are not reducing or increasing the price of sugar by a duty. Whenever sugar is mentioned Senators are selecting one of the articles which disproves the very argument made on this side of the Chamber. They read a list of agricultural products and say that the tariff did not increase the price of agricultural products in the country, and yet turn around and argue that we are now increasing the rate, and therefore will increase the price. Senators can not make both arguments at the same time. When they make the argument that the Republicans at one time stood for a free breakfast table and then mention sugar, I assure them that when we took the duty off of sugar entirely, the only time in the history of the country when sugar was free, the price of sugar went up. I am again calling your attention to the fact that when the emergency tariff law was enacted it increased the duty on sugar by 60 per cent, and the price of sugar to the consumer did not increase. That is not argument. That is merely a statement of facts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Louisiana, if he adheres to his position, will vote for free sugar, because if it is placed on the free list the price will be advanced.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Louisiana reminds me of the clothier who was trying to fit his customer. The customer complained that one suit of clothes was too small. The clothier said it would stretch. Of another one he said it was too large, and the clothier said it would shrink. That seems to be about the situation of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am just calling attention to many of the arguments made on this side of the Chamber. When Senators want to discuss the proposition that they can not help agricultural products they make the emergency tariff law argument that we can not raise prices; but the very next moment a Senator sitting alongside of the one who makes that argument gets up and makes the statement that we are increasing the cost of living because we are increasing duties. I am making no argument except to call attention to sugar. In sugar we have an item which I think will demonstrate that the duty on sugar at least has not affected the price to the consumer. I am merely stating the facts and asking the Senator to make an argument to meet the facts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the able Senator from Louisiana follows the announcement just made, then he will support the proposition when the sugar schedule is before the Senate to transfer it to the free list. He states that when sugar was placed upon the free list the price advanced 2 cents a pound. The Senator from Louisiana is not so unselfish that he does not desire the price of sugar to advance, so I presume he will be the first Senator to move, in order that it may advance, to transfer sugar to the free list. His position, as I understand it, is that the laying of a duty upon imports does not affect prices, or, rather, that if it does affect them, it results often in their reduction. To support this thesis he states that the price of sugar advanced when it was transferred from the dutiable to the free list.

But I did not rise to discuss sugar or any particular commodity in the schedule now under consideration. I intended only to express my view that if the Democratic Party stands for any principle it is that the Federal Government possesses only limited and enumerated powers, that it can not employ the power to tax for governmental purposes in order to transfer to the pockets of the few the money or the property of the many; that now, as never before, it is its high mission to defend constitutional government, oppose unjust and unconstitutional laws, and fight with undaunted courage against injustice and policies which contravene that immortal democratic battle cry, "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none." If the Democratic Party fails in its mission, forgets the principles of Jefferson and betrays the people, some other party will rise that will seize the falling banner and, inspired by the spirit of justice and liberty, contend against all forces for the rights of the people, the integrity of the State, and the preservation of constitutional government.

But, Mr. President, the Democratic Party, with all its shortcomings and notwithstanding the transgressions of few or even many of its adherents, will continue to be the vital and inspiring political force in this Republic. We may forget its principles, prove recreant to our obligations, but the party will survive and the people will commission those to serve them who will be true to the faith, to the people, and to the cause of justice and liberty.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has been making a gallant fight in the interests of the people. The able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], with force and eloquence, has pointed out the iniquities of this bill before us. The country have been advised of the sinister and sordid forces which have written this bill and, in my opinion, when the people are aroused, as they will be, unsparing criticism will be leveled against those who supported it.

Mr. President, this bill seems to be fashioned upon the theory that by taxation the wealth of individuals may be increased. This is a pork-barrel bill, and certain interests are getting their share of the plunder. It has been characterized as iniquitous, as violating the principles of justice. I charge that it is a bill written by the few and in the interests of the few. As such I denounce it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, not for the purpose of any argument upon the subject but simply for the RECORD and for those who do not always immediately grasp what a specific duty means I desire briefly to say to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that while in this paragraph we have not separated the sheep from the goats we have provided for both the sheep and the goats a duty of $2 per head and we have imposed on mutton and goat meat 2½ cents a pound. We have, however, made a decided difference between the sheep and the goats on one side and the pigs on the other by lowering the duties upon pig meat very materially.

In order that Senators may have an idea of what the change means from the ad valorem standpoint I will say that we have fixed the rate on swine at one-half of 1 cent a pound, which is equivalent to about 5 per cent ad valorem; on fresh pork, at three-fourths of 1 cent per pound, which amounts to about 4 per cent ad valorem; and on bacon and hams and shoulders and other pork, prepared or preserved, 2 cents a pound, which amounts to about 6 per cent ad valorem.

When we come to lard and lard compounds and substitutes there is a duty of 5 cents per pound imposed, which amounts to about 30 per cent ad valorem. It is a protection not only to lard and lard products but it is also a protection to some extent to the cottonseed products which are converted into what are called hydrogenated lard compounds.

It is also proper to say at this time as a mere matter of explanation that the imports of hog products, as has already been stated by the Senator from Utah, are almost negligible; they amount to but very little. The only kind that comes in in any quantity, and that not very great, is a certain variety of bacon and shoulders, mostly coming from Canada, that are prepared in a certain way. Those are very much higher priced in the market than are the ordinary American bacon, shoulders, and hams, the Canadian product being about 33⅓ per cent higher. Those are what are known as the English bacon and the English style of shoulder and ham. There is very much more lean as compared with the fat in the English product than there is in the American product. The duties are paid upon the basis of about 31 cents a pound on the imported bacon, while we are exporting American bacon for about 20 cents per pound. The duty, of course, will not affect the ordinary ham and bacon, and if it affects anything at all it will affect only the higher-priced ham and bacon for those who want a special kind and are willing to pay a specially high price for it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I should like to have included in the RECORD a table showing the estimated annual production, exports, imports, and consumption of pork in the United States from 1907 to 1921.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

PORK (EXCLUDING LARD).

Estimated annual production, exports, imports, and consumption of pork in United States.

[1] Includes differences between quantities in storage at beginning and end of year.

It is well known that the hog industry is subject to rather violent changes due to the economic situation and the character of the corn crop in a given year. This is illustrated in the table, in which it may be seen there are three lean years, viz, 1909, 1910, and 1917. The shortage in 1909 and 1910 was due to the failure of the corn crop, and that of 1917 is attributed to overmarketing, including breeding stock, in the preceding year, due mostly to the attraction of high war prices. The enormous production in 1918 and 1919 evidence a remarkable recovery, which would have been impossible with any other class of live stock than the prolific and quick-maturing hog. The production in 1920 probably suffered somewhat from the heavy marketings of the previous year.

The exports of pork in 1920 and 1921 indicate a return to normal proportions as compared with the large war-time shipments of the previous two years. The reversal was no doubt aided also by the international economic conditions. The comparatively small imports of pork consist mostly of specialties consumed by foreign-born residents.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On the pending amendment I respectfully ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us have the amendment stated, as we can not on this side of the Chamber always hear what Senators on the other side say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 99, line 18, before the word "cents," it is proposed by the committee to strike out the numeral "1¼" and to insert the numeral "2," so as to read:

Bacon, hams, and shoulders, and other pork, prepared or preserved, 2 cents per pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment which has just been stated. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair, but making the transfer to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "yea."

Mr. McKINLEY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to my colleague, the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK], and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement concerning the transfer of my pair as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore in regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL. Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. RAWSON], I vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—43.

Ball	Ernst	Lodge	Poindexter
Broussard	Gooding	McCumber	Sheppard
Bursum	Hale	McKinley	Shortridge
Calder	Johnson	McLean	Smoot
Cameron	Jones, N. Mex.	McNary	Spencer

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 99, line 20, after the words "lard compounds and lard substitutes," to strike out "20 per cent ad valorem" and to insert in lieu thereof "5 cents per pound."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, it will be noted that the rate of 5 cents a pound provided by the Senate committee amendment is a large increase over the 20 per cent ad valorem rate proposed by the House bill. As we are heavy exporters of lard and lard compounds, the rules and principles governing all previous tariff legislation seem to have been abandoned in fixing the duty upon lard compounds and lard substitutes. There was no corresponding provision in the Payne-Aldrich law for lard compounds and lard substitutes, and in the Underwood law lard compounds and lard substitutes were admitted free of duty. A very small quantity of these commodities is imported, the imports, whatever they are, being included in the statistics as to lard; but the imports of lard are insignificant as compared to the exports.

It might be interesting in this connection to call attention to the ridiculousness of a duty upon lard when the imports are so insignificant as to be unrecorded and the exports amount to 43 per cent of the domestic production. In 1921 there were 2,095,000,000 pounds of lard and lard substitutes and lard compounds produced in this country, and 893,000,000 pounds were exported. As I have said, there were no imports at all, and therefore no figures for imports are given. It is one of the products of which we export most in proportion to the production in America. This item illustrates the extreme to which the principle of protection has been carried in this bill in providing for a protective tariff duty upon products that are exported in such very large quantities. There can be no revenue, for there are no imports, and therefore the duty can operate upon nothing at all; and to fix a duty upon a product which is produced in this country without competition in the world is, of course, absurd and ridiculous.

I do not know of anything in this bill that demonstrates better than this paragraph to what extremes the committee has gone in attempting to apply a protective tariff. It seems to me this is the last straw; and when we come to realize that lard and lard substitutes and lard compounds are by-products of the packing business, and that lards are largely handled and sold through the packing houses of this country, we can understand who the beneficiaries of these tariff duties are likely to be.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as I recall the report of the majority of the committee, nothing was said as to the reason for placing this high duty upon lard and lard compounds. Was any reason urged in the committee which is not a matter of record, and of which the Senator has knowledge, for this high duty?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I know of no reasons that were urged openly to the committee; and I can not understand why this change was made from the House rate of 20 per cent ad valorem to the rate of 5 cents per pound fixed in the Senate bill. If there were some evidence of even one pound of lard substitutes coming into this country, it might be possible to justify a rate of 5 cents per pound; but there are no statistics and no evidence, and if there is any one product that we are producing and exporting at a profit it is lard.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, it may be that the packers will need it at some time, and it is just as well to have it in case of necessity.

It is a fact known to everybody who lives in the country where hogs are raised to any great extent that the producers of hogs at this time buy their lard in great measure from the packers. The cost of labor and the difficulty of rendering a small amount of lard have induced the farmers who raise hogs in a great many instances first to sell their hogs and to buy their lard and, to a great extent, to buy their green hams, but the producers of the hogs themselves do not produce their own lard in this country. As the Senator has well said, lard is absolutely and exclusively and entirely a packing-house product. You can go into these little country towns, as well as into the cities, and you will not find 10 pounds of domestically made lard for sale. It all comes from the packers.

The Senator has asked for some reason for this duty. I suggest, if he is curious, that he write to Mr. Armour or Mr. Swift. Possibly they can give him some reason. There is nobody on this floor who can do it who will.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, of course, it is very evident that there can be no other reason except an opportunity given to those who produce and sell lard or lard products to charge 1 cent per pound more for lard and 5 cents per pound more for lard substitutes. There are not any imports to shut out. There is not any competition from outside to drive down the domestic price, and the only reason is that an opportunity is possibly given by this tariff to increase the cost to the consumers; and let me tell the Senator that if it operates, if this duty is effective, as there is on the average a production of 1,200,000,000 pounds of lard in this country, the consumers will have to pay tribute to these packers to the extent of $12,000,000 per year just for the one item of lard named in this bill.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. Upon mature consideration another reason occurs to me, though I hesitate very much to express it even in the form of a surmise or a conjecture. It might be useful in the way of buncombe in estimating the things which we have done for the farmer or the consumer, and setting them off against the things we have certainly done to him.

Mr. POMERENE. It fits in with the whole bill.

Mr. STANLEY. We might sort of grease him a little with this lard. For instance, we have certainly increased the cost of linen by every dime and every penny of duty that we have put on linen products. We have certainly increased the price of sugar by every cent we have put upon foreign sugar. We will increase the price of a thousand and one other things that are not produced in this country, or, if they are produced, are produced in part in this country by reason of this fostering tariff; and when you begin to add up the various items that constitute this burden that is now weighing upon the overtaxed citizen in a time of high cost of living, it might be just as well to say to the fellow out in the country: "Well, now, look here: Here is 5 cents a pound on 10 pounds or 20 pounds or 30 pounds of lard. You have sold so many hogs, and if they were made into lard that amounted to so much." Outside of its possible use by the packer, or outside of its immediate availability as buncombe, there is no reason for this duty that I can see.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I ask that the table giving the estimated annual production, exports, and consumption of lard in the United States be inserted in the RECORD. This table shows that lard is anything but an infant industry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

[1] Includes differences between quantities in storage at beginning and end of year.

The production of lard does not necessarily follow that of other pork products in relation to the number of hogs slaughtered in any given period of time. Certain conditions, as the plentifulness and cheapness of corn, determine whether the feeder shall market his hogs in fat or lean condition, and other economic factors determine whether the packer shall produce more or less lard than usual in the slaughtering process.

Regarding the exports of lard, it may be noted that those of the war period did not exceed pre-war totals as did those of other pork products. Lard exports have been large for a long period of years; in fact, the American lard hog has never had a competitor in the world's markets. It is, nevertheless, rather surprising to note that the lard exports of 1911 to 1913 were larger even than those of the years from 1915 to 1918. This is explained by the fact that the Central Powers, Germany especially, as well as the continental European neutrals, were large consumers of our lard, and the loss of this trade affected the totals until 1919. The lard exports in 1921 were unprecedented, being much the largest in history.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, before a vote is taken I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee what is the reason for this duty on lard, in view of the fact that there is such a tremendous amount of exports—namely, 43 per cent of our production goes abroad—and not a pound of lard comes in? What is the reason for it?

Mr. McCUMBER. We get very little importation, that is true. Very little lard comes in. The duty is only 1 cent per pound, and that is a very moderate duty. I do not think it will have the slightest effect in the world upon the prices in the United States. Those who represent the farming element of the country all feel that it will be beneficial to them, and while I can not agree that it will make much difference, I certainly know that it can not by any possibility be injurious to the trade.

When we come to the substitutes, that raises entirely a different question. There are the cotton seed and the soya bean and half a hundred other things that we make lard substitutes from, and there is a displacement proposition. Even though the Senator might say that it would not come in direct competition, it does come in competition as a displacement article; and in order to maintain a better rate for the American product of the hog, we have given a duty which amounts to about 30 per cent ad valorem.

On this point I want to correct an erroneous statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. He continually speaks of our raising the rate. The rate of duty that is fixed in the House bill, of course, is an ad valorem rate based on the American selling price of the product, and there is usually a difference between the American selling price of the product and the foreign selling price, and a rate based upon foreign valuation is much less, as a rule, than the same rate based upon American valuation; so while possibly it would appear upon the face of it to be something of a raise, I do not think the real ad valorem would be more than 3 or 4 per cent higher.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, let us see what this situation is. No lard comes in. The duty is 1 cent a pound. No lard multiplied by 1 cent a pound means no revenue coming into the Treasury. The Senator from Massachusetts has said that no lard substitutes or compounds come in here.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to correct him there? The Senator repeats that no importations come in. Considerable importations come in, from 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 pounds. It is not a great amount compared with our enormous product, I am willing to admit; but it is not true that no importations come in.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the figures that I have before me show that the lard substitutes and lard compounds that came in in 1921 were about 4,000 pounds, and I have no figures of lard at all. Will the Senator state where he got his figures of 1,000,000 pounds?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is speaking of substitutes only.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Exactly.

Mr. McCUMBER. The question was directed to both lard and substitutes, as I understood.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The table which I have just offered for the RECORD, from the Tariff Commission, gives no imports whatever of lard.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this exhibit which the Senator from Massachusetts introduced gives the imports and exports for each of the years from 1907 to 1921. In 1907 the exports were 589,000,000 pounds; in 1921 they were 893,000,000 pounds; but under the column of "Imports (less reexports)" there is no report of anything at all.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to call attention to another document which I have in my hand, issued by the Department of Commerce, in which a record is made of the imports entered for consumption during the calendar year 1921? That gives the imports of lard, lard compounds, and lard substitutes as 4,795 pounds. Where the Senator gets his 1,000,000 pounds, in view of that document issued by the Department of Commerce, is beyond my understanding.

Mr. POMERENE. That is very interesting, and it would seem as if the Senator from Massachusetts were correct; at least, I shall believe that until I know where the chairman of the committee gets his figures; and when I make that statement, I do not mean to even hint that he would misrepresent the situation; but there are statisticians and statisticians, and figures and figures.

Mr. McCUMBER. In 1918 it was about one and one-third million pounds, I think, and it has been going down, and has gone down very rapidly, until in the nine months of 1921, which is the only record we have for that year, it was something over four or five thousand pounds.

Mr. POMERENE. Billion, or million?

Mr. McCUMBER. I said four or five thousand.

Mr. POMERENE. But I understood the Senator to say it went from a billion pounds.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; from about one million.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well. If that is so, even as a protectionist, you do not need to be alarmed over these imports. I want to defend the work of this Congress if I can, and I would like to know what defense I can make to this particular item.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me call the Senator's attention to the Summary of Tariff Information, page 640, where it is said that the quantity in pounds in 1919 was 3,845,865. The value was $1,042,989.

I said it had gone down, until in 1921, though I do not think for the whole year, it will run as high as 5,000 pounds; but what it may be in 1922, 1923, or 1924, of course, is entirely conjectural.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator did not read all of this report. Let me read a part of the same paragraph. The Summary of Tariff Information, on page 640, says:

> Imports of lard are insignificant compared with production or export, having reached the maximum of 1,131,998 pounds, including compounds and substitutes, in the fiscal year 1918, with 230,816 pounds as the average for the four years previous. Under a duty of 1½ cents per pound 4,117 pounds were imported in 1913 and 125,636 pounds came in duty free in 1914. Later imports of lard, lard compounds, and lard substitutes for calendar years are as follows.

Without reading all of them, for 1920 the quantity was 14,456 pounds, and for the nine months of 1921 it was 3,955 pounds, and the value was $741.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is what I gave.

Mr. POMERENE. I thought the first part of it the Senator had not read; but it does seem to me that no reason has been given at all for this duty, unless it is anticipated that there will be future sources of supply. I do not know where they are.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, if we export this product in such large quantities, and the imports, if any, are limited, and come into the United States perhaps by reason of the proximity of some community producing a limited quantity, is there any reason for the imposition of this duty unless it is intended that the power shall be given certain interests in the United States to increase the price of lard and other commodities, or if they prefer to maintain existing prices, against all tendencies of proper economic laws, to adjust prices to the law of supply and demand?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Of course, what the Senator has stated is true, and if the result in the case of lard is an increase in prices, on account of the levying of a duty of 1 cent per pound, the consumers of America will pay a tribute to the packers of between twelve and twenty million dollars per year.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether there is any appreciable quantity of lard sold by any agencies in the United States other than the packers?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. They control practically the entire output of lard.

Mr. KING. Then, of course, this is a gratuity to the packers?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is all.

Mr. KING. And it will cost the people of the United States, the consumers, millions of dollars.

Mr. POMERENE. This protects an infant industry!

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in the Tariff Summary we have figures, first as to lard and then as to lard substitutes. In speaking with reference to imports, under the head of lard they give the imports for the nine months of 1921 as 3,945 pounds. That would amount to about 5,000 pounds a year.

In speaking of the imports of lard substitutes, on the next page the commission says:

> Imports of lard compounds and substitutes are combined in the statistics with the imports of lard.

That means that the imports of lard and of lard substitutes amounted in 1921 to about 5,000 pounds. Add the production of lard, which amounts to 1,373,000,000 pounds, to the production of lard substitutes, which amount to 1,171,000,000 pounds, and you have a combined production of lard and lard substitutes of 2,564,000,000 pounds.

Taking the exports of the two products, you have exports amounting to 742,000,000 pounds, three-fourths of a billion pounds, as against imports of 5,000 pounds. That is the situation, two and a half billion pounds of production, three-quarters of a billion pounds exports, and 5,000 pounds imported. Yet, as I read the RECORD, it is thought necessary by the committee to increase the rate upon lard compounds from 20 per cent ad valorem to 5 cents a pound.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if the imposition of the tax of 5 cents a pound will not permit the trust, the packers, those who control the lard products of the United States, to raise the price above the fair market price substantially up to the level of that figure—5 cents per pound—plus the fair market price?

Mr. SIMMONS. If that is not the purpose of this, there can be no purpose to it. Of course, it is absolutely ridiculous to say that for protection purposes you need a duty when you have a production of two and a half billion pounds, export of three-quarters of a billion, and imports of only 5,000 pounds. It is also absurd to say that a duty under those circumstances would increase the price to the farmer; but if this product is controlled by a trust, and the trust desires to further advance their prices, once they have a duty, they might, if they made an advance, incur foreign competition, and if the purpose of this is not to enable the trust who control these products to further advance their prices in case they see fit to do so, without danger of competition from abroad, then there can be no purpose behind it; unless it is to deceive. There may be a purpose to deceive.

Mr. KING. The last sentence of the able Senator from North Carolina, whose knowledge of this bill and its evil effects, and of tariff legislation generally, is not surpassed by that of any man in public office, stated what seems to be a truism that this rate is either to deceive the agricultural interests of the United States, or it is to put it into the hands of the packers to charge the American consumers approximately 5 cents per pound more for lard than current market prices would warrant, without giving any compensation or corresponding benefit to the farmer from who the product was purchased. In other words, Mr. President, the purchasers of the hogs from which the lard is obtained may not avail themselves of the tariff of 5 cents a pound when they make their purchases from the farmers, and may announce that they intend to sell the lard for a certain price, which, for the time being, may be a current price; for the sake of illustration, say, 6 cents a pound; but after having made the purchases or the contracts for purchase upon that basis, later they may aver that world conditions have changed, or that labor costs have been augmented, or some contingency has arisen, as a result of which they will have to avail themselves of the tariff of 5 cents per pound, and raise the price practically 5 cents to the American consumer. It is a deceptive, wicked scheme to rob and plunder the working people of the United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator might say this, that it is either to enable the trust to advance their prices with impunity, so far as foreign competition is concerned, or it is to deceive some class of our people, or it is a silly performance.

Mr. KING. Yes; I think the Senator from North Carolina has properly characterized it, and within that one sentence has described just exactly what this proposition means. Yet able, intelligent, patriotic Senators upon the other side of the aisle, with a placidity upon their faces which seems at times to be a benediction, accept this proposition, and wait with equanimity the vote which will record their triumph.

Mr. President, the cynicism displayed by some in the consideration of a bill fraught with such great consequences to the American people, especially the working classes, is something which I can not comprehend. Here are millions and tens of millions of working people, a large number of them out of employment, with the prospect of reduced wages, with dislocated business, with industrial depression, and we are engaged in the task of passing a bill to add to their burdens, to multiply their woes, and to cast obstacles in the pathway of the resuscitation of American business. Yet some say they are statesmen, and we declare that we are interested in the welfare of the people.

It is my opinion that it will soon be written of this Congress, of this Senate, that no Congress and no Senate was more amenable to the whisperings and to the demands of the special and sinister interests of the United States. The people have been forgotten in the drafting of this bill. The masses who work and toil are to pay tribute to certain interests and to predatory classes in the United States. We are invoking the taxing power to transfer property from the pockets of the many into the pockets of the few, and we do it under the guise of protection and in the "interest of the people." Well, Mr. President, no protests are availing; the bill will be passed; the understandings have been reached; the juggernaut will move on. The Senator from Massachusetts will fall beneath this car that is being driven at the crack of the whip of the Senator from North Dakota. But I want to warn these Republicans and others who join the procession in what they regard as a glorious triumphal march that there will be a to-morrow, and the Senator from Massachusetts and those who are trying to protect the interests of the people will come into their own and be vindicated and be the recipients of the gratitude of millions of the American people.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if adjectives were shells, I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] would be the most terrific broadsider on the face of the earth; but inasmuch as they are really innocent and are harmless and never change a vote, I think we can still rely upon the duty which we have placed upon these articles.

The packing houses manufacture very little of these compound products. The great bulk of the compound product, which is made of many different kinds of oils, but mainly of cottonseed oil, is manufactured by a great many independent concerns, and they are strong competitors of the packers, who make their standard pure hog lard. That competition undoubtedly will go on. We are giving, I think, when we give a cent a pound on lard, certainly all the protection that they need. We have given 30 per cent ad valorem upon the compounds which are the competitors of the products of the great packing houses for the most part.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the principal legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote as to my pair and transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLASS. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. CARAWAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES].

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—37.

Borah	Gooding	McLean	Spencer
Broussard	Hale	McNary	Sterling
Calder	Johnson	Newberry	Sutherland
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Townsend

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, before proceeding further I desire at this time to ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its session on this calendar day it shall take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I ask that the next amendment be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 99, line 21, after the words "reindeer meat," the committee proposes to strike out the words "20 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. MCCUMBER. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me to let the RECORD show what the equivalent ad valorem duty is and what the imports are under paragraph 704, I desire to say that as to reindeer meat in 1920 the imports amounted to 1,600 carcasses, weighing about 250,000 pounds, valued at $60,000, or 24 cents per pound. On the basis of 24 cents per pound the 4 cents per pound duty is equal to 17 per cent ad valorem. During the calendar year 1921 the imports of venison amounted to 176,467 pounds, valued at $41,792, or 24 cents per pound. On the basis of 24 cents per pound the 4 cents per pound rate is equivalent to 17 per cent ad valorem. During the calendar year 1921 the imports of "game not specially provided for," other than birds, amounted to 516,242 pounds, valued at $135,107, or 26 cents per pound. On the basis of 26 cents per pound the rate of 4 cents per pound is equivalent to 15 per cent ad valorem.

I desire to say that these are in the nature of luxury taxes. The prices of the commodities as a rule are above those of beef and other like meats in the United States. They are not nearly so good as beef and other domestic meats, but are imported for those who desire to buy venison and reindeer meat, and so forth. The duty is rather moderate.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I rose to state that I did not consider the paragraph of sufficient importance to provoke any discussion. I did not have any intention of doing more than asking for a formal vote upon the paragraph. I think the figures the Senator has given, though, refer to the importation of venison rather than to reindeer meat. My information is that there have been no importations of reindeer meat, and that this duty was fixed at the request of Alaskan producers of reindeer meat who desire to control in the future the home market in America.

Mr. MCCUMBER. The most of the reindeer meat comes from Alaska. The Senator is right in that respect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 99, line 22, after the word "game," to insert "(except birds)"; and in line 23, before the word "cents," to strike out "1½" and to insert "4," so as to make the paragraph read:

PAR. 704. Reindeer meat, venison, and other game (except birds) not specially provided for, 4 cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, after the words "PAR. 706," to strike out "Sausage casings, weasands, intestines, bladders, tendons, and integuments, not specially provided for; meats;" and to insert "Meats," so as to read:

PAR. 706. Meats, fresh, prepared, or preserved, not specially provided for—

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I will merely say that the "sausage casings, weasands, intestines, bladders, tendons, and integuments, not specially provided for," and here proposed to be stricken out by the committee amendment, have been transferred to paragraph 1644a on the free list.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 100, paragraph 706, line 4, before the words "per centum," to strike out "15" and to insert "20."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, in reference to this amendment all that I care to say is better said than I could say it if I made a lengthy speech in the report of the Tariff Commission on the emergency tariff law. That report, which was presented on yesterday and which has just been put in printed form, says in regard to prepared or preserved meats:

> Imports of prepared and preserved meats into the United States have never been of more than negligible importance. Tables 1 and 2 show this quite clearly. On the other hand, excluding bacon, hams, and other pork products, exports of prepared and preserved meats have far exceeded imports. They increased greatly during the war years, and have since returned nearly to pre-war figures. The pre-war export total not only was far larger than imports, but was shipped to all parts of the world to supply a special trade for these somewhat specialized products. In the case of bacon, hams, and other pork products, imports have come mainly from Canada in the form of English type of meats. Our exports to Canada have far exceeded imports, while the export total is about equal to that of all other countries. Our exports increased greatly during the war years, and in the case of bacon and hams remain far above the pre-war figure. Tables 3 and 4 show this export trade.

Mr. President, the committee amendment increases the House rate. The House provision was for 15 per cent ad valorem, based upon American valuation. The Senate committee amendment is 20 per cent ad valorem. These products are exported in large quantities, and there are practically no importations. The very same principle is involved here which was involved in the other amendments which have been discussed in the paragraphs which have preceded the one now pending.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I understood the Senator to say that a considerable increase has been proposed by the Senate committee over the House rate. Is the 20 per cent ad valorem on the foreign valuation greater than 15 per cent on the American valuation?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I desire to say that I find myself mistaken. I had in mind the increase over the Underwood law and over the rates in previous tariff legislation.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Yes; under the Underwood law these articles are free.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The rate named here is about the same as the House rate. Am I correct?

Mr. MCCUMBER. I wish to say that the rate in the law of 1909 was 25 per cent and in the emergency tariff law was 25 per cent, while under the act of 1913 these articles were free. We have imposed a duty at 20 per cent, which is less than that in the law of 1909 and in the emergency tariff law.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I had for the moment forgotten the distinction between the foreign valuation and the American valuation. The proposed rate is an increase over the Underwood law, which was the law in existence at the passage of the emergency tariff law a year ago last May. Under the Underwood law these products were admitted free. The rate fixed by the Senate committee is substantially the rate which is fixed in the House bill, although there may be a slight increase or a slight decrease. But even the House rate is excessive. I have nothing further to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] desired at this time to call up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, and I advised him a short time ago that I would agree to lay aside temporarily the tariff bill after we had concluded the meat schedule. We have just finished that; so, if the Senator from Washington desires to go on, I have no objection.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If the Senator from Washington proceeds with the consideration of the conference report, does the Senator from North Dakota intend to postpone action on the amendments which we have not yet reached until to-morrow morning?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; it was my intention to pass them over.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 27, 29, 42, 45, 46, 53, 56, 66, and 67.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 7, 8, 10, 11, 22, 26, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 38, 39, 40, 44, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 55, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, 70, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 87, 88, and 90; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$16,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$70,902,478"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Class 1 (Fleet Naval Reserve)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$121,745,426"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "at hospitals and on board ship in lieu of subsistence allowance"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,800,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ", whenever the number of civilian professors or instructors employed in such duties shall be less than 80: Provided, That in reducing the number of civilian professors no existing contract shall be violated: Provided further, That no civilian professor, associate or assistant professor, or instructor shall be dismissed, except for sufficient cause, without six months' notice to him that his services will be no longer needed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$556,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 71: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,001,261"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 72: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,229,461"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 89: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "for the procurement of gyro compass equipments for destroyers not already supplied; for the completion of armor, armament, ammunition, and torpedoes under manufacture on April 8, 1922, for the supply and complement of vessels which may be proceeded with as hereinbefore mentioned, including not to exceed 400 torpedoes of the destroyer type, and not more than $14,000,000 of the funds herein made available under 'Increase of the Navy' shall be applied to objects of expenditure heretofore under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Ordnance"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on Senate amendments numbered 3, 6, 13, 62, 64, 65, 86, 91, 92, and 93.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether any of the conferees are on the floor?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, we have sent for the members of the conference committee, but they have not come in yet. If the Senator wants any explanation, I suggest that the conference report be temporarily laid aside until we can get them here.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator from Utah if there is any objection to adopting the report now, or is he desirous of discussing the matter?

Mr. KING. I want to say to the Senator that I do not know what changes were made. I have had no opportunity to read the report. It has just been handed down, and I do not want to assent to it. I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is ready to discuss one aspect of it, and I think, therefore, we may proceed with its consideration.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that I find myself compelled to object very strenuously to the adoption of this report.

Some days ago we had a lengthy discussion in this Chamber in regard to the reserve officers in the naval air service. After extended consideration by the Senate Naval Affairs Committee it was agreed, first, that the examinations given to the reserve officers in the naval aviation service was unfair; that these officers were not given sufficient time to prepare for the examination, which was an exceptionally difficult one; that many of them were kept on active duty until the very day of the examination; and that under all the circumstances the reserve officers should be given another examination. Provision was therefore made in the Senate for keeping 50 of these reserve officers in the service for one year in order that an examination could be held during the next year, and thus a further opportunity given to qualify for appointment in the regular naval service.

It may seem very trivial to stand upon this floor and take the time of the Senate to speak for 50 men, but there is a very important principle involved here. How can this Congress justify a finding that an injustice has been done to Government employees, to say nothing of men who have served their country in time of war, and permit that finding to go without the application of any remedy?

I do not know of anything more heartless that has happened since I have been in the Senate. I have no personal interest in these young men. I hardly know one of them; but I do not know anything meaner, I do not know anything more reprehensible than the treatment that has been accorded to these young men who in the first week of this war left their homes and their studies, and have consecrated every day of their lives to the service of their country up to this day, only to find themselves thrown out on July 1, like old junk, after an examination was given them which a committee of the Senate says was unfair and unreasonable. More wasted time and effort. For weeks you debated and held hearings, and now you do nothing. When will this inaction and do-nothing policy of Congress end?

May I say a word to you Republicans? May I tell you what I think is your weakness in the next election? It is your soullessness, your heartlessness. You will boast, as you can boast, of having saved money. Ah, but when the record is disclosed of how you have treated the ex-service men, of how you have treated the Government employees, of how you have dismissed the navy yard employees during the most serious depression in this country, of how you have reduced wages, you will find that your boasts about reducing expenses will not make much of an impression upon the masses of the American people; but just such incidents as this, which is only one of many you are responsible for, is making an impression as to the real character of your administration that, if I am any judge of political psychology, will very, very seriously injure you with the American electorate. You ought not to permit it. You ought not let a hundred young men, with friends in every part of this country and in every American legion post and every war veterans' organization, be able to tell the story that they will tell of your indifference, of your heartlessness, of your ingratitude.

I am amazed and astonished that you would permit the conferees of the House not to see what an absurd and ridiculous position you put yourselves in by saying to these brave fighters: "Yes; we have been mean to you. Yes; we have treated you unjustly—the examination was wrong. You have served your country five years faithfully, and we believe you ought not to be thrown out now as discards, but what can we do; what can we do?" The other branch of Congress is Republican, and this branch is Republican, and you are responsible for the legislation that passes through Congress. You are responsible for what Congress fails to do, as well as what you accomplish.

Talk about sympathetic treatment of soldiers! These young men you have seen daily in the sky. Since this amendment has been pending here one of the men who was to benefit by this legislation has gone to his death working for you.

The wife of one of them called me from this Chamber yesterday to ask me what she could do when her husband was to be, on the 1st of July, sent out into the world without a dollar or a job or a position. Another young man has been here who met with an accident last December and is unable to speak above a whisper. His throat has been paralyzed so that he can not taste any difference between one kind of food and another, and he is fighting bravely for his health, with a wife and a child to support; and he, an invalid because he served his country, is being discarded on the 1st of July. Why? Because there is no opportunity in Congress to discuss these questions and have a vote taken, for the House never, never would reject this amendment if a vote and a roll call had been had in that body and if it had not been left to conferees behind closed doors to perpetrate this injustice. What will the mothers of sons say when they hear this story of your forgetfulness, of your indifference?

Ah, you have been losing sight of the things that penetrate, of that sense of fairness and justice that our people demand and the absence of which they resent. Yes; you have been losing sight of the real things by which people judge an administration. It is not alone the cold, mathematical, financial tables that they will consider, but the question, "Is there any heart, is there any soul, is there any sense of justice in small as well as great things; is there any humanitarianism at Washington?" Here you are confessing to the country an injustice done—to whom? To the bravest and noblest young men that ever served a noble cause or a great country.

I am almost inclined to keep this floor until my very strength fails me in protest against this action. It happens that only 86 men are involved, but the principle is just the same as if it were 8,600.

What kind of examination was given them, you ask me? Young aviators, holding on in the service for five years, who left their schoolbooks at the outbreak of the war and became so skilled, such experts, that their superior officers said, "You remain here. We want you permanently in the Navy. Do not go into civilian life, now that the armistice has been signed and the war is over. Remain." And since the armistice and up to this day each of them has been given two promotions upon the recommendation of his superior officer, raised from the rank of ensign to lieutenant, junior grade, and then to lieutenant, senior grade. Then an examination is ordered, not by your administration, but by the previous administration. Ah, that matters not with you; the feeling here is that whatever is ordered by the powers that be must be accepted and approved. You are even unwilling to tell Army and naval policy makers that they are wrong when you know it. The last administration ordered the examination.

I believe that if Secretary Daniels were in that office to-day he would repudiate the examination if he knew its real significance, for he was a man of heart. Of course, it was a formal matter with the Secretary of the Navy, prepared by the Bureau of Navigation. The examination requires these young men to pass on subjects on which men who have been at sea for years are required to pass—men who have been at sea and reach the state where they have to be promoted from line officers as junior lieutenants to senior lieutenants. Aviation was only one of ten subjects, an optional subject with them, given only 10 points; and these young men who never saw the deck of a naval vessel, who never were on a naval vessel in their lives, who never had an opportunity of studying naval subjects, who knew nothing of navigation, were given questions like this: "How would you dock a boat if the wind was blowing a gale of 45 miles and hour, and the space you had to move the boat about in was of certain given dimensions?"

The Army had reserve officers in the Aviation Corps. The Marine Corps had reserve officers in their Aviation Corps. What did the Army do? They said: "Are you qualified as an aviator? What does your record show? Then you are accepted, because we want skilled aviators, and we do not require aviators to qualify as line Army officers." The Marine Corps said the same thing; and these men were accepted in the Army and in the Marine Corps on the strength of their records as aviators in the Army and in the Marine Corps. When it came to the Navy, the old-line officers said: "We must have our aviators qualified to navigate ships at sea. We must have them capable of going down into the engine rooms and acting as engineers. They must know all about naval line officers' duties. With us aviation is not a specialty." Why were they not honorable enough to tell these young men that at the end of the war?

What happened? When the examination papers were first examined, out of 290, only 27 passed. Congress said when it passed the act of 1920: "We want 500 of those naval reserve officers taken over into the regular Navy." It authorized 500. Only 290 took the examination which followed, and on the first examination, when the first markings came, only 27 passed. Of course, they had to re-mark the papers. The very fact that only 27 passed on the first examination is positive proof that the examination was unfair and unsuitable. No more evidence is required to prove what an absurd and ridiculous procedure it was.

Let us briefly discuss this policy. Are our naval aviators to be navigators and navigate sea craft as well as ships in the air? That is what the Navy is requiring. Note, however, the old line officers have not got to be aviators. But I am not going to discuss that so much as the mean manner in which these men were treated. I am not now going to discuss what the consequence of this policy is, except to say it has ruined aviation in the Navy. If they were to be given such an examination, should they not in fairness be given an opportunity to go to sea? Should they not in fairness have been given an opportunity to study? Should they not have been given six months at the academy at Annapolis to prepare for these examinations? But no; they were taken out of their airplanes and in 24 hours subjected to an examination such as graduates of the Naval Academy are given. The shame of it all! It is treatment inconceivable by fair-minded men!

To be sure, they had eight months' notice that this examination was going to be given; they had eight months' notice of what the subjects were going to be. They had no time off duty, however. In some instances a few men came and lectured to them in the evenings after hours, when they were free from their duties, but there was no opportunity given to them to really prepare for the examination.

The first mistake their superiors made was in encouraging these men to remain in the service. If they had been told the day of the armistice, or a year afterwards, that they would have to qualify as regular line naval officers, not one of them would have remained; they would have gone back to college; but for five years they were kept on not as line officers but only as aviators. They have been treated meanly and they are heartsore, because they have been kept on and on to train other men for their places, and on July 1, without profession or vocation, these 86 young men go out into this country of ours to tell this story of—I will not say contemptible treatment, but of unjust treatment, which is pathetic. The Senate never intended that this should happen, because we sought here to remedy that situation. We did everything possible, and it does seem to me that if the House conferees really understood the circumstances they would not permit this thing to happen.

What explanation did the House conferees give? They say that other reserve officers failed, too, and why should they not be taken care of as well as the aviators? I understand that is the explanaton. Let me explain the difference. All other reserve officers had been at sea, had been in the regular line of the naval service, had been on battleships, on cruisers, and on torpedo boats, and had every opportunity for five years to know, from their own personal experience during those five years, what the duties of line officers were; but not one of these aviators ever even trod the deck of a naval craft, and these young men are now discarded at a time when the country is passing through depression, at a time when there are no positions open for intelligent, bright, capable young men like these, after five years of hazardous labor, after five years of daily risking their lives for their country.

Do you know the record of mortality among these men? Do you appreciate how many of the companions of these men have died? Do you appreciate that between now and July 1, when these men leave the service, we may read the names of some of these young men who have offered up their lives for their country, just as bravely and just as creditably as if they did it upon the battle fields?

Can not something be done? Are we hopeless? Are we to be put in the position of saying, as you must say to these young men, "We did what we could in the Senate. We were for you. We think an injustice has been done; we are helpless." Shame on a Congress that is helpless to right a wrong!

Ah, the morale! Each of us know the feeling with which some of the soldiers came back, the feelings they entertained, justly or unjustly it is not for me now to say, against what they called the old-line officers' treatment of civilian soldiers. Just imagine what the feelings of these young men will be, because this amendment was defeated not by Congress but by the naval officers who are determined that they have their way, for they are responsible. If they stood up in man fashion and asked justice for these men the House conferees would not have taken the action they did. It is their influence which has brought this about, and I suppose they are sitting in triumph over the empty protest I made and that the Senate made here for these young men, who mean nothing to them in the day's work. But a day of reckoning will come; you can not treat honorable, intelligent men like this without a comeback.

Where do these men go? Let us follow them. They are to be ex-service men. They went through the war. They are among the best educated of our war veterans. They are college-bred men. Where do they go? They go into the posts of the American Legion, into the war veterans' posts, and they will become leaders. They will be asked their opinion about the Army and the Navy, and their experiences in the service of their country. What can they say? What must they say? How much enthusiasm can they have for a Government that is so heartless as to treat them in this manner? It is not the Government; it is the servants of the Government, who have not beeen willing to do justice, who have admitted that there is something which ought to be remedied, but who have not been able to find a remedy.

Have we the courage even now to send this bill back and say, "Men of the House, you could not have understood the situation, or you would not have permitted this?" This is not an effort to find positions for men. Congress has asked for 500 of these men. The law of the land asked that 500 of these men be taken over, and only about 150 of them have been accepted. Who are they? At one station in Pensacola practically every man selected by the Navy Department to train new recruits in learning the science and art of flying failed. Understand, the experts, the men whom the Navy Department said knew more about flying than any other men in the Navy, and therefore must train the young men who came from Annapolis—cautious men, careful men, wise men, safe men—every one of them failed, because, as they said themselves, they had not time to study; and not only did they have no time to study, but they said that after being hours in the air training cadets they could not sit down and apply themselves to the mathematical problems involved in subjects in which they had nobody to instruct them.

Time will not permit me to discuss the great economic loss involved. It cost millions of dollars to train these men—$40,000 each is one estimate—and all this is to be thrown away. Cadets from Annapolis are to be trained, I suppose, to take their places, and you will appropriate millions of dollars to replace the destruction of airships and property required in this work. What becomes of your boasted economy in the face of the rejecting of this governmental asset of $4,000,000, the sum it cost to train these eighty-odd aviators, by dismissing these trained men for 80 untrained men?

I shall not discuss the subject any longer. I have no further responsibility. I have tried to make the best fight I could because these young men touched my heart, because I felt my Government was doing an injustice to them, because I believed they should not be treated in this manner. The responsibility is yours. It will be checked up against you. It will come home to you. So far as I know them, practically every one of these young men is destined to be an influential citizen, and they will tell this story, and they will tell it to their comrades, and whomever they tell it to will have to admit, because it is on the records here, that an injustice was done them, and this Congress confessed its incapacity to remove the injustice.

Mr. President, I shall vote against the acceptance of this conference report. I suppose it is useless to ask or to suggest that any further steps be taken at this late hour to try and right this wrong; but the wrong is there, and you must stand the consequences. Another item of failure is to be recorded against you. The debit side of your stewardship is already long. Go on with your dollar-saving policies—but don't forget that most American people place justice above money.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senate conferees accepted, in substance, the view of the Senator from Massachusetts in this matter; at least they adopted the same conclusion, upon the action of the Senate, and it was only as a last resort that they yielded upon the amendment. I think it was one of the last points in disagreement between the conferees of the House and Senate, if not the last, and it was a question of accepting the conference report or having a permanent disagreement.

The objection urged by the other House has been stated by the Senator from Massachusetts that if these young men were given a reexamination, or if they were absolved from the penalty of having failed in the examination, the same privilege ought to be accorded to those who fail in the examinations in every other branch of the Navy.

I ask for the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, there is another item I want to speak of. I very largely share the views expressed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] on this subject. It seems to me that at times there is a good deal of autocratic arbitrariness in certain branches of the Navy, with which I have no sympathy.

I wish to ask a question or two with regard to the provisions of the bill respecting the Naval Academy. I am not quite clear that I understand what the effect of this legislation will be.

As I understand it, the appropriation for the academy, for the pay of professors and others, remains at $421,500, as the House originally fixed it. Am I right about that?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is correct.

Mr. POMERENE. There are 118 civilian professors in the academy, and this seems to leave it in the power of somebody to reduce that number to 80. Is that right?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is right, subject to certain conditions. It is provided that no existing contract shall be violated, and provided further that no civilian professor, associate professor, assistant professor, or instructor shall be dismissed except for sufficient cause without six months' notice. The conferees were not advised, and there was no way of ascertaining to a certainty, whether any civilian professors would be immediately discharged, or when they would be discharged, under the conditions which I have just stated. Consequently, they left the amount of the appropriation at the maximum amount fixed by the House.

Mr. POMERENE. This means, then, that any professor or instructor who has not been employed for three years can be summarily removed?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; the three-year provision was stricken out in conference. That was in the amendment as agreed to by the Senate, but the conferees eliminated it, so that no professor or assistant or associate professor or instructor, whether he has been there for three years or any other length of time, as I interpret the amendment with the amendment as agreed to in conference, can be discharged without six months' notice.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Washington, though perhaps he has already answered it. What does the conference report provide in the case of certain instructors who have been notified that their services are to be dispensed with? Will the limitation to which the Senator has just referred apply to them? Are they entitled to six months' notice, or may they be summarily dismissed? Does the report make that clear?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is no express or specific provision with regard to such a case as that stated by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. What is the opinion of the Senator on that point? If there should be a case of that kind, what does the Senator think would be the law?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not considered what would be the situation as to professors who have already been notified that their services would be dispensed with. That matter was discussed to some extent in the Senate at the time the amendment was adopted. I think the junior Senator from Ohio is fully as capable as I am, and probably more so, of construing the effect of the amendment in such a case as he has stated. I think the practical result, leaving out of consideration the technical construction of it, would depend to some extent, as in many instances Congress has to depend where laws are being changed, upon the spirit which the administrative officials at the Naval Academy adopt toward the intention of Congress as exemplified in the amendments.

Of course the provisions here can not have any effect until the bill is enacted into law. I am frank to say to the Senator from Ohio that there is no retroactive clause. My information is, however, that the academic board and superintendent of the academy have made the statement to Congress, a copy of which I think reached some members of the committee, that it is their intention to observe the spirit and letter of this law as far as they were advised in the process of its being framed.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator say the academic board has advised his committee to that effect? I have received no information of that kind, and that is why I am asking the question of the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the advice we received.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, there is a good deal of circumlocution in the bill which I do not like. I have always been in the habit of calling black black and white white, and I do not believe in beating the devil around the bush with this kind of language.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is my recollection that the Senator from Ohio helped to frame it, or at least took part in the discussion of it in the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. I beg the Senator's pardon; I had nothing whatsoever to do with the framing of the bill and knew nothing about it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the Senator was present at the time it was debated in the Senate——

Mr. POMERENE. Indeed I was present.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And the Senator took part in the debate.

Mr. POMERENE. When this matter was debated the general statement was made that it would be threshed out in conference. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] was accepted, and that was at far as it went.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I want to say to the Senator from Ohio, in perfect frankness, that I am not aware of any change that was made in the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] which in any way whatsoever changed the effect of it. I am sure it was not the intention of any member of the conference to change the effect of it. But to some extent the conferees changed the form and made it more direct perhaps than it was before, and I think perhaps made the provision and the condition that was attached to the method of discharging civilian instructors at the academy more drastic than under the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. POMERENE. The provision as contained in the bill as it passed the Senate reads:

Provided further, That no civilian professor who has been employed for three years or more shall be dismissed without six months' notice to him that his services will no longer be needed.

As adopted by the conferees, it has been changed to read:

That no civilian professor, associate or assistant professor, or instructor shall be dismissed, except for sufficient cause, without six months' notice to him that his services will be no longer needed.

The fact remains that 118 civilian professors can be reduced to 80, if I understand this language correctly. Then there is this protection, that the authorities there are expected to liberally construe the amendment. It reads:

That in reducing the number of civilian professors no existing contract shall be violated.

Then follows the further proviso which I have just read. There is no doubt in my mind that the authorities there have the right summarily to reduce the number of instructors to 80. Of course, there are varying contracts. I can make no specific statement about them without first having had an opportunity to study the contracts, but I am quite clear that the purpose is to eliminate, so far as the present management can, the civilian instructors.

I think to some extent the conferees have tied the hands of those people; at least it calls their attention to the fact that a decent respect ought to be given to the contracts. That is about all there is to it. There will be a number of those men displaced to make room for other instructors who have had no experience, or practically no experience, in teaching. That is the whole of it.

I do not care to argue the question further, but I do not like that kind of management in our public institutions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Five amendments under the technical construction of the rule of the House were considered as not agreed to. They were taken back to the House. I ask that the action of the House on those amendments be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 11228, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 27, 1922.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 3, 6, 62, 92, and 93 to the bill (H. R. 11228) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes," and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 13, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert: "$200,000; for pay and allowances of officers and enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force, other than class 1, while on acttive duty for training; mileage for officers while traveling under orders to and from active duty for training; transportation of enrolled men to and from active duty for training, and subsistence and transfers en route or cash in lieu thereof; subsistence of enrolled men during the actual period of active duty for training; pay and allowances of officers of the Naval Reserve Force and pay, allowances, and subsistence of enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force when ordered to active duty in connection with the instruction, training, and drilling of the Naval Reserve Force; and retainer pay of officers and enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force, other than class 1, $2,800,000; in all, $3,000,000, which amount shall be available, in addition to other appropriations, for fuel and the transportation thereof and for all other expenses in connection with the maintenance, operation, repair, and upkeep of vessels assigned for training the Naval Reserve Force: Provided, That members of the Volunteer Naval Reserve may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be issued such articles of uniform as may be required for their drills and training, the value thereof not to exceed that authorized to be issued to other classes of the Naval Reserve Force and to be charged against the clothing and small stores fund: Provided further, That no part of the money appropriated in this act shall be used for the training of any member of the Naval Reserve Force except with his own consent. That, until June 30, 1923, of the Organized Militia as provided by law, such part as may be duly prescribed in any State, Territory, or for the District of Columbia shall constitute a Naval Militia; and, until June 30, 1923, such of the Naval Militia as now is in existence, and as now organized and prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy under authority of the act of Congress approved February 16, 1914, shall be a part of the Naval Reserve Force, and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to maintain and provide for said Naval Militia as provided in said act: Provided, That upon their enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force, and not otherwise until June 30, 1923, the members of said Naval Militia shall have all the benefits, gratuities, privileges, and emoluments provided by law for other members of the Naval Reserve Force; and that, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, duty performed in the Naval Militia may be counted as active service for the maintenance of efficiency required by law for members of the Naval Reserve Force."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 64, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert: "for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, $6,537,000; for new construction, buildings and improvements at air stations, at a total cost not to exceed $280,000, as follows: Anacostia, D. C., $50,000; Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, $150,000; Quantico, Va., $80,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 65, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$14,683,950."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 86, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert: "together with the sum of $7,500,000, which is hereby appropriated, and in addition thereto such amount, not exceeding $8,000,000, as may be realized at face value with accrued interest by the Navy Department, for application upon the obligations of the Navy Department for 'Increase of the Navy' from any assignment, such assignment being hereby authorized, by the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet

Corporation to the Navy Department of any obligation or debt or of any note or other securities held as security therefor owing to the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation or to the United States by any contractor to whom or to a subsidiary of whom the Navy Department may be obligated on account of supplies furnished or work done on account of 'Increase of the Navy.'"

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 91, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In line 1 of said amendment, after "has," insert "heretofore."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 13, 64, 65, 86, and 91.

The amendments were concurred in.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the Senate (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.), under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, June 29, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 28, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock, noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Vouchsafe, O Lord, to keep us this day without sin. Enable us to resume our work with new strength of mind and body. Direct us along the widening ways of life that lead to greater vision and broader outlook. Give restraint to all unguarded impulses and encouragement to all worthy endeavor. O bless our Nation, and may it love Thy law. Lift the light of Thy countenance upon all citizens. Do Thou help them to adjust all their differences. Bring them together in the bonds of mutual concern for the welfare, peace, and happiness of all. Preserve in our memories Thy wisdom and mercy, and may they never lie there in the spirit of ingratitude or let go unheeded. In Thy name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

During the reading of the Journal the following occurred:

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrew, Mass.	Cantrill	Dunn	Husted
Andrews, Nebr.	Carter	Edmonds	Ireland

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eighty-six Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAMTON) there were 200 ayes and 100 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Journal is not being read in full, and I insist on the reading of the last amendment referred to.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the conference report presented by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] should be a part of the Journal. I make the point of order that the conference report (H. Rept. 9103) would be a part of the Journal, and if a part of the Journal, it should be read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is not included in the Journal?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

The Clerk completed the reading of the Journal.

The Journal was approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing in 8-point type a treatise on the "Consolidation of Government science under the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution." It is a paper prepared by Mr. Arthur McDonald, formerly in the Government service, and would be of interest to those who are considering the reorganization of the governmental departments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a treatise on the "Consolidation of Government science." Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, who is Mr. McDonald?

Mr. LEHLBACH. He is a distinguished savant, a scholar for many years connected with the Government, a graduate of Harvard and various European universities, and has made a life study of science as applied to the Government service.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the title of the paper?

Mr. LEHLBACH. "Consolidation of Government science under the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the article is well written and useful, but it does not seem to me that it should be inserted in the RECORD. I trust that it will be given proper publicity in another way.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a very brief article on "Americanization."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a very brief article on Americanization. The article is as follows:

FOREIGNERS' CHILDREN TEACH PARENTS THE ENGLISH TONGUE—EXPERIMENT BEGUN FIVE WEEKS AGO GREAT AMERICANIZATION SCHEME, SAYS ALLIED PATRIOTIC SOCIETIES HEAD.

[By Mary Margaret McBride.]

"Mother's started back to school again—real school, under a stern master who insists upon the sacredness of lesson hours, frowns at holidays, and disapproves with all the vigor of his 15 years when mother misses a word.

"Father, too, has been hanging round the classroom lately, looking a little sheepish but unmistakably interested. And grandmama, who brought out her most scornful stock of old-fashioned Russian when the lesson thing was first mentioned, now sits in on the sessions every day with undisguised enthusiasm.

"Alexander, who, by an arrangement between the Allied Patriotic Societies of New York and the board of education, has been appointed special instructor in reading and writing, is only one of a number of higher-grade school children of foreign birth who have volunteered and qualified for this task.

OWN KIN THE PUPILS.

"Pupils of the newly made teachers in every case are members of their own families, who do not speak English, and such neighbors of foreign birth as care to join the classes. Fifteen-minute English classes are held on week days and 60-minute classes on Sundays. Every tenement is suddenly a schoolroom.

"'We of the Allied Patriotic Societies believe this experiment, begun five weeks ago at P. S. 62, is one of the greatest Americanization schemes ever tried,' Dwight Braman, president of the Allied Societies and one of the prime movers in the new plan, said yesterday at a meeting of the organization.

"'It is hard to realize that there actually are men and women in New York who have been here 20 years without learning to speak a single word of English. But pathetic cases of the sort are all the time coming to our notice.

"'A most interesting instance was brought to my attention recently when a father came down to one of the courts to plead for his son, who had been arrested. The son spoke perfect English, but the father, though he had been here 18 years, still knew only his native tongue.

"'The judge sentenced the son to teach the father English.'

"According to Mr. Braman, there are about 3,000,000 foreign born in New York who need instruction in English. These include chiefly Russians, Italians, Germans, and Poles, he declares.

"'Aliens can never become citizens until they have learned English,' he pointed out. 'They can not vote in this State until they can read and write English, and they can not even obey the laws when they do not know what they are.

SEES CURB TO CRIME.

"'We believe our new system will help put down crime, and certainly it will make home life happier and will increase the respect of children for their parents.

"'Now many of the Americanized boys and girls are ashamed of their foreign-speaking fathers and mothers, who, neither reading nor writing the language, are unable to absorb the manners and customs of this new country.

"'The children are enthusiastic over the chance to become instructors, and their ardor will be further kept alive by the award of prizes to those who get best results.

"'A great many of the men now in public life started as teachers, and we are convinced this training will be of inestimable value to the boys and girls themselves, as well as the members of their classes.'

"Among the other subjects discussed yesterday at a conference of representatives of the more than 30 patriotic organizations included in the Allied Societies was a plan for establishing a school for training patriotic speakers. Already there are 10 candidates for this school.

"There will be no more formal conferences of the Allied Societies until fall, Mr. Braman announced, but some of the members will remain on the job through the summer to see that Alexander and the other youthful preceptors keep their parent-pupils in the straight and narrow path of knowledge seeking."

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the business under the Calendar Wednesday rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to dispense with business under the Calendar Wednesday rule. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the business in order on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to dispense with the business of Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, on that motion I ask for recognition.

The SPEAKER. There are five minutes' debate for and against.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Wyoming yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but the gentleman is entitled to five minutes in his own right, and I prefer to have him use his own time.

Mr. CRAMTON. I should think the affirmative would speak first. I would simply like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming what business would be in order on Calendar Wednesday to-day?

Mr. MONDELL. A bill providing a standard flour barrel. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Very important. Mr. Speaker, I take it the gentleman from Wyoming has the floor, and when he has concluded I wish recognition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming has the right to conclude the debate.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, am I recognized at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. I had supposed that the gentleman making the motion to dispense with the business of Calendar Wednesday would first give the House some idea of the reason for doing so, this being the one day, the only day, when much important business can secure recognition.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, of course I can not yield to the gentleman as I have only five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I thought we all understood we were trying to get through with our business and adjourn.

Mr. CRAMTON. I decline to yield, and I hope this is not taken out of my time, although I will reserve the balance of my time and yield the floor to the gentleman if he prefers. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, there are reasons why we should not to-day do away with Calendar Wednesday under present conditions. This administration has accomplished a great record of economy and one of our great desires in the coming month will be to demonstrate to the country that fact, and it seems to me we ought not during the closing hours of this session do away with Calendar Wednesday for the prime purpose of bringing up a bill here simply to destroy certain economies which have been effected by the Committee on Appropriations. The primary purpose of this motion is to permit the consideration of a bill to restore nearly all of 19 land offices that have been abolished by one of the appropriation bills passed only a few weeks ago. It seems to me that it is hardly in accord with the program of economy that has been so generally heralded to restore or attempt to restore useless offices that have only been abolished a few weeks ago, because it may give the country an idea that no sooner have we accomplished a piece of economy than we may be expected to regret the fact, reconsider our action, and try to overcome the result by new legislation. The Committee on Rules have before them much other important legislation. They have in their possession rules which have been reported out which are entitled to consideration, yet the program I am advised is to take up first to-day, if Calendar Wednesday is dispensed with, this bill to restore a number of useless land offices and thereby eliminate some very desirable economies which have been brought about by this House and the Congress. This ought not to be done. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am in hearty agreement with the gentleman from Michigan in the effort he has made at economy as the very efficient chairman of one of the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations. He has done very excellent work. Gentlemen who are interested in these land offices are of the opinion that there was not sufficient consideration of all the conditions existing at the time the offices were abolished. They claim, and it is a fact, that the saving in abolishing a land office is comparatively small, because the business must be done and some officer somewhere is paid for doing it; and it matters not whether it goes to one official or another, so there is little saving. The abolishment of a land office at the most affects a saving, perhaps, of two or three thousand dollars a year in the maintenance of each office, and otherwise the expenditure goes on. The money simply goes to some other official. They call attention to the fact that abolishing of these land offices before the settlers make their final proof—and most of these settlers are ex-service men, let us remember—compels them to go long distances to make final proof on their homesteads. Gentlemen think they can prove to the House that their case is good. If they can not, the bill will not pass. This is not the only rule before the House. There are a number of rules, and if this bill is disposed of, as it ought to be, promptly, then these other matters can be considered. I do not think at this time, when we are all desirous of leaving for home, when we have passed three hundred and odd bills which the Senate has not considered, that it is highly important that we should take a day to consider even the very meritorious bill that proposes to fix the standard for a flour barrel. I think it is a matter that might wait for a time, and in the meantime if we dispense with the Calendar Wednesday, we will take up the various rules which have been reported, we will complete the business, and endeavor to secure an adjournment on Friday.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to dispense with Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair two-thirds voted in the affirmative. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and sixteen Members are present, a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF ARTICLE IN 8-POINT TYPE.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the article which the House gave me the privilege of printing in the RECORD be printed in 8-point type.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will that be in the rear of the RECORD?

Mr. FISH. In the back part of the RECORD.

There was no objection.

REINSTATEMENT OF CERTAIN LAND OFFICES.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers a resolution from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 385 (Rept. 1154).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3425, "An act to continue certain land offices, and for other purposes"; that there shall be not to exceed two hours of general debate, to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the bill. Thereupon the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment it shall be reported back to the House, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments, if any, without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make the point of order that the resolution is not privileged and not entitled to consideration by the House at this time, for the reason that the Committee on Rules did not have jurisdiction of the subject matter. No resolution or petition or anything else relating to this bill that it is now sought to make in order has been referred to that committee by the House. It would seem a fundamental proposition, Mr. Speaker, that no committee of the House will have any authority except such authority as has been granted to that committee. The Committee on Rules is, like every other committee of the House, simply an agent of the House. No committee, the Committee on Rules or any other committee, has any authority to represent the House and no jurisdiction over any matter except such as has been conferred on that committee by the rules of the House or by some special resolution of the House.

Now, Rule XI defines the powers and duties of committees, It states:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows:

* * * * * * *

Subdivision 47:

All proposed action touching the rules, joint rules, and order of business shall be referred to the Committee on Rules.

That is the only jurisdiction that is given the Committee on Rules by the rules of the House, that all matters pertaining to rules, joint rules, and order of business shall be referred to the Committee on Rules. Having been referred, they have jurisdiction thereof and may make reports to the House.

Subdivision 56 provides:

The following-named committee shall have leave to report at any time on matters herein stated, viz: The Committee on Rules, on rules, joint rules, and order of business; the Committee on Elections, on the right of a Member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue; the committees having jurisdiction of appropriations, the general appropriation bills; the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors; the Committee on the Public Lands, bills for the forfeiture of land grants to railroads and other corporations, etc.

The Committee on Rules has the same power, but no more power than any other committee named in subdivision 56, to report at any time on matters that have been referred to them, and there is nothing in that subdivision to give them any authority to initiate legislation any more than the Committee on Public Lands has authority to report a bill that has not been referred to it with reference to the reservation of public lands, or the Committee on Territories for the admission of new States, and so forth. The same point that I am now making seems to have been last made—and I thought I had immediately at hand the reference, but I have not been able to locate it—by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] several years ago, when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] was chairman of the Committee on Rules. When a report was made by the Committee on Rules through Mr. Henry of a certain resolution for the consideration of certain matters, the point now made by me was made at that time by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and the validity of the point of order was immediately conceded by Mr. Henry and the resolution withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair recollects, Mr. Henry asked unanimous consent, and that was given. So there was no decision on the question.

Mr. CRAMTON. There was not a decision by the Chair. The gentleman from Illinois made the point of order. The gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, immediately conceded that the point of order was valid, in so many words, and thereafter sought to bring the bill in by unanimous consent, which eventually was granted to him, and in all the discussion about it there was no word by anyone indicating any contrary view with reference to the point of order, but it was conceded by the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, just a word, if I may. It seems to me very clear that the gentleman's point of order is not well taken. If it is, then the Committee on Rules has been reporting rules here from time immemorial contrary to the rules of the House. But not only has the committee to my knowledge reported rules in many cases where they did not have a rule referred to them, but where Members appeared in person appealing for a rule, but the Committee on Rules has frequently brought in a rule while the business of the House was in progress, when it would have been utterly impossible to have referred a resolution to the committee. It requires the lapse of a day to refer a matter to a committee. The matter must be placed in the basket, must in due time be referred by the Speaker, must be printed, and then it goes to the committee. If it now be held that the Committee on Rules can take no action unless there shall have been a resolution for a rule passed in the basket, referred, printed, and presented to them, then we can never hope to have that prompt action by the Committee on Rules which is at times absolutely essential to the dispatch of business.

The rule which the gentleman has cited relates to a proposition of legislation. The action of the Committee on Rules provides for consideration of legislation already reported. The rule simply makes in order by the House consideration of a certain matter which a committee has reported. If I may emphasize that point, if the point of order now made by the gentleman from Michigan is sustained, then we never can have action by the Committee on Rules while the House is in session on a matter before the House. Such action is at times absolutely essential, and it has been had time out of mind.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take just a moment. A large amount of the argument by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has nothing to do with the case before the House at the present time. It is a well-known fact that the Committee on Rules has a right to present rules relating to order of business at any time. This question has been before this House several times and there have been several definite and pertinent rulings made by the Chair in regard to them. I cite Fourth Hinds, sections 4359–60. These are definite and positive rulings on precisely the same question that is before the House at the present time, and so far as I am able to find there are no rulings to support the contention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. One word further, Mr. Speaker. There is some conflict in the decisions. Mr. Speaker Randall and Mr. Speaker Reed apparently held with the point I have made and Mr. Speaker Crisp somewhat to the contrary. Those decisions were called to the attention of the parliamentary clerk. I supposed I had the references here, but I find I have not. It is important that the question be settled on the basis of right and justice and principle, rather than entirely on the precedent set by one Speaker, with two Speakers ruling the other way.

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], attempting to discredit the point of order by discussion of an absurdity, and he imagines certain things that do not exist. The point of order does not in any way involve any question to the effect that there must be a printing, and so forth, and that any great period of time must elapse. The rules of the House do not give the Committee on Rules any jurisdiction except jurisdiction of what has been referred to them, and this matter not having been referred to it, even so much as by a petition, I make the point of order.

The House must understand that the Committee on Rules is necessarily given great power to direct for the House what questions the House shall consider; but it might well be thought to be a dangerous power to let them go to the limit of meeting in a session either with or without a quorum——

Mr. SNELL. There was a full quorum present——

Mr. CRAMTON. And allowing a member of the committee to call out of his inner consciousness something that was not sent to that committee, and no notice given to the minority by the introduction of the rule that the Committee on Rules had it under consideration at all.

If the Chair overrules this point of order, it will permit the Committee on Rules to come into the House with rules on matters that no Member of the House has thought of except the Committee on Rules, and let them bring it immediately to the consideration of the House. That is an extraordinary power to give to a committee. It is not a necessary power. It is a simple matter for a gentleman interested in a rule to introduce a rule through the basket, thereby giving constructive notice to the House, and then the Committee on Rules can go into session and report that rule without any great delay.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that on the ground of right and justice and convenience, to which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] appeals, even if there were no precedents, the Chair would be inclined to overrule the point of order, because the Committee on Rules is the executive organ of the majority of the House. If it were held that it could not act until the subject matter had been referred to it, then it would be impossible for it in the morning before a session to make a new decision and bring in a rule which is often necessary and desirable at the first meeting of the House.

As the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] intimated the long practice has been for the Committee on Rules to report rules without their being referred to them. Besides this precedent of custom there are expressed decisions, referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], where the point has been made. Mr. Speaker Crisp explicitly overruled the point of order, and the Chair thinks the decisions to which the gentleman refers, of Mr. Speaker Reed and Mr. Speaker Randall, can be distinguished from this case, and that this point there was not necessarily decided. Moreover, the Chair thinks the history of the rules before the revision of 1880 and after point to the same result. Therefore, both on the ground of policy and on the ground of precedent, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take up any time in explaining this rule. I think the House fully understands it. The Committee on Rules understood there was opposition to this legislation, but the committee thought there was evidence enough before it to show an error had been made in cutting out all these offices and that they should let the House decide the matter. Therefore the committee brought in this rule.

I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to state my reasons for believing that this rule should not be adopted.

The Committee on Appropriations has at times been criticized for attempting to tack legislation upon appropriation bills. This is one occasion when it did not do so. They attempted, however, to see to it that no funds were provided to carry on useless offices where the law in existence for 80 years declared that those offices should be abolished.

I want to tell the whole truth about this thing, so that the House can act intelligently upon it. About two years ago Mr. Tallman, of the General Land Office, recommended that certain offices of surveyors general be abolished. He made out such a plain case that the Committee on Appropriations recommended it, but there was too much influence in the House in behalf of surveyors general, and the offices remained. Serving as a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Interior Department this year I determined to renew that effort in order that the House might consider it and see whether the changed personnel would have any influence upon the action of the House. But the subcommittee thought otherwise. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] is on that committee. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is the very active and efficient chairman of it. They finally told me that the subcommittee would not agree to strike out the surveyors general, but they would not appropriate any money for those offices which, under the law, should be abolished.

We determined to try them one at a time, so that we would not have so many members with offices interested and that some economy might be effected. Therefore we reported to the House the plan that was devised by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], who is as active a man on behalf of the interests of the West as there is in the House of Representatives to-day. That plan as devised did not provide for the abolition of all the offices that ought to be abolished under the law as it exists to-day, because we wanted to go easy with them, but it did provide for the abolition by the department of those offices for which there was least justification.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am sorry I can not. I want to state this case. The bill provided no appropriation for certain offices, for the existence of which there is no authority in law. That bill came into the House. Gentlemen from the West were on the floor. That limitation was in the appropriation bill, but as long as these surveyors general were up in the air no man even rose to demand a division on the adoption of the limitation that provided for the abolition of these land offices; but when the Interior Department bill went through and was signed by the President and the surveyors general were safe, then these gentlemen said, "Let us go and get these land offices restored"; and knowing that they could not have it done by the Committee on Appropriations they stepped downstairs to the Committee on the Public Lands, where all men are friends, Democrats and Republicans alike. [Applause.] That committee came into the House recommending that you remove before July 1 all danger that the department will enforce a law that has been on the statute books for 80 years and abolish these useless offices.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is justified in the fight he is making. Directed by this House to try to do something to protect the Treasury, he has saved more than $128,000 a year by the abolishing of useless offices, and now as you go into the campaign are you coming in through the back door of the Public Lands Committee to restore these offices and put this additional burden upon the Treasury? [Applause.] I know there are lots of people interested in this; Members from every State in which an office is located, even if not affected by the bill. They feel they must all stand together. The bill as it comes from the Senate provides for the restoring of the land office at Springfield, Mo. There are 48 acres of public land in that district, and it costs you $1,365 to look after that 48 acres of land. Think of it. Well, now, the House knows that the fight will not end here. Over at the other end of the Capitol all gentlemen are friends; there are no enemies, or at least they are friendly enemies. They provided for an office in Springfield, Mo., and the House struck it out; but you know that the bill is going to conference; and when it gets to conference the Senate will say to the House, "You added Sterling, Colo., which is almost as bad as Springfield, Mo., and if you want Sterling, Colo., to stay in the bill you have got to look out for our jobholder at Springfield, Mo.," and everybody here knows that when the report comes back, Springfield, Mo., will be in the bill.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield? There is surely a difference between 48 acres and 6,000 acres.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; but at Sterling, Colo., it costs $10,000 to collect $13,000.

Mr. VAILE. At least that was not an expense to the Government.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Not as expensive as Springfield; but it is going some when it costs $10,000 to collect $13,000.

Mr. MADDEN and Mr. WILLIAMSON rose.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not yield to all these gentlemen, but I will yield to the chairman of my committee.

Mr. MADDEN. While the Colorado office which is proposed to be restored has only 6,000 acres of public land in the district, the law provides that they can not have an office where there are less than 100,000 acres in the district.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The law has said for 80 years that a land office should be abolished where they have less than 100,000 acres in the district. But we did not even abolish all those offices with less than 100,000 acres, and the question now is whether you are going to establish offices now abolished by law. What has become of the commission to abolish useless offices? Where is it? Are they responsible for this? Did the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] submit this to Mr. Brown, chairman of the commission which for two years has been considering the abolition of useless offices? Did he recommend that after this Congress deliberately adopted the limitation to the appropriation bill in order to save some money to the taxpayers you should come in now as we are about to go home and restore these useless offices? Will the gentleman from the Springfield, Mo., district say, "They abolished your office, but, thanks be to goodness, I came in and saved you your $1,300 to look after your 48 acres in Springfield, Mo."? The job will be saved for the country, even if it does cost $1,300 to look after 48 acres to see that they do not run away.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will yield to my friend, as he persists.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Is the gentleman aware that the committee have continued at least six different offices where the acreage runs as low as 4,718 acres, while you have cut out offices that have acreages from 100,000 to 360,000 acres?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They did put some in that I wanted to see go out, but we wanted to apply the knife of the surgeon, and therefore we selected the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], and I turned it over to him, because I have supreme confidence in him. I wanted to do it in such a way that it would do no injury to any State. He framed that proposition, and when a Member from Idaho fixes it the country ought to know that the West is looked after.

Mr. VAILE. Can not the knife of the surgeon slip?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from South Dakota and my friend from Colorado were here on the job, because they are always here, and when that provision was adopted on the appropriation bill not a single Member even asked for a division, because they were afraid that the offices of the surveyors general, that ought to be abolished, might get slaughtered, so they determined to play rabbit and lie low until the surveyors general got through. Then when the surveyors general were safe by the signature of the President to the appropriation bill, they come in here in the closing days of the session, just before the recess, thinking that you will stand for this raid on the Treasury. It demonstrates how difficult it is to abolish an office, even when the law provides that it be abolished. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If my time has not expired, I will.

Mr. BUTLER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that for two or three years he has been endeavoring to withhold the appropriations for these land offices?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman misunderstood me. As I remember, the Appropriations Committee struck out the appropriation for the surveyors general and reported it to the House, and gentlemen got busy on both sides of the House and defeated it. The surveyors general remains safe. This year I determined to resurrect the question and give gentlemen of the House a chance to vote on it. When that was pending and threatening the gentlemen from the West consented to the abolition of the offices. They certainly did not oppose it on the floor. Now that they are no longer threatened, the surveyors general are safe, they come in and complain about the abolition of other small offices.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that there is no authority of law for maintaining these offices.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No. The law directed the department to close them. But the money has been appropriated by Congress, and it is a poor Representative who can not go down there and induce the department to continue the offices. It keeps up the expenses of the department, and the more they have the better they seem satisfied. The only protection the people have is for you to do your duty and withhold the appropriation for these offices that are not authorized by law.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] wanted to be fair, he would have argued the facts about the majority of these land offices and not selected the weakest one of the bunch, to wit, the land office at Springfield, Mo., which is not in this bill at all. Of course, it is ridiculous to maintain the land office at Springfield, with only a few acres; but it is not ridiculous to continue others with 100,000 to 500,000 acres contiguous thereto and subject to homestead entry.

All we ask is to have an opportunity to present to the House the facts with reference to this bill. This side of the House does not want the bill passed, nor does the other side unless we can show substantial grounds and reasons for it. The bill passed the Senate unanimously and was unanimously reported by the Public Lands Committee that has jurisdiction of land offices. The Committee on Rules unanimously reported the rule.

We are confronted with this fact, whether or not a few Members on the Appropriations Committee are going to legislate for the House. The Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Public Lands, the Committee on Indian Affairs, and 57 other committees are utterly impotent and shorn of power. The gentlemen who hold the purse strings are omnipotent to control legislation, but they should give us a chance to present our views occasionally on legislation affecting our districts. The land office in my district, to be exact, has 101,923 acres of land subject to homestead entry. It has in the Ozark reserve, near this land office, 511,616 acres, much of which is subject to entry. The total forest reserve in Arkansas totals 1,470,393 acres, whereas Nebraska has a total of only 217,808 acres.

The gentleman talks about economy. If the gentleman from Michigan, who is leading the fight against this bill, is so anxious to be economical and cut down expenses, I call attention to the heavy appropriations voted his State for Alpena Harbor, Thunder Bay River, St. Marys River, Block River at Port Huron, Frankfort Harbor, and Escanaba Harbor, Mich.

If he wants to cut off something worth while, let him pare down these appropriations and thus save much money to the Government.

Two land offices in my State and nine in the West are sought to be abolished. Give us a rule and let us argue the matter. If we do not convince you that the bill ought to pass, then vote against it upon the final roll call, but give us an opportunity to discuss it, and do not allow these demigods, these supermen, these kaisers that constitute the Appropriations Committee to dominate the legislation of this House. [Laughter and applause.] It seems that the mantle of the gentleman from Wisconsin has fallen upon or has been assumed by the gentleman from Michigan, who rises and makes the point of no quorum before the Journal is read. Deliver us from these no-quorum statesmen; we have got enough of them in this body without the gentleman from Michigan adding himself to the number. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the issue now is whether the overwhelming Republican majority in this House is going to support a committee of the House that is trying to carry out the campaign pledges of economy, or whether the committee having with your support accomplished a real economy in abolishing some useless offices is going to be reversed within two weeks and the offices put back again. We have the support of prominent men on the Democratic side of the aisle and I hope we are not going to have opposition on the Republican side of the House. The Committee on Appropriations provided in the Interior Department appropriation bill for the abolition of 19 land offices and the consolidation of officers in 21 others, making a saving of $128,000 each year from now and henceforth. That committee is attacked by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN] as attempting to assume all the legislative power of the House, taking the legislative power away from the Committee on the Public Lands, of which the gentleman from Arkansas is a member. Still the gentleman from Arkansas does not say to you, gentlemen, that for 82 years there has been a law on the statute books, section 2248, Revised Statutes, that makes illegal the continuance of any land office in a district that has less than 100,000 acres of land subject to entry.

With that law on the statute books, if there is a land office having less than 100,000 acres, then it "shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to discontinue the land office of such district." If that is not a good law the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN], who has been in Congress for some time and who is a member of the Committee on the Public Lands, should have sought to secure its amendment; but he has never introduced a bill to amend it. His committee has never sought to secure its amendment, and all that the Committee on Appropriations has done is, not to enact a new law, but to provide that the law on the statute books shall be lived up to, because of the offices that we have ordered closed under the Interior Department appropriation bill there were 15 out of 19 having an average of less than 100,000 acres. In fact, those 15 offices have an average acreage of only about 25,000 acres.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I regret that I can not yield at this time. One of those offices at Hugo, Colo., has 1,805 acres under its control. The Senate wants that restored, and we would have to fight that out in conference if you let this pork-barrel bill go through. There is one in Colorado of 6,191 acres that the Committee on the Public Lands thinks should be restored. Later gentlemen can explain why we should be put to a large expense to keep up a land office of 6,000 acres. Then there is one in North Dakota of 6,000 acres that they want restored. There is one at Lemmon, S. Dak.—a lemon of an office—that somebody else would like to have restored. There is another one at Timber Lake—a splendid name—in South Dakota that has 4,718 acres that they want restored, which costs more to maintain than the entire receipts of the office from fees and sale of land and everything else.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. After I conclude. There is one in New Mexico they want restored that in 1912 cost 112 per cent. There is another in North Dakota that costs 118 per cent, and another in the same State costing 123 per cent. There is another in North Dakota that costs 184 per cent, there is another in South Dakota that costs 128 per cent of all the receipts to pay the expenses of these offices, all of which they seek to restore in this pork barrel bill.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN] talks about what Michigan gets occasionally in an appropriation bill. There is something I assume, as he states, for the St. Marys River in an appropriation bill. It is a long way from my district; but I want to remind the gentleman that the St. Marys River is not a little stream with a couple of tugs and some water hyacinths in it, but it is a connection of commerce, over whose waters more tonnage floats every season than on any other waters in the world. The gentleman criticizes us because we appropriate for navigation in St. Marys River but thinks it all right to appropriate for a land office which does not take in enough money in a year to pay the expenses of the office.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am sorry, but I can not yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TILLMAN. The office at Harrison more than pays expenses, and that is not all.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is all I yielded for.

Mr. TILLMAN. There are 101,000 acres of land contiguous to it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I yielded to the gentleman to correct a statement, but he refers to some statement that I did not make. I did not say anything about the office at Harrison, but I named eight or nine of these offices in this bill where it costs over 100 per cent of their receipts to pay their expenses. This is a pork-barrel bill. Members of the Senate sent it over here and this committee wants to add something to it, and when it goes to conference the only way that you can make an agreement on a pork-barrel bill of this kind is to yield to everybody all they want. It is not fair otherwise.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am sorry. If I yield to the gentleman, I would have to yield to other gentlemen who have very interesting statements to make. The gentleman [Mr. TILLMAN] says this is the only thing the South is interested in, as if the South were particularly interested in a couple of little land offices down in Arkansas that have less than 100,000 acres of land each, when you average the amount of land under both. The only thing the South is interested in! Then, Mr. Speaker, I have been laboring under a mistaken impression. I thought the South wanted Henry Ford's Muscle Shoals proposition adopted, but the Committee on Rules has not yet found time to consider a rule for that proposition, and that committee will not, so long as pork-barrel statesmen in this House think it is more important to take care of pie in their respective districts than it is to consider things of national importance. [Applause.]

Why, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], our splendid leader, assumed to say that this would not save any money. It was gone over carefully, item by item, and every clerk was provided that was needed. Notices have gone out now from the General Land Office, and these places are being closed. Clerks are being done away with, except those that are necessary to keep up the work, and $128,000 is saved this year and will be saved every year hereafter, if this House will simply stand pat. When you once accomplish a desired reform, then I say stand pat; do not back up. I thank you. I hope this rule will be defeated and this pork-barrel legislation will go no further in this Congress.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. I understand there was a land office formerly in the State of Ohio, but that it has been abandoned. Would it be in order in the consideration of this bill to move to amend by reinstating that land office in Ohio?

Mr. CRAMTON. We might take what is left out of the receipts of the office at Harrison or at Hugo, Colo., or at some of these other places, and erect a monument at Steubenville, Ohio, in memory of the fact that there are places in this country that once did have land offices, but that were willing to let them go when there was no more need for them.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Why is the gentleman so unfair as to keep referring to Hugo, Colo., that had only 1,800 acres, when nobody has made any offer at any time to have it restored in this bill either in the Senate or the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, in the Senate they started out in this way: One Senator brought in a report for three land offices——

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. It was not the one at Hugo, Colo.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. One Senator started in with three land offices, and then another Senator said, "I have a couple in my State I would like to have included," and so it went on, building itself up until finally the Senator from Missouri got up and said that Springfield is just like the rest, and that he wanted that put in. Then it came over here to the House, and the House committee put in Sterling, in the State of Colorado. There is no guaranty what Members will do on the floor when consideration of this bill is reached under the five-minute rule. It will be in order to offer an amendment to have Hugo restored, and if some of the others are restored, Hugo ought to be.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. The gentleman's argument is based on Hugo, Colo., which nobody is asking to be restored.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Does not the gentleman think in the interest of efficiency it would have been much better if these offices had been abandoned next year instead of——

Mr. CRAMTON. Our committee has no legislative power, we can only provide for the appropriations for the ensuing year. I may say further that we felt sure no needed service was being interfered with. We were guided by conditions in Arizona. Arizona has 16,000,000 acres of public land unsold; 1,400,000 acres were entered last year; and the State has only one land office. They say they like it better that way, because in that one land office there is a lot of business and responsibility, and they get good men as registers and receivers, that they have competent clerks, the decisions made are sustained by the General Land Office. We thought what was good for Arizona would be good enough for Colorado, especially as we leave Colorado with seven after all this is done.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. As a matter of fact is not Arizona a one-road State, you can only get into it and out of it by going to the one place where the land office is?

Mr. CRAMTON. But distances are nevertheless considerable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the reason this bill is before the House is because the Committee on Appropriations puts a limitation in the Interior Department bill, which is as follows:

Provided further, That with the exception of the land offices mentioned in the last preceding proviso—

no money herein appropriated shall be expended for the maintenance of any land office other than as is provided by this paragraph in a district having a public-land area of less than 100,000 acres or whose cost of maintenance shall exceed 33⅓ per cent of the revenues for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Now, the main reason for inserting that clause in the Interior Department bill was conception by somebody that the President had been violating section 2248 of the Revised Statutes, which has been upon the statute books since 1840, because the language in the appropriation bill is really a reenactment, in the way of a limitation, of the language in section 2248 of the Revised Statutes passed in 1840. Now, it seems to me that right there began the mistake of the Committee on Appropriations and began the mistake of the department. The Committee on Appropriations was misled, possibly by some one in the department, as to the meaning of the language in section 2248 of the Revised Statutes, which is as follows:

Whenever a quantity of public lands remaining unsold in any land district is reduced in number of acres to less than 100,000, it shall be the duty to discontinue the office.

Now, what was the meaning of that language, "whenever the quantity of public land remaining unsold is reduced to less than 100,000 acres"? In 1840, when this statute was passed, we had just one way of disposing of public lands. They were sold outright for cash, and as soon as that sale was made the interest of the General Government in the land ceased. The incident was closed, and the General Government had no further concern about the land. What is the situation to-day? It is entirely different from the situation in 1840.

The Government does not sell outright its land to-day. It permits homestead entry upon the land and then the man has five years in which to comply with the law; he must reside upon and cultivate the land and earn a patent to the land. So during all that time it is necessary to have these land offices, to have the registers and receivers superintend and oversee these Government lands that have been entered in that way.

Mr. LAYTON. Whether they are below the 100,000 acres or not as directed by the law?

Mr. SINNOTT. I am going to explain that. If 100,000 acres of land has been entered to-day, it may be perfected under the homestead law in three or five years for the purpose of this section 2248; that is public land as far as section 2248, Revised Statutes, is concerned, until the homestead entryman makes his final proof and secures his title to the land.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Now, instead of these land offices, say Sterling, Colo., which the gentleman from Wisconsin has ridiculed, viewing the matter in that light, that land office has over 200,000 acres of public lands, Government lands, for the purpose of this statute until the final proof is made and patent is delivered to the entryman, and the decisions are to that effect. Then, again, another thing that the Appropriations Committee has entirely overlooked is the Indian lands. Take, for instance, Judge WEBSTER's case. The department made an absolute mistake in reporting upon his land office at Waterville, Wash. It first reported that the land office only had about 65,000 acres. The department or the register and receiver at the Waterville land office made an absolute mistake in reporting 65,000 acres, whereas as a matter of fact that land office has over 330,000 acres. And, furthermore, the receipts from the Indian lands, which, properly speaking, should be classified as public lands as far as section 2248 is concerned, because they are open to the public to make their homestead entry—the receipts from that land office from Indian lands were $20,538, yet according to the contention of the Committee on Appropriations the receipts were only $11,913.49. The same way with this Timber Lake land office that the gentleman ridiculed. There are 171,600 acres of unperfected homestead entries in the land office held by entrymen who require the services, attention, and supervision of a register and receiver of the land office.

That office at Timber Lake is ridiculed on account of its name, and yet the receipts from Indian lands last year were $226,202. These are some of the offices we propose to restore, not Timber Lake but Bellefourche. The Senate, it is true, inserted in its bill the restoration of 15 offices. The House committee struck out six of the Senate offices, and inserted but one—the Sterling office. So, as a matter of fact, we are merely restoring by the House bill 10 offices. The gentleman has extolled the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH]. They left the matter to him. Mr. FRENCH came before our committee and admitted that five of these land offices were inadvertently abolished by the Appropriations Committee, and I do not think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] will deny but what some were inadvertently abolished——

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman would not say that the gentleman from Idaho said that five were inadvertently abolished, and the gentleman from Michigan would not only say that five were not inadvertently abolished, but six or seven were inadvertently left out of the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. Do not take too much of my time. I propose to read the language of the gentleman from Idaho, who had charge of the bill before your committee. What did he say before our committee?

On page 12 of the hearings he said:

Now, I would say, as to the several land offices, that we did not have all the facts that I think your committee now has.

That is the testimony of the gentleman that had charge of the abolishment of these land offices.

For instance, in the case of the Waterville office, in the State of Washington, the records of the department showed that in that land district there were, in round numbers, 65,000 acres of public land. As a matter of fact, I understand—and I think the gentleman from Washington here will be able to show it to you—the local office has indicated that the reports from the department are in error, and that instead of having 65,000 acres of public lands there were approximately 350,000 acres of public lands. I do not hesitate at all to say that, in my judgment, the committee would not have provided for that office being abolished if it could have shown that fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me five minutes more?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. SINNOTT. He says:

I do not hesitate at all to say that, in my judgment, the committee would not have provided for that office being abolished if it could have known the fact.

There is one office we propose to restore.

Then the chairman asked:

That is in Judge WEBSTER's district?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That has been put into the Senate bill by amendment.

Mr. FRENCH. Probably so; but it was discovered in time to be taken care of on the appropriation bill.

Then he takes up another office. He says:

Take the case of the Bellefourche land office. A situation there has arisen that is most unusual. I do not know of any other such case, though possibly some other land district may present a parallel. There is a situation in the Bellefourche district where the public domain within the district to-day is approximately 51,000 acres, and yet there are 450,000 acres of land that have been entered upon but that are unpatented.

In other words, there are settlers upon 450,000 acres of that land who are not taken into consideration in any way by the Appropriations Committee in abolishing that office.

Then Mr. FRENCH goes on to say, on page 13:

As you will at once grasp, it is really an astounding situation to find a district where all but about one-tenth of the land has been entered upon and where nine-tenths of the lands remain unpatented.

Then Mr. VAILE asks this question:

How did it happen that you did not have those facts at the time?

Mr. FRENCH. That is a very unusual thing, Mr. VAILE, or the conditions there were very unusual. I do not want to blame anybody. Personally I did not think to inquire into that, and the question was not raised by anyone representing the Interior Department or by anyone on the committee.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. You think that the Bellefourche office should be reinstated?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How about the Timber Lake office?

Mr. FRENCH. I would rather not comment upon the next two land offices mentioned by Mr. WILLIAMSON, for the reason that the facts that he has submitted touching the Indian-land receipts, etc., are questions with which I am not acquainted.

He was not acquainted with the Indian-land situation, and yet the Committee on the Public Lands went into that particular feature of the case and decided the office should be restored. Then he goes on to say:

The CHAIRMAN. At the Timber Lake office the total receipts were $231,434.91, of which $226,202.45 were Indian funds, making the receipts from the public lands only $5,232.46. Now, that indicates a great deal of business, does it not?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes. But the Indian-fund receipts were not furnished by the committee. You will notice this, that under the Timber Lake office there are only 4,718 acres of public land unentered, which is a little over a quarter of a township.

The Appropriations Committee did not have these Indian-fund receipts, and did not take that into consideration, but the Committee on the Public Lands did, and Mr. FRENCH makes the same statement regarding the Del Norte office. He makes the same statement in regard to the Alliance and the Broken Bow offices, and says they were all inadvertently abolished. It was not the intention of the committee to abolish them.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. If this bill is not passed by the House, I take it that there is no State in the West where there is any considerable amount of public land that will be deprived of one land office, and that in many States there will be more than one within the State.

Mr. SINNOTT. I do not get the gentleman's query.

Mr. LAYTON. I will state it again. Even if this bill is not passed, I take it for granted there will be no State that has not got one land office?

Mr. SINNOTT. There will be a land office possibly in each State, with the exception of——

Mr. VAILE. The States out there are larger than Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. Yes; but Delaware helps to pay the taxes.

Mr. SINNOTT. People will be greatly handicapped in their relation with the land offices——

Mr. TILLMAN. We could have one land office here at Washington.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; we could to the great emolument of Washington attorneys.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I think this matter has been pretty fully discussed. I want to say for the Rules Committee that the reason they granted this rule was because of the definite statement that there was evidence before the Appropriations Committee that should have been considered, and, as a matter of fact, the business of the Government in certain places would be hindered to a certain degree if these land offices were not continued, and we felt it was only proper to give them an opportunity to lay their proposition before the House and let the House act on it as they saw fit.

I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 28.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll call 274 Members are shown to be present—a quorum.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

CONTINUANCE OF CERTAIN LAND OFFICES.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3425) to continue certain land offices, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3425, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3425) to continue certain land offices, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] will please take the chair.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3425) to continue certain land offices, and for other purposes, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3425, which the Clerk will report by title.

The title of the bill was again read.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, can it be determined now as to who will have the control of the other hour?

Mr. SINNOTT. I will have one hour, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], opposed to the bill, will have another hour. I will endeavor to dispose of the time equitably among the Members who favor the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire the other hour?

Mr. CRAMTON. I shall be glad if the arrangement suggested by the gentleman from Oregon is made. I desire an hour. I will yield generously to Members on that side in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BENHAM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BENHAM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not a western man, rather a mid-eastern man. Am not, at least, radically in favor of what is sometimes termed "western legislation." Sometimes I think I am oversensitive. However, I always doubt the good judgment, to say the least, of a man or set of men who are afraid of the judgment of their fellows and resort to technicalities to prevent the membership of the House from hearing discussions for and against a measure and to express their views by their votes. I might say a little more along the same line. As a member of the Committee on the Public Lands, I distinctly remember one of the bills upon which that committee has acted, about which the merits were somewhat questionable, but which was taken up at the request of the gentleman who has wasted so much time in opposition to this bill. My remembrance is that that bill was reported favorably when a minority of the committee were present. The bill was reported favorably, and I have never yet heard of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] raising a point of order against it because it may have been reported by a minority of the membership of the committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. To what bill does the gentleman refer?

Mr. BENHAM. I do not remember it by number. It was a bill introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] for the benefit of certain interests in his district. I might say further that at the request of the chairman of the committee I reported that bill, and it is one bill, among the few which I have reported, as to the merits of which I had some doubts. I acted upon it favorably, in part for the reason that I gave the gentleman from Michigan credit for sincerity. But the gentleman has not treated members of the Land Committee with the same degree of consideration.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENHAM. I have not the time. There are several things I should like to say. The law—justly I think—provides for the discontinuance of offices that have less than 100,000 acres of land connected therewith or whose income is less than three times the expense. The membership of the special committee which has provided for the discontinuance of these offices has lost sight of one very vital consideration, which I can illustrate by example probably better than in an abstract way. I have in mind one State which has five public-land offices at the present time. Four of them are discontinued by the operation of the appropriation act. The committee thought that when two or three of the five were discontinued, it would add to the acreage attached to the other offices, and also add to the emoluments of those offices without proportionately increasing the expense. Taking this particular State—the one I have in mind—the Committee on Appropriations discontinued four of the five offices. The Committee on the Public Lands provided for the continuation of one of those four, believing that in discontinuing the three the emoluments and acreage connected therewith would be very greatly increased. The expense would be added to but little. Hence we fully believed that in providing for the continuance of one of those four the discontinuance of the three others would bring the one well within the limits of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. BENHAM. I have just one more thing I should like to state. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] was very loud in his praise of another member of the subcommittee. He was sure he could not be mistaken. Yet he acknowledged that personally he knows little or nothing about the details of these land offices. The gentleman whom the gentleman from Michigan praised for his wonderful knowledge of these offices was perfectly willing to confess that the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations had in a few instances made mistakes. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, understanding that the time in opposition to the bill is in my control, I yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] 10 minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is rather an unusual thing for members of the Committee on Appropriations to find Members of the House critical because the committee has not exceeded the authority conferred by the rules of the House. The law specifically provides that when a land office shall have less than 100,000 acres of public land tributary to it the land office shall automatically be abolished. We found that there were many land offices with much less than that acreage. Yet we did not bring in a bill that would abolish or fail to appropriate for all of those land offices.

Mr. VAILE. That would not be a reason for opposing this legislation, because we are legislating now.

Mr. FRENCH. I say it is a most unusual experience for members of the Appropriations Committee to undergo a castigation on the part of Members of the House because they have not done that which heretofore they have been severely censured for doing from time to time.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is not that because they are so much in the habit of acting beyond their authority that the House is really surprised when they do not? [Laughter.]

Mr. FRENCH. Well, it is a relief to get a licking on the other side for having refused to exceed our authority. It is interesting that although this law has been on the books for many years the Committee on the Public Lands has not brought in a bill reducing the acreage that ought to be within a land district to justify the continuation of a land office. Why does not that committee do it? Why did not the committee do that instead of reporting this bill? Here is a bill which as it passed the Senate provided for continuing one land office in a State which has less than 50 acres of public land within the entire State. The Committee on the Public Lands has not seen fit to bring in a measure reducing the acreage that can be regarded as a yardstick or standard for the maintenance of a land office.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. SINNOTT. Of course, the gentleman knows that the House committee struck out that office.

Mr. FRENCH. I intended to make that clear. The House committee eliminated the Springfield, Mo., office from the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman knows that the bill will go to conference, and that the Senate conferees will insist on putting back that office, and the House conferees will agree to it.

Mr. FRENCH. There is that danger. Having made the observation I have, let me make a further statement. It is always interesting to the Committee on Appropriations to see the point of view of chambers of commerce, of boards of trade, of rotary clubs, and even of Members of Congress touching appropriations. This morning there came to me resolutions urging the passage of three pieces of legislation, each one of which would involve millions upon millions a year of expense, and yet at the same time a condemnation of the Congress because of the extravagance of its appropriations and the multiplication of Government institutions. How are you going to do both things? This chamber of commerce was urging appropriations in each instance amounting to millions of dollars, and at the same time urging Congress to reduce the number of Government agencies.

In that same connection my attention was called to another State convention which was held a few days ago, which went on record as condemning the Government for its extravagances, but at the same time urging the adoption of a course of action that would entail millions upon millions of dollars of expense if it were adopted. The fact of the business is that when it comes to economy we are willing to economize at the expense of the other fellow but not at the expense of ourselves.

You remember the story of little Jimmy and Johnny. When Johnny met Jimmy, Jimmy was in the throes of agony. "What is the matter?" said Johnny. Jimmy said, "I have an awful toothache." Johnny said, "If it was my tooth I would go to the dentist and have it yanked out." Jimmy said, "So would I if it was your tooth." That is all there is to this question. We are willing to economize when it is on the other fellow, but not willing to take our own medicine. I believe that the Committee on Appropriations did the right thing, in the main, when it cut down the number of land offices and refused to appropriate to maintain them, and when it recommended the consolidation of certain registrars and receivers. We have thereby saved $128,800. I believe, however, that there are four land offices mentioned in this bill that possibly we could continue during the coming year. Let me mention them in order.

In the first place, the land district including the land office at Waterville, Wash., was reported by the department to the subcommittee to have in it an acreage of about 65,000 acres. As a matter of fact, after the bill had become a law, we were told that a mistake was made somewhere between the Land Department and the local office, and instead of having 65,000 acres of land there are 350,000 acres of public land. If we had had that circumstance before us, I doubt if we would have abolished the office. It was not the fault of the committee, but was a mistake in the data furnished to the Congress. I would say that the Waterville office should be continued for the convenience of the people there.

Let me mention another, that of Belle Fourche in South Dakota. Within the land district surrounding this office the records show 51,000 acres of public land. But our attention was not called to the fact that more than 480,000 acres of land had been entered and not passed to patent. That circumstance is a most unusual situation touching land offices in the West. It means that there was something of a rush there within a few years, and personally I would like to see that land office continued for the convenience of the people.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will.

Mr. TILLMAN. Was the committee's attention called to the fact that in Arkansas, in my district, there was 102,000 acres subject to entry, and within a short distance there was 3,000 acres more in forest reserve, and that there are 1,500 nonprotected homestead entries?

Mr. FRENCH. We had the facts pertaining to that office to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. TILLMAN. That may not be as strong a showing as some others——

Mr. FRENCH. At the office the gentleman refers to the expenses of maintaining it amounted to 69.7 per cent of the total receipts for actual business.

Mr. TILLMAN. And yet it was a revenue producer, and did not cost the Government a cent.

Mr. FRENCH. No; but the yardstick which Congress has made is that the expenses shall not exceed a third of the revenue of the office. It is not mandatory, but the yardstick is 33⅓ per cent of the revenue.

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman will remember that his committee exercised this discretion, the department did not abolish the offices.

Mr. FRENCH. No; the gentleman is correct. But I will refer to another land office where the last administration sought to abolish the office. An order was issued to abolish the office. But the order was held up for six months. At the end of six months it was set aside again, and so on for two years, and finally at the solicitation of the friends of that office the administration felt that it should rescind the order of abolishment. We were told by officers of the department that it is a very difficult thing to abolish a land office for the reason that the administration runs up against not only the influence of Members of the House and the other body but the influence of chambers of commerce and like organizations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman has made a very fair statement from his point of view. The gentleman has mentioned two offices which he thinks should be retained. Will the gentleman mention the others?

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman's question recalls to me two offices I had not mentioned. There were two others that from the examination I made I think ought to be continued. One is in the gentleman's own State but not in his district. It is the office in Del Norte. From the standard of expenditures it did not seem that we would be justified in continuing the office, but it is brought to the attention of the House that geographically it is so situated, the mountain ranges are such, the canons and means of transportation are such that unless the office shall be continued for a while the people who have occasion to go to a land office will be inconvenienced and required to go, in some instances, several hundred miles, and I feel that we could well afford to restore that office.

There is one other office that I would like to call attention to, and that is the office at Alliance, Nebr. Here is an instance where I think the mistake is on the part of probably myself or the subcommittee. Here is an office which Congress a year ago singled out in which to combine the offices of register and receiver. Since that has been done the committee overlooked the necessity of continuing the language this year, and through inadvertence it was omitted from the provisions of the bill. As regards other land offices mentioned in the bill, as reported to the House and indicated by the Senate, very frankly I have seen no good reason for the continuance of the offices and do not think one can be advanced.

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. Does the gentleman intend to offer an amendment to continue these offices which he speaks of?

Mr. FRENCH. I have not thought of doing that.

Mr. HOCH. I am wondering whether the committee is going to have a chance to express itself along the lines the gentleman has stated.

Mr. FRENCH. I have no doubt there will be that opportunity.

If the bill should pass providing for the continuation of the four offices I have mentioned, in my judgment the appropriation already carried in the bill, which has become a law, is ample to care for the continued offices. On the other hand, if you add the other offices to the bill, I do not believe the amount carried in the bill will be sufficient.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. I want to satisfy myself of the gentleman's position. The gentleman appeared before the committee and included both Alliance and Broken Bow among those inadvertently abolished?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. But I understand the gentleman desires to have only Alliance continued.

Mr. FRENCH. That would be my judgment, and more than that, the gentleman's committee, as I understand it, has eliminated Broken Bow.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; we did.

Mr. FRENCH. I think that is good business. If, however, we intend to pass this bill adding five or six other land offices, and if then we take the chance of adding a few more when the bill goes to conference, then I want to say that I do not believe the appropriation passed by the House for the continuation of land offices will be sufficient to meet the situation.

If we limit the bill to about four I think the appropriation will be sufficient, because we figured our appropriation upon the basis of the officers in all of the land districts being maximum salaried; in other words, receiving $3,000 each, when, as a matter of fact, I do not think they all will receive $3,000. They are in large part dependent on the fee system, and, in my judgment, the fees they receive will not make their salaries, in some instances, greater than $2,000 or $2,500, and so in a number of instances we will be able to save from $500 to $1,000 and in that way provide a sufficient amount to care for those other four offices, if you see fit to pass a bill providing for their restoration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation is a lump-sum appropriation?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If this bill should pass in any shape and no additional appropriation should be made at the present time the lump-sum appropriation would be available, would it not, for the maintenance of these offices until Congress has an opportunity to provide for a deficiency?

Mr. FRENCH. It would seem so to me, although I have understood the officers of the Interior Department feel that it would not be. One of the officers of the Interior Department told me that he believed it would run contrary to some of the decisions of the comptroller, and that probably it would be impossible to pay the salaries of some of the officers unless we provide a specific appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has again expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I do not know just exactly how many acres of land are in any one of the districts involved in this bill. I do not believe there was any deep, dark conspiracy upon the part of the Committee on Appropriations to do any injustice to anyone. I think it well may have been the case that if the gentlemen in whose districts the land offices are located had not slept upon their rights, we might not have had all of this trouble. I want to say to you that I am in favor of this bill because I believe those people out there feel that it is essential and vital to their best interests. They feel that the middle of the world is the land office. They are out there making a fight for a living. They are having about the hardest time of any class of people I know of in the United States, and I am in favor of the passage of this bill for another reason, and that is because I have read and also heard it quoted from Holy Writ that in the latter days the old men shall see visions and your young men shall dream dreams, and this is the day when old men are seeing visions, I do not know how clearly, but I am thoroughly satisfied that every old woman and young woman and every young man in this country is dreaming dreams, and I think there is no such irridescent dream as that contained perhaps in the authorization of $350,000,000 to make farms out in some of those districts, which is involved in a bill that we are going to be asked to consider one of these days, the title of which is known as the Smith-McNary bill—a bill proposing to authorize $350,000,000 to try an experiment. These poor people have tried fighting the battle of their lives, to see whether they can win it. There is not much money involved, and let us help them about that. In that tragic narrative of Byron's about the Ride of Mazeppa, fleeing from the Duke of Warsaw on the unbridled Ukraine, bound to his back, we find the lines—

> Not even an ignis fatuus rose
> To make him merry with my woes;
> That very cheat had cheer'd me then!
> Although detected, welcome still,
> Reminding me, through every ill,
> Of the abodes of men.

Gentlemen, we propose to try an experiment on the part of this Government, a most incompetent supervisor, if we are to believe the recent experiences of our excursions into governmental supervision and management of business—an experiment that these poor, brave, strong-hearted men and women have been trying for years and years. We have extended their time of payment time and again, not only upon the reclamation projects but upon those lands opened under the Kinkaid Act, those lands taken for grazing, where they take up 320 acres, or under the homestead law, where they may take 120. It has been a losing game to the dreamers of dreams, and they have come to us, and what those people can not do with every private interest involved, with all of the stimulus that is the mainspring of all human effort, they say this Government can do, and in the Smith-McNary bill it is proposed to authorize $350,000,000 with which to try the experiment. Let us give those poor people every chance we can to demonstrate whether this experiment can be made a success or if at the last it is to be a disappointing and a disheartening failure. [Applause.]

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to submit a statement touching upon the necessity and importance of the continuation of the land office offices in my district at Harrison, Ark., and the one at Camden, in the district of my colleague, Mr. PARKS, who is not present. Harrison is located in the northern portion of the State. There are contiguous to this land office nearly 102,000 acres of land unentered, so that we fall clearly within the limits of the law upon the subject of acreage, and in my judgment that is more important than is the question of expense of maintenance.

This office is not an expense to the Government. It yields more revenue than the expenses amount to. In addition to the 102,000 acres that are near to the land office there, there are forest reserves amounting to 511,616 acres a short distance from this land office. Much of this forest reserve is agricultural land. Much of it is subject to homestead entry. All that is required of an intending homesteader is to get a location in a forest reserve and show that it is agricultural land and the department will O. K. the request and he will be allowed to homestead it. In addition to that we have 1,500 unperfected homestead entries pending in this office. This information I get in a telegram from the receiver, Mr. Moore, and is, of course, authentic. So no land office has made a stronger showing than this, and in my judgment it would be unfair to intending homesteaders to discontinue this office. It is located and has been for many years in a handsome and commodious Federal building at Harrison, and the rent does not cost the Government one cent.

I call attention to the fact that there are two railroads which run through my district from west to east [illustrating on map]. One is the Missouri Pacific, running within 12 miles of the Harrison land office, traversing much of this land, and another, the Missouri & North Arkansas, running directly through Harrison in this direction [illustrating on map]. Now, they propose to move this land office to Little Rock, south of Harrison, where there is no acreage of consequence subject to entry, and they propose to take this office from where there are more than a half million acres of public land and put it at a place where there is but little land subject to entry.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will.

Mr. MANN. How much acreage is there in that land district?

Mr. TILLMAN. There are 101,923 acres now subject to entry coming clearly within the law, and in addition thereto a forest reserve, much of which is subject to entry, containing an acreage of 511,616 acres. The agricultural land in this reserve can be homesteaded, and much of it is agricultural land.

Mr. MANN. And certainly comes within the provision as to acreage——

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly, and not only that, but it does not cost the Government a penny to maintain this land office, because it pays several thousand beyond the cost of its maintenance. It does not quite fulfill the requirement, however, that the cost must not be more than 33 per cent of all the revenue, as it goes beyond that to about 66 per cent, but my contention is that the acreage subject to homestead entry is more important than the item of expense. Of course, you might save expense to the Government by consolidating this land office with the one at Little Rock. You might save expense to the Federal Treasury by concentrating them all in Washington, but the poor homesteader would suffer. You could save expense by abolishing rural or city carriers; you might save expense in a great many ways. These gentlemen are boasting of the amount of money they are saving the Government here, and they are spending vast sums for other purposes.

Congress voted $20,000,000 to give to the red Russians but not a red cent for the homesteaders; $5,000,000 to the black Liberians, but some of you seem but little interested in white home seekers. These two lines of railroad on the map run through my district. No road runs directly from Harrison to Little Rock. Every intending homesteader who has to go before the register and receiver to make proof in case of contest or on other business will have to go to Little Rock, 150 miles away. Many would not be able to do so. The land office at Camden is short on acreage, but the excess of receipts over expenditures is greater than any office considered. The percentage showing here is certainly satisfactory.

Mr. VAILE. Twenty-two per cent.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, gentlemen, that is our case.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the four meritorious offices mentioned by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] absolutely fail if there is no further legislation, or is there any power of the Secretary of the Interior to continue those four meritorious offices?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; it is the law that has been quoted here, that if there are not 100,000 acres of land and the expense is more than 33⅓ per cent of the revenue yielded the office must be abolished.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. It must be abolished?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. That is discretionary with regard to the proportion of expense, but it is mandatory with regard to the amount of land.

Mr. TILLMAN. The homesteaders are always poor people, and we want to encourage, not discourage, them. I was surprised to hear the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] say that a certain land office in Missouri ought to be abolished where there are only 58 acres. That is not in this bill at all. Why does the gentleman refer to that in his argument against the bill when it is not in this bill and ought not to be.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman will yield, what I said was it was in the bill as it passed the Senate, was it not?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What I told the House was that we had to look forward to a conference, and I explained what would happen when this bill went to conference.

Mr. TILLMAN. Nothing of that kind is going to happen. The contention of the friends of the bill was that we would send the bill back to the Senate, and it will pass overwhelmingly by their agreeing to the House amendments. The Committee on the Public Lands, having jurisdiction, did the proper thing in culling out of the Senate bill 6 useless offices and providing for continuing the 10 useful and necessary offices embraced in the bill now under debate.

The Committee on Appropriations should not get too arrogant. The average member of the Committee on Appropriations bestrides this narrow hall like a colossus, and the rest of us must walk between his legs, and we can get only what crumbs he chooses to let fall. I was not consulted by any member of the Appropriations Committee when it was determined to discontinue the Harrison land office; nor was my colleague, Mr. PARKS, nor was Judge KINKAID. Mr. MADDEN is inaccurate when he says all members were notified of what his committee intended to do in the premises. It would seem that ordinary courtesy would suggest a different course.

When the Roman populace wanted a stricken gladiator killed, they turned their thumbs down. The best painting of the Emperor Nero shows him sitting in the coliseum surrounded by his lords, with his thumb turned down, while a gladiator in the arena was holding up his dripping blade for a sign from his majesty. Just in that connection and further to illustrate my point, I read from a book which is still authority in this House. In chapter 15 of the Gospel of St. Luke, I find:

> What man of you, having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?
> And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing.
> And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbors, saying unto them, Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep which was lost.

Some of us have just one little Government sheep in our districts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The House has control of the time.

Mr. SINNOTT. I can not yield to the gentleman any time. I am sorry.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman. I want to hear the rest about it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I thank the gentleman; he shall hear. I will now attempt to bring together the Roman Emperor, a few land-office lambs, and the gentleman from Michigan.

Judge KINKAID, of Nebraska, holds up his dripping eyes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], who is playing the rôle of a legislative Nero, and says, "Will you not permit me to retain in my district this one little Government land office lamb; it is all we have?" And the gentleman from Michigan turns his thumb down. And the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WEBSTER] looks with pleading eyes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and says, "Will you not spare my land-office lamb? I have no harbors, no rivers, no fish hatcheries even. May I not keep this one little meek-eyed lambkin?" The gentleman turns his thumb down. And I come before him and say, "It is the only thing I have in my district that the Government has ever given us; it has been there for 50 years; it is a revenue producer; it is a great accommodation to our homesteaders, and will you not allow it to live?" And he turns down both his thumbs.

It ought to be and is the policy of this Government to encourage the homesteader. He has made this a Government of home owners. He does go, must go, to the land office itself to try his contests, to consult about entering land, to prove up his entry, and if the land office is remote from him he often is unable to make or perfect his entry. Practice economy, of course, but not at the expense of the poor devil who has to build and live in a sod house on the plains or in a gray cabin on some wild mountain side.

Many of the Members in this House have been homesteaders. Scott Ferris was, GENSMAN is, MONDELL, I think, was. In the West particularly live many homesteaders, and they are the men who—

> Tore through ways of ashen alkali,
> And desert winds blew sudden, swift, and dry.
> The dust! It sat upon and filled the train,
> It seemed to fret and fill the very sky.
> Lo! dust upon the beasts, the tent, the plain,
> And dust, alas! on breasts that rose not up again.

[Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CLOUSE].

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not at this time undertake to discuss in detail all of the facts which I have in mind concerning the expenditure of public money in the construction of public highways. My colleague, Mr. SCOTT, and myself have introduced a resolution asking an investigation of the Tennessee Highway Commission, and what I am desirous of bringing to your attention at this time is the unconscionable discrimination that is being manifested on the part of some of the State highway commissions in the location of public roads as well as in the distribution of road machinery which is furnished to them by the Government free of charge.

I should not feel justified in criticizing the commission of any other State unless first I shall have put that of my own State in order; hence I shall call your attention to the situation as I see and believe it to be in Tennessee.

I shall take up the amount of road-building machinery that has been furnished the State highway department of Tennessee since June 1, 1919, absolutely free of charge, and which, in so far as it relates to automobile trucks, amounts to $2,261,430, according to the books of the Bureau of Public Roads in Washington.

This is but a part of the material and machinery that has been furnished by the Bureau of Public Roads, as will be seen from the letter which I received from the chief of bureau under date of June 24, 1922, in which it is stated that the actual cost to the Government would be considerable more than $4,000,000. The letter to which I refer reads as follows, and explains the photostatic pages of these books which I will insert in part as a part of my remarks:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS,
Washington, D. C., June 24, 1922.

HON. WYNNE F. CLOUSE,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CLOUSE: Your letter of June 16, 1922, in which you asked to be advised as to the equipment furnished by the Federal Government to the Tennessee State highway department and its value or cost to the Government has been received.

There are inclosed herewith photostat copies of our ledger sheets showing the type and quantity of material, equipment, and supplies awarded to the Tennessee State highway department from the War Department's surplus. The materials awarded are entered under the column headed "Quantity" and the amount of each item actually delivered to the State is entered under the column headed "Shipped," which also gives the date of shipment.

The appraised value of the materials delivered to the State highway department of Tennessee approximates four million dollars. Its actual cost to the Government would be considerably more than that sum. In many cases we have been unable to determine what these various items cost the Government, but their value at the time shipments were made has been estimated both by the War Department and by this department and, as stated above, the total value of the materials delivered the Tennessee State highway department is about four million dollars.

Very truly yours, THOS. H. MACDONALD,
Chief of Bureau.

There has been furnished to the same highway department additional road-building materials, such as mattocks, picks, axes, nails, fence posts, wire, wheelbarrows, harness, wagons, axe and pick handles, hammers, hatchets, lanterns, oil, fuse, anvils, sledges, and a thousand and one other things necessary in the construction of public roads to the amount of approximately $2,000,000 more. What in the name of high heaven do you suppose has been done with this property? What has this highway commission accomplished with all of this material and with all of the millions of dollars that this Government has furnished in addition to the material? Why, sirs, let me tell you that up until May 31 of this year they had completed and the Government had accepted but 40 miles of road.

In my congressional district, which is by far the largest in area of any in Tennessee, they have started but two projects, and these two involve disconnected links amounting to 27½ miles.

The Government has furnished on these two projects already, saying nothing of the contribution made by the taxpayers of the counties affected, the sum total of $121,602.80, and yet these projects are less than 50 per cent completed.

Instead of taking counsel of the people and cooperating with the people, it seems that the highway commissioners of my State, as well as those of some other States, have arrogated unto themselves the right to arbitrarily, and sometimes, no doubt, for personal or partisan reasons, expend this money which is the people's without regard for economy or without regard to the wishes and interests of the masses. One of these projects to which I have referred has been under construction for more than two years, and yet when I was in that county last fall there was less than 5 miles of that road completed.

That the people of my State and the country generally may know just how liberal and how interested the Government is in the building of highways, I here insert the statement of materials, other than automobile trucks, and so forth, which have been furnished to the highway department of my State to the present time:

Just a few days ago I received a letter from the auditor of the State of Tennessee asking me to furnish him with a detailed statement of equipment furnished by the Government to the Tennessee State Highway Department, and in which it is stated that he is unable to get such information from the State highway department. Here is what he said to me in this connection:

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE AUDITOR,
Nashville, June 12, 1922.

Hon. W. F. CLOUSE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: If I remember correctly, the equipment furnished the various States for good-road purposes is distributed through the Agricultural Department, shipped to the State highway departments, and this department is desirous of securing a complete inventory of all equipment furnished the State highway department of this State, and would like, if possible, to have cost price of each item of equipment furnished by the Government to Tennessee.

We have not the act of Congress providing for a distribution of such road equipment before us and may be mistaken as to what department that distributes, whether it is the War Department or Agricultural Department, but are of the impression that it all comes from the War Department through the Agricultural.

If not asking too much of you, will be under obligations if you will see that we get this inventory, to the end that we can make a proper showing to the people of Tennessee of the equipment received from the Government and the disposition of the same, as complaint is being made against the highway department of the State, and I have been unable to secure this from the State highway department.

With best wishes, I am,
Truly your friend,

T. W. WADE, State Auditor.

I do not know just what is meant by the language "unable to get this information from the State highway department" in the letter of the State auditor, but this I do know: If it is because they do not have much data, then they have shown themselves to be utterly incapable of management, and if it is because they have deliberately refused to give an account, then the investigation which is asked for in the resolution introduced by my colleague and by myself, in either event, should be adopted and the matter carefully investigated to the end that the greatest good may be attained in the expenditure of the moneys which we have provided for building good roads for the next three years.

The roads upon which they are now working in my district are meritorious, but the progress is too slow. The roads upon which I hope to see work commenced and prosecuted to completion under both business and economical methods will open up a territory rich in the natural resources of the Nation, such as is to be found in Clay and Pickett and Cumberland and Fentress and Overton and other counties in my district, than which no richer soil is to be found anywhere, and where the people are of the purest strain of Anglo-Saxon blood in all the world. [Applause.]

AUTOMOBILE TRUCKS, TRACTORS, MOTOR CYCLES, AND BICYCLES.

I here insert the statement furnished me by the Bureau of Public Roads showing the number of trucks, tractors, and so forth, furnished to the State highway department of Tennessee out of surplus war material and which shows the kind and number as well as the date when shipped and the appraised value of same.

From this statement we see that there has been furnished 660 one to five ton trucks and 233 bicycles, a sufficient number to have supplied each of the 95 counties in Tennessee with seven automobile trucks, or enough to have enabled each county to carry on the work of improving their roads in an economical manner. This has not been done. If this property had been equitably distributed among the counties of my State, each county would have received, according to appraised values, the sum of $23,804.58 in automobile trucks alone.

Trucks, tractors, etc., furnished to State Highway Department of Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE].

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that in the limited time allotted to me it will be impossible for me to give to this House the information which I believe will have a tendency at least to elicit the sympathy of the Members of the House toward the homesteaders who are building up the empire in the West.

I have heard to-day from the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations that this was a Congress that was pledged to economy; and in this connection I want to say that I represent a constituency that believes in economy, and I am not presenting this measure for your favorable consideration with any other view than that of economy; not a false economy. I do not believe it is true economy when we deprive the citizens of this country of the rights to which they are justly entitled and subject them to hardships which they should not be called upon to bear. I do not believe that is the economy which we desire to practice.

I am glad to announce that I have been a homesteader myself. I homesteaded in eastern Colorado in 1885. I know the hardships of the homesteader's life, and therefore the situation in the land district in my own district appeals to me very strongly. In addition to having knowledge of the hardships undergone by the homestead entrymen, for 17 years I was receiver of the land office at Sterling, Colo. This land district comprises eight counties of eastern Colorado. It is two hundred and fifty-odd miles from the eastern portion of that district to the place where this office will be located if the office at Sterling is abolished, and it will work a great hardship on the homestead entrymen residing in that locality to transact their business that far remote from the office.

Those of you who are not acquainted with conditions may say that it will not be necessary for them to go to the local office to transact their business; but I say to you that it is very much more satisfactory for them to do so. They can have their final proof taken before a court of record, but that is an additional expense upon them, and while I know that the conditions reported from the department are not very flattering with reference to the continuance of the Sterling office, I want to recite what those conditions are. It is reported that there are only 6,000 acres of land subject to homestead entry. That is approximately true; but, in addition to that, gentlemen, there are over 600 homestead entrymen who are to-day holding lands upon which final proof has not been made, and these proofs must be made before patents can issue and before these lands are placed in the category of entered lands; so that with these claims pending there are now unsold public lands within that district amounting to more than 250,000 acres. So that in my view of the law and of the construction that should be placed upon the statute that was passed 80 years ago in reference to doing away with offices where the unsold lands were found to be less than 100,000 acres, it should not apply to the Sterling district.

The vacant Government lands that remain are not in contiguous bodies. They are in isolated tracts throughout the confines of the district. They will eventually be entered, and thereby an additional number of parties will be called upon to make final proof away from their land offices and subject to expenses which they should not be subjected to. The receipts of the office last year were over $13,000. The expenses of administration were too high, I admit, and do not come within the 33⅓ per cent limit. The expenses should have been reduced, and the Secretary of the Interior would have been justified in consolidating the offices of register and receiver long before this time, thereby reducing expenditures. The recommendation that I made to the Committee on the Public Lands was that I would be glad to have the offices of register and receiver consolidated, and that is recommended in this bill, and it should be carried out in cutting down expenses for next year, which would give opportunity for these 600 entrymen to perfect their proof without inconvenience to them; it would, in addition to paying the expense of the maintenance of the office, return a revenue to the Treasury of about $6,000 or $7,000.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. I have heard it stated that this bill, if enacted into law, will not place any additional burden on the taxpayers of the country. Is that the understanding of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. That is my understanding. It will not add to the expense. It is true that an appropriation must be made by Congress to pay the expenses, because the receipts of the office are returned to the Treasury of the United States. But in addition to the amount of money that will be necessary to retain these offices another year—and I believe confidently that within that year many of the proofs will be made——

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Suppose the office is paying $20,000 in fees now, and the office is abolished. Would those fees be lost to the Treasury, or would they be paid somewhere else?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. They would naturally be returned to the Treasury from some source. I want to refer to the entrymen, whose proofs are unperfected in that district. They are largely returned soldiers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman very briefly state what advantage it is to the settlers to have a land office in that vicinity? Can they not do all this business by mail?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that they can not. They must either go to the office that has been designated to take the place of the local office in order to make their proof, or they must go before a court of record in the county where they live and pay an additional fee beyond the amount they have to return to the land office for repayment to the department, and that is from $5 to $7; usually $5.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman has been register and receiver of the land office himself?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I was receiver for 17 years in the Sterling office. The applicants for this Government land are largely at the present time returned soldiers. They were called to the service of their country by reason of the great World War. They made that sacrifice, and they have now returned, and many of them have found themselves in a condition that does not enable them to improve their land. With the serious failure of crops that we have had in recent years and the inability of banks to furnish them credit, they have not had the money with which to complete the proof, and I am begging for them an additional year, so that they can complete their entries without additional expense on their part. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OGDEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Chairman, the recent legislation for the concentration of distilled spirits into a limited number of warehouses, and which was tacked on the Treasury appropriation bill, provides that the transfer shall be made upon the initiative of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall prescribe regulations for the removal and shall also prescribe the forms and penal sums of the bonds to be executed, one to cover the liquor while in storage and the other to cover it in transit and in storage. The regulations have just been formulated, and I presume the work of concentration will begin soon.

I wish to call attention to the situation that is created by this act and the complications that will very likely follow any attempt to proceed as mapped out by the regulations. By section 5 the commissioner initiates the transfer of the spirits by directing their removal to a concentration warehouse designated by him, and as a means of carrying his order into effect he may invoke the power conferred by sections 3272, Revised Statutes, and 57 of the act of August 27, 1894. These statutes provide that the commissioner may require distilled spirits to be transferred to some other warehouse designated by him whenever, in his opinion, any distillery or other warehouse is unsafe or unfit for use, or the merchandise therein is liable to loss or great wastage, or whenever distilling shall have been suspended for a certain period and the quantity of spirits remaining in the distillery warehouse is less than a fixed number of proof gallons.

The new act extends the commissioner's powers by authorizing him to direct removal for the purpose of concentration. Hence it was deemed necessary to expressly authorize the transfer of whisky to concentration warehouses and not rely upon existing statutes to accomplish that purpose.

The purpose of the concentration is to serve the Government by cutting off the present cost of guarding the warehouses and shifting that expense and responsibility to others. The penalty part of the old statutes to which the regulations refer as embracing the power to compel the removal reads as follows:

> Whenever the owner of such merchandise fails to make such transfer within the time prescribed, or to pay the just and proper expense of such transfer as ascertained and determined by the commissioner, such merchandise may be seized and sold by the collector in the same manner as goods are sold upon distraint for taxes, and the proceeds of such sale shall be applied to the payment of the taxes due thereon and the cost and expenses of such sale and removal, and the balance paid over to the owner of such merchandise.

Evidently if this penalty is relied upon for the authority to compel removal it will be mandatory upon the officer to sell the whisky at public auction to the highest bidder and turn it over to his possession. The duty to do so can not be evaded if the law is to be followed, because delivery is necessary to complete the sale. There is no provision in existing law and none referred to in the regulations that permits a seizure and taking possession of goods of this character for the purpose of concentration, and there is no appropriation to cover the cost incident to the transfer of liquor from one warehouse to another. The only source from which funds may be obtained under present law to defray the expenses incident to enforced removal is from the seizure and sale of the liquor and delivery thereof to the highest bidder. Is it to be presumed that the commissioner will proceed in this manner and thus defeat the very purpose of the prohibition act? Indeed, if such course were taken there would hardly be any need for the concentration warehouse.

Without the consent of the distiller to the removal, the transfer can not be lawfully effected. Then, shall it be assumed that through some agency of the Government it will be sought to compel concentration, if not under the law, then in the name of prohibition? It will be illuminating in this connection to read the evidence of Assistant Attorney General Holland, who was very ably examined by my colleague from Kentucky, Mr. JOHNSON, who, by the way, is the best-posted Member of the House on this subject:

> Mr. JOHNSON. You say the rights are found in this (the concentration legislation). I find in here the right of the commissioner to take the initiative toward removing spirits for the purpose of concentration; but, beyond taking the initiative, I do not find any authority conveyed upon him by which the removal may be concluded.
> Mr. HOLLAND. I think, Mr. Congressman, that I read the act the same as you do, and I entertain the same opinion that your question indicates you entertain.

Notwithstanding the plain meaning of the statute and the opinion of the Department of Justice that there is no authority of law for the use of force to compel removal, the department has incorporated in the regulations this language:

> The powers in section 3272 * * * will be invoked by the commission to compel the removal * * *.

Why this threat of force when none can be legally used? Is it the intention to intimidate the distiller and thereby obtain his consent to removal or to actually override the law and force the transfer? But if neither is the purpose, then what is the justification for putting the prohibition enforcement service before the public as inspiring claims to powers which it does not possess? Such action is certainly not in keeping with the candor and fairness that should characterize the administration of law enforcement and deserves to be denounced as being unworthy of any agency of this Government.

I do not apprehend, however, that citizens whose rights are involved will submit to having their property buffeted around by Federal officers claiming authority under statutes which are wholly inapplicable. I apprehend that injunctive relief will be sought from such threatened unlawful acts by these officers and that ultimately the Government will be forced to abandon its high-handed methods and deal with the question with due and proper regard for the rights of these citizens.

Relative to the treatment of accrued charges against distilled spirits and the cost of transportation, the regulations make the following provision:

Upon removal of spirits to a concentration warehouse, by order of the commissioner, settlement of accrued charges against such spirits and transportation costs to the concentration warehouse may be had, for example, in one of the following ways:

(a) Payment of accrued charges by the owner of the spirits to the distiller or proprietor of the warehouse from which spirits are to be removed, and payment of transportation costs by the owner.

(b) Assumption of accrued charges and transportation costs by the proprietor of the concentration warehouse to which the spirits are removed.

It would appear that the department may have in mind other ways for handling these charges, as the two given are referred to as mere "examples." It will be noted that in seeking to make a success of this undertaking the interests of both the owner and distiller are given slight, if any, consideration. The proprietor of the concentration warehouse is permitted to "assume" the accrued charges on the spirits, whether the warehouseman, to whom they are payable, consents to it or not, and, although he may be rated as slow pay, or even insolvent, he is not even required to secure the payment of these charges by collateral or otherwise. No provision whatever is made for safeguarding the distillers' interest, but he must stand by in silence while the rights guaranteed to him under the organic law of the land are trampled under foot and held in contempt. Therefore, the time has now come in the history of prohibition enforcement when public officials feel justified in doing indirectly that which they are expressly prohibited from doing directly. The people owning and having an interest in this property are not outlaws or enemies to society, but many of them are among the best citizens. They engaged in the distillery business and created their stocks under the sanction and approval of the law, and for four years or more they have waited for their Government to announce a policy that will permanently fix the status of these stocks. They are entitled to have their property rights respected and treated on a basis of fairness, and not otherwise.

The regulations failed to enumerate the items constituting the so-called "accrued charges." The warehouseman has a lien on the liquor for storage, bottling, recooperage, and insurance, and besides, under the laws of some of the States, including Kentucky, he is liable for the State, county, and municipal taxes which are assessed. It is not stated whether all or only a part of these items are included. The fact is the question is left open to doubt and perhaps litigation to the annoyance, inconvenience, and expense to the parties concerned.

There are many other elements left to conjecture which enter very largely into the removal proposal, such, for instance, as allowance for leakage or loss by unavoidable accident. We should enact a full and comprehensive statute setting forth the obligations which the distiller should bear and such burdens as the Government should assume instead of attempting to cover this large field by an extremely narrow and limited act.

I have read the bond which the proprietor of a concentration warehouse is required to execute and considering its far-reaching and exacting terms I doubt whether any solvent person would be willing to assume the obligations. However, I do not care at this time to enter upon a discussion of this feature of the question. Mr. Chairman, if concentration is the remedy and we are to proceed as outlined by the department, then I favor the Government purchasing all of the whisky contained in the warehouses of the country at a fair price, thus bringing to an end the state of uncertainty in which this question has existed since the enactment of the so-called Volstead law. [Applause.]

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a moment ago asked what is the need of these land offices and what is the necessity for maintaining them? That is the real question with which we are dealing here at the present time. If these offices are not needed, they ought not to be continued; but, on the other hand, if they are needed and if the local situation is such that the people there need the continuation of these offices, and it is to their advantage to continue them, they should be continued.

But before I deal with that question I desire to take up just for a moment some of the figures in connection with these offices, because I think some of the figures which have been given to the House are incorrect. All of the figures which I shall give you are taken from the annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, which are the latest available or received directly from the local land offices, so that I have reason to believe that they are entirely accurate, or at least nearly so.

From the report it appears that the Bellefourche office had an income of $30,326.80 for 1921. The expenses were $10,205.25, so that that office turned into the Treasury $20,121.55 above all expenses. It is fair to assume that it will continue for some time to turn in a large revenue.

The same is true of every office, with one exception, that is contained in this bill.

The receipts of these offices as a whole for 1921 were $151,618.39. The total expense of operation was $80,407.76. So that the net revenue to the Government above all expenses for maintaining them was $71,210.63.

Following are the figures in detail:

Statement of income and expense and net gain to the Government in the following land offices for the year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. If there were no land offices at all it would all go into the Treasury for the benefit of the people, would it not?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The fees would still go into the Treasury; but let me say to my friend that while this money would go into the Treasury it would not eliminate the expense. It is proposed, for instance, in my district, to eliminate the office at Timber Lake. The entire office force has been ordered to go into the Pierre land office, to which the work of the Timber Lake office will be transferred, with the exception of the register and receiver, and these offices are consolidated in the bill, so that in the event the office is closed the saving will be nothing like what is claimed here. It has been said that the saving will be $128,000 a year if the offices in this bill are discontinued. As a matter of fact, the saving would not be over $35,000 or $40,000. The statement shows that the total operating expenses are only $80,407.76; then, how can there be a saving of $128,000? The loss to the settlers would be many times the amount that the Government can possibly save.

Now, gentlemen, why should these offices be continued? My father was a homesteader and I grew up on that homestead. When I was old enough I went still farther west and filed on a tract of land myself and proved it up. So I think I know something about homesteading conditions. I have lived among homesteaders all my life. I have practiced in the land offices and have handled a good many contest cases before those offices in the State of South Dakota. Now, gentlemen, there are pending to-day a large number of contests in most of these offices. For instance, at the Lemmon land office—which, by the way, has been cut out by this bill—there were 196 contests filed last year, and there are exactly the same reasons for trying a contest case before the officials of the land office that there are for trying lawsuits before a court and jury. For that reason alone these offices should be maintained.

There is a considerable number of contests now pending and undisposed of in all these offices. These people have the right to have those cases tried before the officials in the land office. If you abolish the land offices in my district, the people tributary to the Lemmon office will have to go an average of 195 miles overland and 325 miles by rail to reach Pierre, to which point it is proposed to transfer the business. If the Timber Lake office is abolished, they will have to travel an average of 95 miles overland and 300 miles by rail in order to reach the new office.

Mr. LAYTON. To what body for an appeal?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. They have an appeal from the local land office to the General Land Office and from the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LAYTON. Where is the General Land Office?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Located in Washington, D. C. My point is that if these two offices are abolished they will have to go the distances which I have mentioned to get to the nearest remaining land office. I have here a telegram from John A. Ross, register of the Bellefourche land office. Mr. Ross can not be said to be an interested party, because he retires from the office on June 30 and is not even an applicant for reappointment. I received this telegram from him the other day:

BELLEFOURCHE, S. DAK., June 15, 1922.

Hon. WILLIAM WILLIAMSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We find from actual experience about 50 per cent of filings and proofs made before outside officers, clerks, or commissioners are erroneous and have to be rejected. This greatly increases expense to homesteaders and generally requires a trip to land office before finally straightened out. We have one proof which has been advertised four times because of such errors, and not yet completed.

JOHN A. ROSS, Register.
RAY L. BRONSON, Receiver.

Now that is simply an illustration of what happens every day when you attempt to submit the proof before inexperienced officials. These homesteaders will most of them want to go to the land office, no matter where it is located, to make their proof. It will subject each of them to an additional expense of all the way from $25 to $100 if these officers are removed. Even if they prove up before a local official they will have to pay $5 extra for making their proof, and in my district alone these additional fees and expenses will be more than enough in the coming year to maintain all the offices there.

I want to take a little time to discuss the two offices that have been stricken from the bill by the Comm ttee on the Public Lands of the House. The committee has stricken out Timber Lake and Lemmon, and I believe both offices are entitled to be retained in this bill.

While it is true that in the Timber Lake land district there are only 4,718 acres of land unentered, there are 171,600 acres of unperfected homestead entries. There are in the same district 408,373 acres proved up but not patented. The patents are held up because the people are too poor to pay for their lands. That is a fair illustration of the condition out there, and yet you are proposing to take away this land office and put these people to extra expense. The total income of the office is $231,434.91, and the total expenditure is $11,235.50. Of course these are not all earnings, because the office retains only 2 per cent of the Indian moneys collected, but by consolidating the offices of register and receiver it will be more than self-sustaining.

Now, take the office at Lemmon, S. Dak. There are 15,487 acres of land that has not been entered. There are 240,479 acres of unperfected homestead entries, so that the total acreage is over 255,000 acres. In that office there were filed in 1921 and 1922, 196 contests, of which 14 are now pending and undisposed of in the local office. In this same land district—Lemmon—there are 150,000 acres of mineral land subject to entry, upon which three oil wells are now going down. Are you going to take away this office and compel the parties to go 195 miles to get to a land office for the purpose of entering their filings?

Let me just read you what some of the people who are on the ground have to say about it. Here is a telegram from Mr. Fjetland, the editor of the local paper:

LEMMON, S. DAK., June 13, 1922.

Congressman WILLIAM WILLIAMSON,
Washington, D. C.:

Note that Lemmon land office is eliminated in report of committee on your bill. Should this action be sustained by House, a serious hardship will be imposed on more than 2,000 entrymen not yet proved up, whose only accessible point at all times is Lemmon. Please impress on Members that these entrymen hold more than 240,000 acres of Government land, and an accessible land office means a direct saving of thousands of dollars to them at a time when they can scarcely carry their present burdens.

O. K. FJETLAND,
Chairman of Mass Meeting.

Mr. J. A. Ross, the register of the Bellefourche office, to whom I have already referred, writes:

* * * * * * *

Economy is argued and honestly intended; but I believe that, while the Government would save some in expenses no doubt, the extra amount it would cost the people to go such long distances to transact business, the longer time they would be away from home on expenses, would be a much larger sum than the Government would save. And this expense would fall not on the whole people in the conduct of Government, but on a few pioneers, whose hard lot in opening up and developing this western country surely must excite the interest and pity of every man and woman who knows the facts of their hardships. I feel sure that, if all facts were known as you and I understand them, no change at this time would be made.

* * * * * * *

But becoming somewhat acquainted with the people and their financial condition during the almost eight years I have been here, my heart aches for them; many of them are in such financial condition that if a "fake" contest should be brought against them they could not stand the expense of defending themselves, especially at such long distances as would be imposed in a change, if tried at the land office. At best, the hard financial circumstance and short crops will drive many of those who have pioneered, toiled, and striven on these prairies to bankruptcy and ruin. I can not see how suffering can be prevented, and a change of places or the consolidation of this land office at this time with Rapid City I believe would work a hardship on many homesteaders, some living 80 miles from this office.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. CLOUSE] and I have just introduced a resolution authorizing the Speaker of the House to appoint a select committee of five to inquire into the expenditures and distribution of moneys and properties furnished by the United States Government to the Tennessee State Highway Commission under the Federal-aid plan.

Numerous and vigorous complaints are being made by the citizens of Tennessee against alleged discriminations of the operation of the Tennessee State Highway Commission. I am authoritatively advised that the commission has refused to permit the State auditor of Tennessee to see its records. The Congress of the United States makes the Federal-aid appropriation for the specific purpose of cooperating with the States of the Union in the construction of highways, and should not permit any State highway commission to become so arrogant as to refuse to permit the records of its office to be reviewed by the representative clothed with authority, be he State or Federal official.

The taxpayers of Tennessee are entitled to know how and for what purpose their money is being expended. If the Tennessee Highway Commission has faithfully performed its duty, it should welcome an investigation, that the charge of discrimination and inefficiency might be successfully refuted and thereby restore the confidence of the people of the State.

Mr. Chairman, the blue-print report submitted by the United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Public Roads, giving status of expenditures on post-road projects submitted by the State of Tennessee to the Secretary of Agriculture May 31, 1922, discloses some interesting facts, which the Members of this Congress and the people of Tennessee should know. I therefore ask permission to extend this report in the RECORD.

Statement of post road projects submitted by the State of Tennessee to the Secretary of Agriculture to May 31, 1922, under the provisions of the acts of Congress of 1916, 1919, and 1921.

[United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Public Roads.]

NOTE.—A highway project is first submitted by the State highway department as a "project statement" which sets forth the location of the road, a general statement of the improvements contemplated, an estimate of the total cost, and a statement of the amount of Federal aid to be requested. When the project statement has been approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, the State then prepares and submits detailed plans, specifications, and estimates of cost of the project. From this data the "project agreement" is prepared and executed by the Secretary of Agriculture and the proper officials of the State.

Approval of the project statement thus designates the project as one on which Federal funds may be expended while execution of the project agreement allots a specified amount of Federal funds for expenditure on the project.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON].

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing my personal views on the merchant marine.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, in the matter before the House the question resolves itself primarily into the interrogation whether the Nation needs a merchant marine and why it needs it.

Before deciding this it is reasonably necessary to keep in mind certain facts which exist and which we as legislators can not evade or forget. The first fact of great importance is that the Nation has on hand a large number of vessels of various sorts and qualities, some of them fit for the purpose of merchant marine, but some unfit. Second, it costs $16,000,000 per annum to officer, equip, guard, and generally care for this fleet now owned by the Government, a fleet which, it should be borne in mind, cost the people, under the last administration, three and a half billions of dollars. Third, it is evident that these vessels must be got rid of some time by selling them either to our own people or to foreigners, unless we intend to keep them and use them under Government control.

Government control and ownership is not a very popular idea at this time, and I suspect it might as well be eliminated from consideration. We can not sell these vessels to our own people without doing something to equalize the cost difference in operation which American standards create, not only naturally but because of our laws, which compel a higher standard in the cost of operation. Now, if we sell our vessels to foreigners, advertising in advance that neither the Government of the United States nor its individual citizens will compete at the selling, which fact will be advertised by the failure to pass this bill, it follows in a common-sense fashion that without competition the fleet will be sold for a song. A $3,000,000,000 fleet will be sold for a mere tithe of its cost. If, however, a subsidy is granted, the competition will be such as to make the receipts aggregate many millions more than they otherwise would, and possibly to the extent of paying for the subsidy for at least two or three years to come, which may be time enough to establish the value of a merchant-marine service to those who now disapprove, as well as establish the necessity for the subsidy itself. If we sell this marine fleet to foreigners at a minimum price, we shall get a ridiculously petty return for what cost billions. If we put $30,000,000 a year behind the proposition as a policy of encouragement and protection, we will get more for the fleet beyond a doubt, and possibly demonstrate the necessity as well as the value of a merchant marine to the objectors of the country, without costing a penny until the demonstration is made. This is, briefly, one angle of the problem.

Another is, ought we to have a merchant marine? Personally, I believe we should. This is an age of transportation. Under modern discoveries in power and machinery, the whole world has become a great market. It makes no difference that it means transportation on the water. Transportation as a national matter must include transportation on water as well as on land. We would not let foreigners come in and buy and control our railroads or public highways, nor our internal water and coastwise trade.

I fail to understand the argument of those who say it will cost more than if we leave our Atlantic and Pacific commerce to the Jap, the Norwegian, or the British merchant marine. No doubt our coastwise traffic and even that on our rivers and canals and the Great Lakes might be cheaper if we permitted foreigners to enter into competition. But every bit of business done by foreigners is that much less done by Americans, and therefore that much less capital employed and wages paid out for the benefit of our people. Transportation on land is a prime and indispensable necessity for national commerce. If, under the Esch-Cummins law, the railroads should cease to function because profits were impossible, capital would go out of all railroads and the Government would be compelled to take them over and pay for their maintenance and operation. You gentlemen, especially from the Middle West, forget that your prosperity, your very life indeed, depends on transportation much more than those sections of the country bordering on the littoral of the continent, which in the beginning, now, and ever will furnish the people living near them transportation facilities whether the Congress cares or does not care to take an interest in the matter. I am personally amazed that the Middle West should not be more interested in transportation than any other section of the country, seeing that they have no natural transportation of any sort, and are far remote in many instances from the internal waterways which, together with the railroads, afford them their only relief. To state the problem in another way: I can not understand why the Middle West should not be the most ardent advocate of all forms of transportation inasmuch as it needs transportation most. To-day, and for a very long future, the railroads and the rivers will be the sole agencies by which the farmer, the miner, or the manufacturer of the Middle West can get his product into the marts not of the world alone but even into the congested places of the eastern sections of this country as well.

Railroad and river transportation should not be all the Middle Westerners are concerned in, unless they are satisfied to fulfill the demands of trade alone of this country and care nothing for foreign trade. If they are content to land their products on the wharves where foreigners will transport them, content because it is cheaper, it is neither patriotic nor wise. It is, on the contrary, wholly selfish, sectional, and imbued with a spirit that, carried logically into all sections of the country, means national decadence and disintegration instead of national unity and strength. In my judgment a great nation like the United States—the greatest in agriculture, the greatest in manufacturing, and the greatest in mining—should carry its own products under its own flag into every port of trade throughout the world, for the sake of the honor of the Nation and its pride as well as the material advantages that must accrue therefrom. The late war is ended in a manner on the land. In spite of all altruism, of any idealism, there still remains the irreconcilable conflict and struggle in international trade and commerce. I am well aware of the repugnance of the dreamy indealist to such a statement; but we who still live, as well as those who will hereafter come into being, must have a chance to live, and this can be done only by being strong enough to live. Year by year our population will grow. The 100,000,000 of people of to-day will become 200,000,000 by the end of the century. Every advance made in conserving human life means a more rapid increase in population. In order to live these millions must have food, and food can only be had by labor. Whether labor is a commodity or not, it must have a living wage or the greater part of the world would starve. We might endure after a fashion by simply trading among ourselves; but this never has been done successfully, I mean prosperously and happily, by any nation we have a record of.

The greatest nations of the past owned and operated their own shipping. In fact the measure of their shipping was the measure of their power and affluence. In the late war we paid a heavy price for the lack of shipping, which would have cost most nations their national existence, and came near changing an allied victory into a German victory, thereby changing the history of man and the destiny of nations.

We have a surplus of many things—of many supremely important things, such as corn, cotton, wheat, and mineral products. A mere home market for these things would inevitably result in the decline of these productions, and so a decline of capital in the employment of labor and a decline in wages paid. Many now so employed would have to seek other employment, thus overcrowding other pursuits. No matter how beautiful the dream of life when there shall be no rivalry, no necessity for the conflict of living, it is a mere fancy and a futile hope. Such a dream is not life and never can be, except with the making of a new world, with a new humanity, and an absolute change in natural conditions. We in some way live and must live by toil and constant effort. It is the law to live by the sweat of the brow. It was the first law, and a Congress can not change it.

A millenium is a beautiful concept, but unattainable except in dreams. Of all nations, this Nation must have a market for its products because of the magnitude of its products. Therefore we must have a commanding place in international commerce, which our products of every sort demand. This must be unless we are willing to tamely and heedlessly yield that same commanding place to others who are eagerly intent upon the same purpose and who beyond a doubt, in the pursuit of that purpose, will not be afflicted by dreams of altruistic benevolence, but who will take all they can get, and take it in the most ruthless manner. Nations must strive to live as well as individuals. The same law of survival of the fittest applies equally to both.

It is the duty of Congress to furnish the same care to the Nation in all these matters as the directors of a corporation employ for the corporation which they represent. Our only reason for existence as representatives of the people is the conservation of the national interest in every legitimate and proper manner. If in doing this some section is not benefited as much as some other section, that is no reason why a body of this character should become divided and forget its duty to the national interest. There is no law passed by this body that bears equally upon all sections and confers an equal benefit upon them all. The question involved in this measure now under discussion is whether the passage of the law will prove to be a salutary measure from a national standpoint. Personally, I have always favored a subsidy on the same grounds that I favor a national post-office system, even if at the end of any fiscal year there is a deficit in the running of it, inasmuch as it is evident that the national good involved is beyond all argument when the stupendous benefits are considered.

The farmer is directly and deeply interested in a merchant marine. It is a question whether or not he is not equally interested with any other national enterprise. In order that this may be specifically shown, I am including a statement made by the National Merchant Marine Associat on, which shows how the farmers of the United States lost millions in the late war because, having no merchant marine of our own, and that of all the other nations being naturally employed in their own immediate war necessities, there were no vessels to transport our foreign products to Europe, though the need there was both constant and great and the prices high.

The statement is as follows:

During the war there was a practically unlimited market abroad for the production of American farms. For years we had relied upon foreign ships to do more than 90 per cent of our ocean transportation. Now, however, these ships were diverted to the direct war needs of the European belligerents. And there was only a handful of American ships to fall back on, for the American shipbuilding drive did not begin to produce results in measurable volume until 1919. What was the result?

The answer is found in the reports of the Secretary of Agriculture, showing the exports of farm products since the beginning of the war period. Wheat is a characteristic example. Its exportation, in bushels, has been as follows:

Fiscal year 1915	259,000,000
Fiscal year 1916	173,000,000
Fiscal year 1917	149,000,000
Fiscal year 1918	34,000,000
Fiscal year 1919	178,000,000
Fiscal year 1920	122,000,000
Fiscal year 1921	293,000,000

How the constantly dwindling supply of ocean tonnage during the war affected wheat exports progressively is plain. In 1919, however, American shipyards began to achieve quantity production; and, with facilities under our own flag available in an increasing degree, wheat shipments jumped 400 per cent over the previous year. And what is true of wheat has been true of other farm production.

Last year's exports of agricultural products, according to the Government's own figures, were valued at $2,119,000,000, or nearly half the total for all the Nation's exports. In 1917 less than a third of the aggregate was agricultural; but, with American ships in service, the proportion of farm products to the total outbound shipment is now above the pre-war level. What the effect would be of the more than $2,000,000,000 worth of excess production thrown on the home markets for lack of ocean tonnage to carry it, needs no explanation.

The share of the American farmer in the country's export trade makes the maintenance of adequate shipping facilities under the American flag more vital to him than to any other class of American producers.

I am surprised also at the report that union labor opposes the subsidy.

The aim of all labor, especially of organized labor, is, or should be, to create employment as well as conserve the interest of the unemployed. It is obvious that if we abandon all idea of a merchant marine that two results will inevitably follow: First, the practical abandonment of the shipyards of the country; second, the resulting unemployment of all Americans now employed in manning our vessels engaged in international commerce, except so far as they may obtain employment on foreign ships and get foreign wages and be under foreign conditions generally. The result in substance will be that foreign shipyards will be busy; ours will be deserted. Foreign sailors will be employed; ours will be idle. Altogether, it occurs to me that not only capital but labor itself would be practically driven away from a vast enterprise which concerns not only our national greatness and our national power, but our national opportunities for trade and commerce as well. It would be illuminating to ascertain the reason why the declaration was made by organized labor in taking this position, when everything would seem to substantiate the belief that in the very nature of things it would favor it, provided, of course, that employment and wages are desirable—the way by which millions of our people live and must live.

It is often of value in the consideration of an economic problem to ascertain if possible what "the other fellow" thinks of it, what his interest is, and what his attitude. It is very evident that from this angle of the problem our rivals in international commerce are not only deeply concerned but are in fact much opposed to the building up of a great merchant marine of the United States. This is especially true of Great Britain, which retains in active memory the knowledge that when this country gave Government aid to its shipping it equaled any merchant marine in the world, not excepting that of herself, whose command of the commerce of the world was undisputed until that time.

England has no desire to see this country support again a merchant marine. This is due not only to the loss to be sustained by her in reduced freight and passenger traffic but to the fear of the loss of power as well. The presence of the British flag flying in every port of the seven seas has been a commanding factor in not only attaining and retaining trade and commerce, but in commanding fear and respect for her power. It would be a pitiful spectacle of national weakness for this country to foolishly resolve to surrender to other nations the transportation of its products.

It would be foolish to deny that products carried in an American ship, commanded by American seamen, and flying the American flag, would have no added value nor a greater chance for barter and trade. If this is not so, why have all the great nations striven for their own merchant marine, going even to the extent of subsidizing them in order to maintain them? Without her merchant marine England would have become long ago a very unimportant power. Without it she would have starved when the German U-boat was at work in the Great War. It was her actual salvation in that struggle. It has been a national disgrace as well as a constant national menace that this country in the face of every war emergency should have been compelled to rely on foreign shipping for water transportation.

It is proposed to scrap or sell at an astounding loss the shipping which in every emergency we stood in vital need of. Can it be seriously proposed that we suffer this loss and go back to the old conditions when foreign vessels flying foreign flags and manned by foreign seamen filled American ports, discharging and receiving cargoes? This service should be done by ourselves. There are some things connected with national interest in which the consideration of cost can not be allowed to determine the result, and this is one of them beyond a doubt. This measure involves not only the interest of the Nation in this generation but the national interest of generations to come, involving as it does national profit, prosperity, and power.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] five minutes.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the constant attacks on the Republican administration, I want to incorporate in the RECORD a eulogy of the administration from a most unexpected source. [Applause.]

The Nation, one of the few valuable weeklies in the United States, and a most reliable publication, in its issue of June 21, 1922, contains under the heading "The monarchists commend Mr. Hughes," the following most interesting item:

According to the New York Russian monarchist paper, Prikarpatskaia Russ, of May 20, the "highest monarchist council" addressed the following "note" to Secretary of State Hughes indicating where the Government may expect to find support for its Russian policy:

"DEAR SIR: The highest monarchist council, heading all the Russian monarchist organizations, was deeply gratified to learn that the Government of the United States had declined all official participation at the Genoa Conference, to which representatives of the soviets had been invited by the European powers.

"The highest council of the Russian monarchists has never recognized the soviets as the legal government of Russia. It has repeatedly called the attention of the powers to the danger which menaces the world by reason of the very existence of such a destructive system based upon crime and the violation of all the spiritual and moral laws and statutes of Christian peoples.

"The highest monarchist council has deeply regretted the steps taken by the European Governments, the results of which will inevitably lead toward the recognition of the tyrants of Russia and will strengthen their rule over the unhappy country. But the truthful, eloquent, and noble voice of the United States in this affair gave new hopes to all real Russian patriots. The highest monarchist council is perfectly aware of the importance of the American point of view and the numerous good results it will bring to the whole world.

"Firmly convinced of the inevitability of the establishment of a monarchy in Russia, the highest monarchist council, in the name of the Russia that is to be, expresses its deep gratitude to the Government of the United States for the service it has rendered their fatherland, a service which resurrected Russia will never forget."

It has been my contention all along that the failure of this Government to restore friendly relations with Russia is playing into the hands of the czarists. To continue to refuse recognition to the soviet government is to refuse to recognize a fact.

At the earliest opportunity I shall take up the question at length.

For the present, utilizing the leave to extend my remarks, I shall content myself with incorporating my resolution on the subject of recognition of Russia. The resolution was introduced a year ago. Here is the resolution:

Whereas the restoration of world peace is inconceivable without the reestablishing of friendly relations with a country the territory of which extends over one-half of Europe and over one-third of Asia, and which has a population of more than 140,000,000 people; and

Whereas the Russian people, after generations of heroic effort, have overthrown the autocratic czarist government; and

Whereas the Russian people have suffered the martyrdom of nearly seven years of war, of blockading, and of excommunication by other nations; and

Whereas in order to establish normal conditions after the havoc worked by foreign and civil war it is essential that the Russian people be not only permitted to solve their complex problems without obstruction or intervention by outside powers, but that generous aid and assistance by countries with democratic institutions and democratic experience be extended to the people of Russia; and

Whereas the refusal to recognize the present government of Russia necessarily encourages professional soldiers, political adventurers, and the adherents of the czarist régime in fomenting civil war, thus intensifying the distress of a long-suffering people; and

Whereas the restoration of czarism would be inevitably followed by the oppression of religious, national, and racial minorities, by the brutal crushing of all forms of political, civil, and religious liberty, by organized pogroms and by the reestablishment of medieval institutions; and

Whereas the refusal to deal with Russia as a friendly nation is an act of injustice, is contrary to the best ideals and traditions of the American people, and is injurious to the people of the United States as well as to the people of Russia: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be advised and requested, and he hereby is advised and requested, to recognize the existing Government of Russia and to reestablish friendly relations with the Government and the people of Russia.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY].

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, after diligent effort to hold its membership here in sufficient number to maintain a working force, we understand that the majority is about to give up and throw the House into recess. The minority is opposed to this recess, because there are many things that ought to be attended to before it is taken. However, if our friends across the aisle are willing to accept the responsibility and go home to their constituents empty handed, who are we that we should refuse to go home also? As the humorous John Allen would have said:

We realize that the country is anxiously awaiting to hear from us. We must go home and discuss with our constituents the vital question as to whether or not we are to represent them in this House for another two years. When that is finished and—

When we can see our title clear
To two more years unfurled,
Then we can smile at Satan's rage
And face a frowning world.

Then I presume that the majority will be willing to come back and wind up its affairs, as becomes men who realize that the end is near.

But, gentlemen, at last there is a very serious side to this campaign business. A man who is capable of representing a district in Congress ought also to be capable of leading the thought and shaping the ideals of his constituency. God pity the man whose principles are so low and whose motives are so sordid that in order to win votes for himself he is willing to degrade the ideals and poison the minds of the citizens to whom he speaks or with whom he mixes.

There are many ways in which this is done, but I have observed three which seem to me peculiarly pernicious.

First, the evil which has been much discussed—and for good reason, since this Congress met—the corrupt use of money in campaigns. It seems to me to make very little difference which end of a corrupt money transaction a man may be at. He is guilty whether he gives or receives. If a man of standing and leadership is at one end of the bargain he is peculiarly guilty. For he is in position to understand what he is doing. He is not only taking advantage of a fellow man and corrupting an individual voter; he is undermining the very foundation of our Government.

The second of these pernicious evils is the use of slander and vilification. This, perhaps, is worse than the use of money. I have recently had brought to my attention a forceful article written on this subject by the Rev. L. E. Hall and published in the Southern Sentinel, a paper of my own district, on September 8, 1921. After commenting strongly and justly on the improper use of money in elections, the reverend gentleman well says:

There is another class of men equally as dangerous as the one mentioned above. They are in reality the tools of the former. I allude to those who will publish or tell a lie in order to mislead or influence some one or more to cast a vote or their votes against his or their interest, and in many instances against his or their private judgment. Of all the despicable and detestable creatures on this earth in the shape of men, the man who would, knowingly and purposely, publish or tell a lie in order to defeat one man by misleading another is the meanest and the most despicable. If I had to draw a picture of such a creature I would put a tail on it—and then apologize to the tail.

But little above the sin of the man who willfully tells what he knows to be untrue is the sin of the man who catches up scandal and repeats it without waiting to know the evidence of its truth. Yet many people seem to think that they have a perfect right to assassinate the character of a man who is in politics by the free circulation of any sort of accusation, though it be backed by no higher authority than "they tell me" or "I have heard." Unfortunately this vicious practice seems to obtain all over the country, from the election of the humblest beat official to the election of President.

Sometimes a candidate for office maliciously cultivates this infamy among the people if he thinks it will injure his opponent. In that way he seeks to escape the responsibility himself and yet to reap the tainted harvest. He forgets the awful curse which our Master pronounced against "whoso causeth one of the least of these my little ones to stumble."

This is an evil which can not be controlled by any law except the divine law. The misuse of money may be reached; the publishing of libel may be held accountable; but the insidious spreading of rumor is hardly tangible before human law. Yet—

> Who steals my purse steals trash;
> But he that filches from me my good name
> Robs me of that which not enriches him
> And makes me poor indeed.

The man who goes out to vilify his opponent or in any way to injure unjustly and unfairly the good name of his opponent has taken something more valuable than money or office and has done a meaner thing than the man who has bought, bribed, or stolen.

Third. Possibly the most hurtful crime of the demagogue, and the wickedest, is the practice of arousing a general spirit of bitterness and suspicion among the people that he may be carried into office or position on the wave thus set in motion. Just now our country and the world are passing through the most sinister period of unrest that modern civilization has seen. It seems to me that just about the highest duty of any public man is to do all in his power to allay this unrest. The man who augments it is a menace to the peace of the world and a traitor to humanity. He threatens the direct ruin of our civilization and the destruction of free institutions.

The most important thing in the world now to every individual in the world is the maintenance of world peace. Thoughtful men everywhere realize that this is a task which challenges our best strength. With the present advancement in means of destruction—in the production of explosives and poisonous gases—one shudders to think what another world war would mean.

The world is made up of nations, nations are made up of communities; and communities are made up of individuals. Some one has recently spoken of conditions in our country as "America gone mad." Whoever or whatever excites the passions of the people fans flames which may result in general conflagration. There is everywhere a spirit of disregard for law and fretting against authority—a kind of feeling that government is oppressive and is making itself a curse rather than a blessing, and that those who are in position of authority or leadership are corrupt and oppressive and are willfully responsible for the ills that beset us. The demagogues of each political party and of each section encourage this. It is to their selfish interest to have the people believe that the men who are in responsible positions in the Government are scoundrels and tyrants and are bound together in a heartless league to exploit and oppress the masses. "They are your enemies, and we are your saviors; hence it is a virtue that you hate and destroy them and love and promote us." Such has been the cry of the demagogue from ancient Greece until now; and history has yet to record where any man or group of men who rode into elective office on such a creed as that brought good and not evil.

It behooves us to remember, gentlemen, that every one of us who goes out to talk to the people on public matters has just now a serious responsibility. We may cultivate the spirit of peace and good will, the spirit of faith, hope, and charity; or we may add our little mite to bitterness and antagonism between factions, between sections, between political parties, between races, and between classes.

I have sat and looked over this House and thought of the possibilities. We 400 men may do eternal good if we go out and pitch our campaigns on a high plane; or we may do unspeakable harm, for which we become responsible, if we go into these campaigns with no higher ideal or ambition than to get reelected. Men from this House will speak within the next few months to practically every community in America. "What will the harvest be?"

"I believe, therefore have I spoken."

I trust I may be pardoned.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon another subject, legislation of interest to the West.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, regarding this bill most all of the argument so far has been predicated upon the theory that somebody is endeavoring to have the land office at Hugo, Colo., continued, that office having within the land district but 1,800 acres and costing 280 per cent to conduct. That has been the big talk before the committee and before the Congress by some who oppose this bill. I come to talk about another office in the State of Colorado, which is quite differently situated. In the first place, let me say not a single effort has been made in the Senate or in the House or anywhere else to continue the office at Hugo. Everyone who knows anything about it knows that Hugo and any office like it ought to be closed up. The other office in Colorado that I am about to speak of is at Del Norte, in the San Luis Valley. The San Luis Valley is an empire in and of itself. It is surrounded by mountains on all sides. There are six counties within it, some of them larger than Rhode Island or Delaware. It is very hard for some of our friends here to appreciate the distances and the circumstances under which these people do their work. Delaware has been mentioned a time or two. I want to say that the public lands in this land office district of Del Norte are greater in extent than the entire area of Delaware or Rhode Island. There are in the land office district of Nel Norte 492,709 acres of vacant public land. In addition to that there are 1,135,167 acres in the forest reserve. The distances from places in this district to the office they would be attached to if this office is closed up are greater than from here to New York City in accessibility. It would take the people of some sections in that district three days to go and come from the new land office with which they would have to do business.

The people of that district, of course, never heard about this proposition until it was settled by the Committee on Appropriations. Since then from every quarter come protests against the closing up of the office. It is a matter of convenience to the people rather than the holding of any one man in his job. The figures under which this office will be closed by the Appropriation Committee are made up of last year's records, which was a very dull year in many agricultural sections and especially in the West. Activity this year is much greater than last year. Already this year entries have been made at this office to the extent of 54,774 acres, and oil and gas permits have been made covering 13,040 acres. An irrigation district has been organized and $350,000 worth of bonds have been issued covering 14,000 acres of ground, most of it still pending proof. Twenty-eight thousand acres of land are now pending designation of stock-raising homesteads. The American Legion in every part of that district has been active in settling up that territory, and has been sending in resolutions urging that the office be maintained in order to bring ex-service men to that section of the country, where public lands may still be had.

The homesteader does not ride in Cadillacs and Packards and Pullman cars. He is a poor man, usually. He is the developer. Many times he does not reap the profit of his efforts. He is often without money or stock. He is the pioneer for the people who follow after him, and we ought to make it as easy as possible for him to develop the ground and perfect his title.

The cost of this little proposition in this bill does not exceed over about $40,000. By consolidating the register and the receiver in one person and reducing the expenses, it does not amount to very much. I honestly believe that if the offices are closed up, as legislation provides, the receipts will fall off more than the cost will be to the Government if this bill passes and these land offices continue to operate. The bill ought to be passed as it is written. [Applause.]

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE].

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], in his usual fair and scholarly way, has cleared away some of the smoke that seems to have accumulated around this bill. But he is not entirely right yet by any means, and I desire to clear away a little bit more. In the first place this is absolutely as clean a proposition as was ever presented in this House. Gentlemen get up here and talk about this being a "pork barrel bill." Here we in this very Congress have voted $20,000,000, without batting an eye, for the people in Russia, and now we are accused of endeavoring to pass a "pork barrel bill," because in providing necessary service for people who amply deserve it and who themselves pay the expense of it, it does provide for the salaries of a few officers, but the aggregate of those salaries does not amount to more than $40,000, the maximum salary being $3,000 and the minimum $500. It is perfectly absurd under the circumstances to talk about this being a "pork barrel bill."

We generally have the idea of a "pork barrel bill" as one where the expenditures of the Government are on a large scale and there is nothing returned. Who pays for these offices? Does Uncle Sam dig down in his pocket to pay for them? My friends, they are paid for by the poorest, the hardest working, the most miserably situated men in the world, those who ought to command our sympathy. They are paid for by the poor devils who are trying to make a home against incredible difficulties on the public lands, on the last agricultural lands which we have left. My friends, this bill is the last stand of the agricultural public lands of the United States. Some gentlemen say, "Well, there are no land offices in my district, I am against this bill," but this is not a question of whether you have a land office in your district. Gentlemen, I appeal to your sense of fairness.

The whole country, from east of the Alleghenies, was built up by enterprising people who moved to the public lands and established their homes there and anchored themselves on the soil, so much so that now there is very little agricultural land left in the country which is at the same time both good and cheap. Right in that connection let me call attention to the fact that this is a large part of the trouble with our population to-day. There is not inducement enough to take up new land and make it productive. There is not much of it left which is attractive to the poor man. We have had to increase our homestead preemption law from 160 acres to 320, and then to 640, because there is not much cheap land left of which less than a full section will support a family. Of course we have good land, but the good land is expensive land, or it costs a great deal of money to irrigate it. This economic land situation is really at the base of our immigration problem. Formerly we had lands which would attract the sturdy, steady, self-reliant agricultural immigrant, who would bring his family, establish himself on the soil, build his home there, and help develop the community and be a worthy part of it. With the passing in large measure of such opportunities for the agricultural immigrant we are now attracting mere laborers, who do not expect to bear permanent allegiance to the new country, who go into large industries and herd together in large cities, bringing with them discontent and revolution and fomenting industrial strife. Many of these people do not have the qualifications, even if they had the desire, to become Americans.

Now it is the main and primary purpose of land offices to help establish American people on the relatively small amount of cheap and at the same time possibly productive land which still remains, to make the poor man's land available for the poor man. Of course, a few officers are necessary in order to extend this assistance in order to do this work, but the salaries of those officers are paid entirely—not by general taxation with which you are so justly concerned—but by the poor little fees which the homesteaders pay for the service which is rendered to them.

And to-day you want to abolish the service and compel the man who can hardly afford to clothe his children to travel two or three hundred miles to a distant office in order to pay these little fees into the Treasury. Gentlemen, it is a most niggardly policy. Oh, economy, economy, how many crimes are committed in thy name! What can you possibly save to the Treasury of the United States by defeating this bill and abolishing the services of these offices? Why, obviously, all the Treasury will gain will be the salaries of the 10 or 12 officers, a maximum total of some thirty to thirty-six thousand dollars, plus the rent of the offices, a maximum of some $15,000 more. You'll take many times that amount out of the pockets of poor people who deserve and ought to have the active support of their Government, for they are doing a work which is vital to the future of the country.

Right to-day when you ride through some parts of eastern Colorado and western Kansas and Nebraska with a good dinner under your vest and a good cigar between your teeth you wonder as you view the country from the back platform of an observation car at the apparent barrenness of the land. You wonder how anybody can live there. And yet all the time splendid farms are being developed, though usually the original homesteader is not the one to reap the reward. He and perhaps several successors do the hard work which some day will mean a developed and productive farm for some one else.

Go out with me to some of those homesteads and talk to my brave friends who have started them. You will see people in the direst poverty. You will wonder how they can stick it out year after year, with the most meager returns, trying to live without money, without machinery, with very little live stock, fighting droughts and prairie dogs and grasshoppers. Sometimes you will see—I have seen—a man actually spading up a tract of land because he can not afford to plow or the team to pull it.

Until this good hour it has never been the policy of the Government to extract a profit from the pitiful labors of the homesteader. In more enlightened days we tried to induce people to go upon the land. But now, if the opposition to this bill should be effectual, we shall have sacrificed that policy in order that the homesteaders may pay a paltry $50,000 into the Treasury of the United States. I hope the day is far distant when Uncle Sam will be such a penny-pinching Shylock.

Pork! My friends, this bill is as free from pork as the cabin of a homesteader is free from the odor of fresh meat. He is lucky if he gets enough canned tomatoes to keep him alive. He ought to be paid a pension for building up a home and a farm against such adverse conditions. The most absurd charge ever presented to this House is to call this, of all bills, a "pork barrel bill."

Let me correct one or two slight errors which have been made on the floor. The gentleman from Michigan, including a number of land offices which are not in this bill, stated that the average amount of acreage in those land offices altogether was 25,000. The average amount of acres in the jurisdiction of the land offices included in this bill is 154,719.

Here are the figures:

	Acres.
Bellefourche	51,580
Waterville	65,563
Dickinson	60,771
Del Norte	492,709
Sterling	6,191
Clayton	66,136
Fort Sumner	655,450
Harrison	101,923
Camden	31,919
Alliance	14,950
Total (10 offices)	1,547,192

But these figures, large as they are, do not include the very great additional amount mentioned by the gentleman from Idaho when he was referring to the mistakes the committee had made. They do not include the forest lands, they do not include the Indian lands, and they do not include the entered lands. Merely the unentered public lands give an average of nearly 155,000 acres for each of these offices.

As to the argument that the law did not authorize the continuance of these land offices, all that needs be said is that we are legislating right now. That is what Congress is for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VAILE. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I think that in the time I have been in the Congress I have introduced two bills that have gone to the Committee on the Public Lands, and I am glad to say that both of those bills were favorably reported and eventually passed the Congress and became laws. The second one chanced to be during the present session. I attended the hearings upon it before that committee. I do not mean to say whether there was a quorum, and I did not feel that responsibility was upon me particularly. Everyone present seemed to think it was a very fine bill, and I agreed with them. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BENHAM] reported that bill to the House in a very fine report and a very laudatory report. I am sorry to hear from him to-day that he did not sincerely feel as enthusiastic as his report indicated. I certainly did not realize when I went before the Committee on the Public Lands and asked them to send out a very worthy measure, which only permitted the holder of land to make a little wider use of it than otherwise he could have made—as I said, I did not realize that pork-barrel principles had come to control that committee to such an extent that by securing a favorable report from that committee upon one of my bills I was not supposed thereafter at any time to oppose any bill from that committee. I think maybe if I had understood that there was to be a trade of that kind I would have given up my own little private bill. [Applause.] But I think Brother BENHAM, a splendid gentleman, only desired to have a little fun with me and wanted to bring about this little outburst.

Now, this bill originated in the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] said there were members of the subcommittee who felt that the surveyors general that were maintained through the West are useless, were an unnecessary expense. So Land Commissioner Tallman recommended during his administration. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] a year or two ago tried to get legislation abolishing them, a saving of somewhere from $40,000 to $100,000, and as chairman of the subcommittee I had in mind following up that example and doing what ought to be done, and if you will examine the hearings before the committee you will find that a great deal of attention was given to this subject.

But it developed in the course of things in the subcommittee that the committee did not all agree with my position in that, but that there was an opportunity for unanimous action of the subcommittee with reference to these land offices. Now, let us understand. I am going to submit that I do not know as much about land offices and public lands and their administration as you gentlemen from the West do. I think, on the other hand, you ought to give me credit for sincerity, and when I am charged with the care of one of the appropriation bills it is my duty to try to eliminate anything in that bill that the individuals who want the money can not justify. So I took up this with no prejudice toward the West, no prejudice against any of these delightful gentlemen who want these land offices continued in their districts. But on the face of the facts before us, the subcommittee unanimously believed that a number of these offices ought to be abolished in the interest of public economy, and that it could be done with no loss of efficiency. And on that subcommittee were two very able men from the West—the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] and the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH]—and I requested the gentleman from Idaho to make a study of the subject. He is a student. There is no man in the House that goes more thoroughly into things than does Mr. FRENCH, of Idaho. He made a thorough study of it. He finally sat down for half a day with the chief clerk of the Land Office, going over the matter with him, and then he went over the matter carefully by himself, and came to the subcommittee with his recommendation as to what ought to be done.

Now, I think that it is due to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], who comes from a State out there where I suppose some people think he ought to stand for any expenditure in his State or section whether it is necessary or not, that I am glad to say he is not that kind. He has some interest in the protection of the Treasury of the United States. But I said to Mr. FRENCH, after he got his report ready, that I think he did not cut deep enough, and I think so now because there are six or seven or eight other offices that have not been touched at all, that will be maintained next year in violation of the act of 1840, unless the Comptroller General takes notice of the situation. But Mr. FRENCH thought we ought not to be too harsh, and I felt it is hard to get through this House a bill abolishing offices even if you have a united committee back of it. So we all got back of the recommendation of the gentleman from Idaho. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] agrees with me that we ought to have gone a little deeper. But to agree with Mr. FRENCH, that was the practical thing to do. We did not take Congress by surprise. The language of the appropriation bill was plain.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN], who used to be at the head of a university, if I remember, could have understood plainly that we were going to put his office out of business. We were not putting any shenanigan in here. The bill originated in a conservative attempt, but when you abolish some offices and leave some others, there is going to be a shadow line as to whether some offices ought to go in or not. Maybe we have abolished one or two that ought to have been continued, as the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] has admitted. However that may be, we followed a general policy that the House ought to indorse, and it ought not to let one or two cases that are debatable carry through a bill that is to restore ten or a dozen that are absolutely indefensible.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. FESS. Is it true that there is no law for the continuance of these land offices?

Mr. CRAMTON. This is true; That as to 19 we abolished, 15 or 16 were maintained this current year in violation of the law and would be next year if this bill did not pass, even if we had not touched them in our bill.

Mr. FESS. Has that ever been called to the attention of the comptroller?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think not specifically; otherwise they would have been put out of business.

Mr. FESS. No doubt whatever, if there is no law for it, about their going out by his decision.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are five or six—Eureka, Calif., and several others—that if anyone spoke a word to the Comptroller General about, they will be going out of business. I hope this debate will be kept secret from the Comptroller General.

Some one has said that the figures for last year are not fair, because it was a dull year. The only available figures—the figures we have used—are the figures for the year ending June 30, 1921, and that was not such a dull year, if you please. Furthermore, the figures that I put in the RECORD as to the acreage of these several districts—those 15 or 16 that were maintained in violation of the law—see page 9190 of the RECORD, are the figures of a year ago, and any lands disposed of last year should be subtracted from those totals. So the present figures are even less than the ones we are using. One of the gentlemen has said that the average is not 25,000 acres in each of these districts but 150,000. The average in the districts that are being maintained in violation of the act of 1840 is about 25,000 acres. There are in our list three or four, including Del Norte, where there is a large acreage, but it is only mountain tops or deserts and there is nobody filing on the land, and they are not doing any business; and hence while it costs a lot of money to maintain the offices, there are no large receipts.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman refer to the record of the receipts? That shows it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am taking the figures of the Land Office.

Mr. VAILE. The Land Office figures show the receipts.

Mr. CRAMTON. I take the figures of the Land Office. The Land Office considered all these. They ought to know something about it, if I do not. They say that the only acreage to be considered is that which is open to entry, and that is a good, sensible decision.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. CRAMTON. Very briefly.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman from California stated that these offices paid themselves. What is the necessity for an appropriation then?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is in this way. The receipts for fees and the receipts for sale of the land go into the Federal Treasury, and then appropriation is made for maintenance of the offices. Some of these offices we are debating about to-day do take care of themselves, although there are half a dozen of them here that do not bring in enough receipts to take care of themselves. There are several of them, as I have heretofore referred to, where the expenses are 112, 128, 118, and 184 per cent of the receipts, but even as to those where the receipts are more than the cost of the office let me call your attention to this, that we of the Nation in administering the national domain are entitled, and inasmuch as we are selling and leasing the land where we are getting large resources from oil leases, and so forth, to have that land service self-maintained, but it costs $1,500,000 every year out of the Federal Treasury to maintain the land service. Why? The receipts are enough, notwithstanding that we maintain all of these useless offices, but the money goes into the Reclamation Service, the money that comes from the sale of land and from leases, to such an extent that we spend about a million and a half a year to carry on the land service more than goes into the Treasury.

And then Members here say we are "trying to rape the West." Why, we are not only letting them have this money to go into the Reclamation Service to such an extent that we have to draw on the Treasury to carry on the land service, but in addition to that, when it goes into the Reclamation Service, we loan it to them for 20 years at 5 per cent per annum, and then make a present to them of the principal. That is all they have to pay, and then if they can not pay their annual installments, as they did this year, we give them extensions time and time again. I think the western Members do not want to come in here and talk about the House being so severe on the homesteader and so severe on the development of the West.

The gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON], who is well informed, asked an illuminating question in the Public Lands Committee hearings. They object because we consider only the lands subject to entry. They say we ought to consider other lands. The gentleman from Utah said this:

> The only particular advantage of having a land office locally is in the matter of entry, is it not, so that plats may be examined? After the land is once entered there is no particular advantage in having a land office, is there?

Why, the gentleman from South Dakota, even with all that we are doing to him, when he gets through with the bill, even in the way it stands now in the law, will have only 212,000 acres subject to entry in his State. The acreage is now probably cut down to 200,000 acres, I suppose, and we have left him two land offices to take care of 200,000 acres of land.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I realize that I have not been able to present this matter in all the detail that the House may have desired, but the big point at issue is whether the economy that we are proposing, the economy that we are trying to hold in the law, is going to interfere with the service, the proper service. Manifestly we can not have a land office at an expense of $1,000 or $2,000 a year next to every available site for a homestead. Nobody, even from Colorado, where they have more land offices than any other State in the country, would urge anything like that. On the other hand, we ought to have enough land offices to give the public reasonable service.

Now, the law has fixed certain tests. Those tests have existed for a long time. They were not fixed by me or by any other man from the East. They are tests representing the sense of Congress. One of them is that when there is only 100,000 acres of land in a district, that land office should be closed. That act was enacted in 1840, when they did not have Cadillac automobiles, and methods of travel were everywhere slow. There was also the test that when the expenditures of conducting a certain office amount to over one-third of the receipts, that office may be closed in the discretion of the department.

There was the yardstick, the measure laid down. Now, there is one other test. Let us test the matter here by comparison as to what is a reasonable service. I want to refer again to the State of Arizona. If you will look at the report you will see that Arizona has only one land office. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is in the Chamber, and he will correct me if I am wrong. Arizona has only one land office within its boundaries. There is no pressing demand from homesteaders or would-be homesteaders for any more. Arizona has over 16,000,000 acres of land available for entry. They entered last year—1921—in the State of Arizona more acres of land than any other State in the country—over 1,400,000 acres. So that it is apparent they are doing some business down there in public lands, and they have a good land office, and they are not suffering at all.

Mr. MADDEN. But these gentlemen say mountains must be crossed in the other States. Are there mountains in Arizona?

Mr. CRAMTON. I would not say anything derogatory to Arizona. I understand there are mountains in Arizona. I understand the homesteaders are no richer there than they are anywhere else. But when they go to the receiver's office they want to see there a man of capacity, who can decide an important question aright, and not somebody who is just loafing around on a sinecure, who can not decide the question aright, but must communicate with Washington for advice, or have his decision overruled.

Mr. MADDEN. The creation of these land offices is mostly a matter of patronage, is it not?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; they are political appointments. Most of these registers and receivers have had no previous experience and must let the clerks do the work.

An illustration of the kind of service you get at land offices is afforded by the office at Waterville, Wash., where, year after year, they reported to the General Land Office that they had less than 100,000 acres of land. When we proposed closing the office, they worked the matter up and then they claimed over 300,000 acres. What kind of inefficiency is that on the part of a register of a land office who will repeatedly underestimate, ten times, the amount of land that is under his jurisdiction? That is the kind of inefficiency I refer to. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. That is, outside of this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the five minutes alloted to me gives me but a poor opportunity to present this question fairly to the House. The committee heard all parties fully. They heard the members of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman having it in charge, the RECORD shows, claimed, as I understand it now, that these offices ought to be maintained. The committee up to this day has never been given an opportunity to find out who is the originator of this scheme to abolish these offices and deprive the people in these districts of a proper court in which their cases may be presented. It was denied the committee. The long history of facts presented here is not borne out either by the law or the facts. I am for this bill as reported by the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back three minutes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has six minutes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I will take this time merely for the purpose of endeavoring to remove the fallacy which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has been indulging in during the debate upon this bill. How shall we estimate the 100,000 acres which mark the line of demarcation between the further existence of a land office and its mandatory abolition under section 2248, Revised Statutes? It is the position of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] that the Indian lands shall not be counted in estimating the 100,000 acres. It is his position that when lands are once entered then they are to be subtracted from the 100,000 acres.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. For a question.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is not my position the same as that of the Land Office?

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman's position is the same as that of the Land Office, and he was led into that error by the Land Office, and he is excusable for indulging in that error. I wish to cite some cases on the meaning of the words "public lands."

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield for one more question, if it should prove that I am wrong and that the Land Office is wrong, and a court should construe that law differently, then the provision in the appropriation act would be a nullity so far as any offices removed by that holding were concerned.

Mr. SINNOTT. Except that you have not provided a large enough appropriation to take care of those land offices under this theory—

> You take my house when you do take the prop by which it is sustained.

And in this case the prop is the appropriation.

Mr. MADDEN. That is the whole story, the appropriation. That is what they are fighting for.

Mr. SINNOTT. The first case that was decided was United States v. Blendaur (128 Fed. Rep. 910). In this case the court holds that Indian land, similar to the land that we are considering to-day, should be considered public land. Here is what they say about it:

> The words "public lands" are not always used in the same sense. Their true meaning and effect are to be determined by the context in which they are used, and it is the duty of the court not to give such a meaning to the words as would destroy the object and purpose of the law or lead to absurd results.

Then they go on citing a case:

> There is no statutory definition of the words "public lands," and the meaning may vary somewhat in different statutes passed for different purposes, and they should be given such meaning as comports with the intention of Congress in their use.

Now, applying that interpretation to this statute 2248, is it not reasonable to say that public land, the title to which has not passed from the Federal Government and which the entryman must live upon for three or five years, supervised by the registrar and receiver and under his jurisdiction, should be considered public land?

The next case is an Indian case, in 225 United States, page 583. I will have time to read merely from the syllabus, but the syllabus is supported by the text of the decision.

> While the phrase "public lands" is a term ordinarily used to designate lands subject to sale under general laws, it is sometimes used in a larger sense. As used in section 2 of the act of July, 1862, it includes lands within Indian reservations. Congress so intended and such has been the construction placed upon the words by the Interior Department.

Then we have another very late decision in the case of Nadeau v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. (253 U. S., p. 444).

The court says:

> Lands in the Delaware Diminished Indian Reservation were declared to be public lands within the intendment of the right-of-way clause, act of 1862, although then actually occupied by individual members of the tribe under assignments executed under the treaty.
> That case renders clear the definite purpose of Congress to treat Indian reservations subject to its control as public lands within the right-of-way provision.

Then we have the case of United States v. Minidoka & S. W. R. Co. (190 Fed. Rep., p. 491), a decision of the circuit court of appeals, holding that lands although entered upon by homestead settlers should be classified as public lands within the meaning of a right-of-way act through "public lands."

Applying these constructions and interpretations of the courts, there is not a land office that the House bill proposes to reestablish but what has a great many thousand acres more than the required 100,000 acres. Furthermore, we do not propose to reestablish in the House bill a solitary land office that is not more than paying its expenses, except one land office, and that is Dickinson, in North Dakota. But we abolish two other land offices in North Dakota—Williston and Minot. They may be consolidated with the Dickinson or some other office, and doubtless the consolidated office will easily pay much more than the running expenses. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MANN). The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That the land offices now located, respectively, at Bellefourche, Timber Lake, and Lemmon in the State of South Dakota, Waterville in the State of Washington, Williston, Minot, and Dickinson in the State of North Dakota, Del Norte in the State of Colorado, Clayton and Fort Sumner in the State of New Mexico, Harrison and Camden in the State of Arkansas, Alliance and Broken Bow in the State of Nebraska, and Springfield in the State of Missouri, are hereby continued for and during the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1922, and thereafter, in the discretion of the President, as long as the public business at such offices shall warrant: Provided, however, That the President may consolidate the offices of register and receiver in any of said offices whenever he may deem it in the public interest.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "Bellefourche," strike out "Timber Lake and Lemmon."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment. I want to make just one observation. I know that the membership of this House are so fair that they are ready and willing to act upon the matter as it really exists, without any camouflage and without a great statement that we are for retrenchment and reform and that we are economizing for the benefit of the people. You know that sounds good, but when there is nothing in it, it does not amount to much. The two legal features involved in this question have not been properly stated, and I will leave it to the fair judgment of any Member of the House. It involves the two sections in regard to the abolition of the office. I want to read to the committee section 2250 of the Revised Statutes:

Whenever the cost of collecting the revenue from the sale of the public lands in any district is as much as one-third of the volume of the whole amount of revenue collected in such district it may be lawful for the President, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest—

It has been determined by the Land Office in every case presented here—the report is on file—that the Secretary of the Interior says it is incompatible with the public interest to abandon these offices. So the statement made that these offices must be abandoned because the cost is more than 33⅓ per cent goes without saying that it has no foundation.

Now, on the second proposition I know the committee wants to be fair.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman has not understood the committee to say that the provision for closing the offices was on account of the cost being more than 33⅓ per cent, that that was mandatory?

Mr. RAKER. I understood the gentleman to so state in his answer to a question by the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. CRAMTON. That was with reference to the provision of 100,000 acres.

Mr. RAKER. Now, section 3872 reads "whenever the quantity of public lands remaining unsold." Now, in addition to what the gentleman from Oregon said, in every one of these cases it runs from one hundred to a million and a half, and in some cases 3,000,000, acres of land in the district that is unsold. I want to call attention to the fact that much of this land is open and subject to homestead entry, and further that land withdrawn from forest protection is open to homestead entry. Therefore, in the Del Norte case there were more than a million and a half acres of land in the forest reserve, and under the law it is open to homestead entry, notwithstanding the fact that it is forest reserve land. In one case there was over 150,000 acres involved in the homestead lands and other claims that had not been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. So you have the lands that are filed upon and not sold because of the fact that the Government has not issued its patents. In some of these cases it runs up from 50,000 to 150,000 acres; you have in the forest reserve from 100,000 to 3,000,000 acres of land unsold and on which homestead entries can be made, and yet you say that under section 2248 the commissioner can abolish the land office. He can not do it, because the law does not authorize it.

These men are within their rights. The facts presented to the committee show that in each instance the department reported favorably on the legislation. Men appeared before the committee and showed the necessity of the land office in these districts so that the people might be able to do their work, and instead of abolishing the office you make them go 100 or 500 miles farther, costing them $50 or $150 to do the work. This office was established originally and kept and maintained solely and entirely by reason of the fact that it was necessary for these people to do their work. It was established so that they might file on their lands, dispose of contests, save their money for building up the home instead of paying it for traveling 100 or 150 miles—in some cases 500 miles. Is that what you call pork-barrel legislation? I want to say that this is an illustration, or demonstration, with all due respect to my lovable, good friend from Michigan, one of the members of the great Appropriations Committee, which not only put on a rider but gave these men no opportunity to present their cases, and they passed it through the House. He comes here as a special counsel, a member of the great Committee on Appropriations, and says, "I am their special counsel. Whenever we have spoken our word is final law. No man shall have a hearing; no man shall have a right to present his case, and if the whole House differs with him, you are wrong, because the Committee on Appropriations have said so."

I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman of the committee, that the record shows that not a word of evidence was taken, no hearing was had to determine whether the land offices were necessary or not by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is it not a fact that in the Committee on Public Lands the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] said, "I think some have overlooked the fact that that legislation is on the book, and all the Appropriations Committee has done is to put the legislation that is on the books into effect." And did not the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BENHAM] in the same committee say, "If one committee year after year has failed to do its duty, does it not give another committee, who can assume jurisdiction, at least an excuse for doing what the other committee has failed to do?"

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] had not gotten all the facts; we had just started in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, if this was a matter of good fellowship only it would be easy for us to agree, but this is a matter affecting the Treasury of the United States, and we have, after careful consideration and consultation with the men whose districts were affected in the House, decided that the economy included in the appropriation for the Interior Department was not only essential but necessary. Nobody complained; everybody agreed. This bill went through the Senate.

Mr. SINNOTT. Who is the gentleman quoting when he said everybody agreed?

Mr. MADDEN. The bill went to the Senate, and the Senate had notice and knew that economy was the object. They knew that the land offices existed, and they knew that we proposed to close them up.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does not want to leave the impression which he has made. He said he consulted the gentlemen who are interested and that they agreed. The gentleman is very much in error in that statement.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not in error.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman did not consult me.

Mr. MADDEN. It may be that we did not talk to everybody, but I said in the public-land States.

Mr. WINGO. But my State is a public-land State.

Mr. MADDEN. I know, but not generally recognized as a public-land State.

Mr. WINGO. That is the trouble. The gentleman does not know about the matter evidently.

Mr. MADDEN. I do. I know as much about it as the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman's statement shows that he does not.

Mr. MADDEN. I know what I am talking about, and the gentleman is unfair.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is unfair when he made the deliberate false statement that he consulted me.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not say that I consulted the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, yes; you did.

Mr. MADDEN. I said the men who were interested in this matter had been consulted. I say so now. They agreed, and we abolished the offices, because they ought not to exist, and I say now that the only reason why they are proposed to be restored, except in one or two cases, is because of a matter of patronage. That is what I say, and I will prove it. There was no question about the right to abolish these places until notice went out to the men who occupied the positions, and when they found that they were going to be discharged on the 1st of July then the reform that was inaugurated upon the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations must be reconsidered, forsooth, and so we have a bill before us for the reconsideration of the action taken by both the House and the Senate.

The bill which abolished these offices was not surreptitiously passed. It was passed after careful and deliberate consideration. Everyone had notice. The bill was here under discussion for several days, and the economy that ought to have been made was made, and I am here to say now that the bill that is before the House ought not to pass. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. How much will these 10 offices cost us during the next fiscal year?

Mr. MADDEN. One hundred and twenty-eight thousand dollars.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Where does the gentleman get those figures?

Mr. MADDEN. That is what we save at the offices that we abolish.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. That is an entirely different matter. About thirty or forty thousand dollars at the outside is the most that it will cost.

Mr. MADDEN. There are only four out of the whole lot for which any justification can be made, and in the face of the facts presented to the Committee on Appropriations when this section was under consideration those were not entitled to any consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The total expense as shown by the last report of the General Land Office of the operation of these offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, was $80,407.76.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who has just left the floor, made the statement that the Members from the various States who had land offices were consulted; that they consented to the abolition of these offices. There were four offices abolished in my district, and I did not consent to the abolition of more than one of them, and that was the Gregory office, and I was given to understand that that was the only office that would be affected by the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman did have some notice that the question was under consideration?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes; I did have some notice, but understood from what the committee member told me that the Gregory office would be the only office affected by the bill then under consideration.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. As a matter of fact, about being consulted, the gentleman was practically told that that was what the bill was doing.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That was my understanding from what they told me.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Did the gentleman have any notice or knowledge of the interpretation that the committee or the department was placing upon the words "public lands"?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Absolutely none whatever, and I do not think the committee put that interpretation upon them at that time.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that one of the subcommittee admitted before the Committee on Public Lands—oh, but the gentleman is not a member of the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. No.

Mr. RAKER. Then I withdraw the question.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I would like to talk a little about these offices. Take the office of Lemmon, that has been eliminated by the House committee.

This office has now over 255,000 acres of unpatented land, or did have at the last report. There were 196 contests filed last year that had to be tried. There are 14 now pending. There are 3 oil wells going down within the Lemmon district. There are 150,000 acres of mineral land within that land district and oil filings covering 12,000 acres were made in the district in the month of May alone, and yet the opponents of this bill say there is no need of that office. One gentleman said upon the floor, the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. CRAMTON], that the people themselves were not demanding this office. Here are petitions signed by 915 people praying for the reinstatement of one of these offices alone, besides scores of telegrams and letters which show they want them reinstated. It has been repeatedly said in this House that the saving by abolishing these offices would be $128,000, whereas the total expense of the operation for 1921 was only $80,000, and you could not by any means save more than 50 per cent, so any saving could not possibly exceed $40,000. There will be no such saving as has been stated. The Timber Lake office has over 175,000 acres of unpatented land, to which I have already called the attention of the committee. Besides this, it has over 400,000 acres of land upon which proof has been offered where issuance of patents is held up on account of the inability of the settlers to make their payments. In all fairness both this office and Lemmon should be retained. I hope the committee will vote down the amendment striking these offices from the bill.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized as a member of the committee in support of the amendment, as no one has spoken in favor of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is entitled to preference.

Mr. SINNOTT. I will give way to the gentleman from Arkansas with the understanding that I am to be recognized in support of the committee amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, of course anyone has the right to differ on a proposition, but the thing I protest against is leaving Members, who are absent necessarily, in an attitude of having agreed to the abolishing of a land office in their district when I happen to know that they did not. It is not necessary for those fighting this bill to put Members of Congress in that embarrassing attitude. It is unfair to do it; it is not right to do it. Of course, gentlemen can say Arkansas is not a public-land State. Of course, men can say that because it is not a wealthy State, but I know more about that State than those gentlemen, and I deny it. The public records show that in spite of the peculiar definition of the words "public lands" here, that in the time I have been in Congress a little over a million acres have been taken out of the forest reserves, with the Forest Service fighting it, and classed as agricultural land and thrown open to homestead entry. And there is lying this other great domain, the greater part of which can be made into successful and happy agricultural homes and can be thrown open to agricultural entry.

Any man who knows anything about the situation in one of the land offices in my State—the men who hold the positions do not appeal to me, they are Republican appointees—I am speaking of only the men who are interested, the possible homesteader. It will not cost the Government one single red penny if a man is honest and fair and will tell the facts as they are. That is all there is to it. You can retain—if the other offices are like those I am familiar with—you can retain them without costing you anything. The thing that controls me is public convenience, not the officeholders—why they have two Republican officeholders there, and do you suppose I would be asking that they be retained? That is not it. It is on behalf of the homesteader, the people who are filing or may file on lands. In one district of a gentleman who is absent, and who I know did not agree to the office being abolished, there is a great development of oil fields, a feverish activity not alone in what technically might be termed public lands, but the great mass in the forest that might become subject to homestead entry if properly classed. If a Democrat speaks for the benefit of those people is he to be charged with great ado with trying to save offices for two Republican officeholders? Why, gentlemen, it is absurd. Keep within the bounds of reason and fairness if you want to oppose the bill. You can ride roughshod over us, but if this is your idea of economy that is all right, but be fair about it.

Do not accuse Democrats of having agreed to something they did not agree to, and then in the next breath try to accuse them of saving Republican officers, and then——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman understands that the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee was not particularly aiming at the Democratic Members of the State of Arkansas but at the Republican Members of other States.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman said that two of these officers were in Arkansas, and when I called his attention to it he showed as much passion as a younger man would.

Mr. SINNOTT. As nothing has been said in favor of the committee amendment in striking out Timber Lake and Lemmon, I would like to say a word. The Senate bill restored Lemmon and Timber Lake, in South Dakota. The House committee, after consideration of this matter, struck out Timber Lake and Lemmon and left the one office of Bellefourche. We struck out Timber Lake and Lemmon, in the State of South Dakota, for the reason, according to the strictest interpretation of the words "public lands," Timber Lake had something over 4,000 acres, and Lemmon, in the State of South Dakota, had 15,000 acres, and we thought the consolidation of those two offices with Bellefourche would give some reasonable consideration to the State. Furthermore, we felt to load this bill would kill it; and that is the reason the committee struck out Timber Lake and Lemmon, and I hope the House will uphold it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 5.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 5 and 6, strike out "Williston, Minot, and."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call to the attention of the House that Minot had 6,000 acres in the whole district and Williston 20,267 acres. And I want to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that the gentleman from Oregon and those who worked with him in the Public Lands Committee and tried to keep this bill down somewhat, find that however small the acreage and worthless the office, the gentleman representing that district is going to stand up here and demand a division, and when they get into conference with the Senate there is somebody going to stand up there for these offices in regular pork-barrel style.

In answer to the gentleman who said that we did not save $128,000 by these reductions, your subcommittee took estimates by the Land Office for the maintenance of the Land Office and for contingent expenses, and then after going over this matter in consultation with the Chief Clerk of the Land Office made a cut of $128,000 from the amount used for the current year for that purpose, on the understanding that these offices would be taken out, and there could be a saving of $128,000 unless the House sees fit to upset it.

There is a legal question involved here. And I will insert in my remarks a few lines here, if there is no objection. The Land Office—see hearings, page 63—points out that it is their holding that the words "lands unsold" mean the land that is now open to entry, and "public-land area must therefore be considered to be actually vacant, unappropriated public land." That is the holding of the Land Office.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is familiar with the statutes in the Forest Service, and that there is a statute authorizing homesteading?

Mr. CRAMTON. Let us leave the law to the Land Office, because I am too much of an easterner to be supposed to know public land law. It may be they are wrong, as the gentleman from Oregon insists. If so, there must be some way of getting into court; and once you get into court, if the court makes a different construction, the language in the appropriation bill will be construed accordingly. If the 100,000 acres means something different from what we contend, then that different construction will obtain as to the appropriation bill and these gentlemen are not hurt at all and they will not need this bill. But if we are correct—and I still think the Land Office is correct—the passage of this bill will mean a deficiency appropriation to take care of the offices provided for in this bill.

I hope this amendment, and any amendment that will tend to keep them down, will carry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate No. 7 to the bill (H. R. 11450) to provide for the printing and distribution of the Supreme Court Reports and amending sections 225, 226, 227, and 228 of the Judicial Code; that the Senate had receded from its amendment No. 11 to said bill.

REINSTATEMENT OF CERTAIN LAND OFFICES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SINNOTT. Replying to the gentleman from Michigan, here is the argument of the Interior Department:

Lands which have been appropriated but the title to which has not not yet passed from the United States to the entryman we have not considered "unsold," since the situation with respect to such lands is analogous to private land covered by an option to purchase.

Applying that reason to the statute in question, would any landowner who gave a thousand options such as the Government has given to a thousand individuals in these land filings take his private agent away from the community? No. He would want to leave that private agent in that community so that he could look after his land and collect the installments due from time to time. And that is the reason for the Government having these local land offices, so that they can oversee and superintend the administration of the law regarding the entries.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman would not say it was not a sale. If I sold you a house and you paid only 25 per cent on it, you would not say that you had not bought it?

Mr. SINNOTT. I would say that, according to the provision in section 2248 of the Revised Statutes, that that land is not sold land of the United States until the title passes from the United States. Otherwise you may have several million acres of unperfected land entries in a State and not a land office to care for them.

I hope the committee amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes none.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 6 and 7, after the words "Del Norte," insert "and Sterling."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, if there is an unjustifiable thing in the bill it is this amendment. Here is a case where they are putting in a new office where there is only 6,100 acres of land in the district. If anybody can justify that I would like to have him try it.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I would like to justify it if I have opportunity.

Mr. MADDEN. I will give the gentleman an opportunity after I get through characterizing it.

Here is an opportunity for economy by leaving out this amendment. This amendment is put into the bill by the Committee on Public Lands at the request of a single Member of the House without any justification whatever, and it is as much justified as most of the other cases in the bill.

We have reached the stage where we ought, at least for a moment occasionally, to consider the public interest and not the interest of the individual anywhere. Here is a case that can not be justified on any terms whatever. Sixty-one hundred acres of land in a district, and they want a public land office and all the attendant expenses that it carries with it! And what for? Can it be for any other purpose than to give patronage to some man who wants a job? Surely the people who live within an area containing only 6,100 acres can travel beyond the boundary of that 6,100 acres to another land office if they have business with a land office.

But the Public Treasury must meet the cost and accommodate the local interests. Does anybody who advocates that sort of legislation ever think of the Public Treasury? Do they ever coordinate the great problems that must be confronted by the American people, all of which must be paid out of the pockets of the taxpayers?

It will not do to say that we live in a mountain territory; that our people can not travel beyond certain lines; that the distance is too far, the travel too hard, the facilities not adequate. We must consider the Nation once in a while. I do not ask that it be considered always, but in some cases such as this no one ever stops to consider the Nation. Those who do and who stand upon the floor of the House advocating the Nation's rights generally meet with scorn for their efforts. I protest against this sort of legislation, and I protest vigorously against the incorporation of this amendment in the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], has made some very extravagant statements with reference to this amendment which has been offered by the Committee on the Public Lands in the House regarding this bill, and that is the inclusion of Sterling, Colo., land office as one that in the judgment of the committee, when the rights of the citizens there are considered, would not be justified in being continued for at least another year.

The gentleman from Illinois says that there are only 6,100 acres of land there. It is true that there are only 6,100 acres of unentered land, but those of you who were here and heard the decision read by the chairman of the committee [Mr. SINNOTT] regarding the opinion held by the court as to the provision in section 2240 of the Revised Statutes, which provided for the discontinuance of a land office where there were less than 100,000 acres, will understand that that was you should include those lands that were unsold.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes. I yield.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman tell us how many land offices there are in Colorado, or will be in Colorado, if this does not go in?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I want to tell the committee that there is not another land office in my district other than the Sterling office, Hugo being discontinued without objection.

Mr. MADDEN. How many are there in the State? Are there not seven or eight?

Mr. FRENCH. There are 10, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. That does not alter the situation down in the district which is under consideration. That district is composed of eight large counties. The distance to travel to the land office to which the business of this office will be assigned is more than 250 miles. There are 600 unperfected homestead entries in that locality. Most of them are held by ex-service men who have not been able to make their final proof, and we are simply asking that this be continued for one year. With the consolidation of the office of registrar and receiver it will not cost the Government of the United States one dollar, for the fees paid into the office will more than twice pay the expenses of administration.

Mr. TINCHER. As I understand it, there are 96,000 acres of land to which titles have not been perfected.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. There are over 200,000 acres the title to which has not passed from the Government.

Mr. TINCHER. Then, these men have business with the land office?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. They surely have, and they have the right to transact their business with a land office within reasonable distance.

Mr. MADDEN. In the State of Arizona there are 16,000,000 acres of public land, and there is only one land office in that State, and nobody is complaining there.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I am not able to discuss the Arizona situation. I am not acquainted with it, but I was receiver of this land office for 17 years. I was a homesteader myself. I know the hardships it would entail upon these 600 unperfected homestead entries, entrymen, and women and those which will follow in taking up the additional unoccupied land. I know that they are entitled to the service which the local office will give them, and that to deprive them would do them a great injustice.

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] stated that Arizona has only one land office and that there are 16,000,000 acres of public land in that State. Is it not true that about 15,500,000 acres of that land are desert and mountain land that can not be entered?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I could not state about that.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. With reference to this office I think it would be of interest to the committee to know that on page 41 of the hearings the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] estimated that the receipts of this office next year will be around $8,500 or $9,000. The expenses for the last fiscal year, 1921, were something over $10,000, and we have here a very good illustration of the way these little offices are conducted. On page 42 of the hearings the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] said—

> I was there last September and they had two clerks. I told the register, whom I knew very well, and he was a conscientious fellow. I said, "Is there need of your having two clerks." He said, "Do not mention it; it is awfully nice, but we could do the work." And he recalled the fact that when I was there the register and receiver did work amounting to more than twice the receipts of the office at that time and had no clerk.

That is the way these things go up, and your committee are simply trying to shut up that kind of an office.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I want to say that for the year in which the gentleman said the expenses were $10,000 the income was more than $13,000, and there was an actual revenue turned in to the Government of $2,268.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; the expenses were over 80 per cent of the receipts.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the House that this is the only land office that the Committee on the Public Lands of the House added to the Senate bill. In addition to what the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] has stated regarding the number of unperfected entries, I may say that last year there were 728 new entries in this land office. I hope the committee amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to get a little information from one of these two gentlemen. This office took in $13,000 in receipts which indicates that they did some business.

Mr. SINNOTT. Certainly it does.

Mr. FRENCH. May I interrupt. The expenses in conducting the business was $10,802.

Mr. MANN. I was coming to that. If the office took in $13,000, it indicates that there was some business. Now, the expenses of the office are dependent very largely on the allowance made by the department here. If the expenses are too great, why do they not cut them down. If there was no occasion for so many employees in the office, why do they not cut them off. And if they do business by which they take in $13,000, to me that indicates that they are doing some business. If they require an expenditure of $10,800 to do that, it may be legitimate or it may be improper, I do not know, for no explanation has been made of that.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Briefly.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Under the provisions in the bill the office of register and receiver are recommended for consolidation. The expenses of last year were unjustifiable, in my opinion, and should have been corrected. There was a wasteful expenditure in having too many clerks. I have done the business when there was much more than there is now and we had no clerks. They had two clerks. That was the fault of somebody, but the people of the district who are to be benefited by this office should not suffer from the faults of others.

Mr. MANN. It occurred to me that instead of the department recommending the office be abolished when it does a considerable amount of business, that it had better reduce the expenditures of the office and cut it down to a reasonable amount. In that case I think my friend from Michigan would not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, I regret to take up the time of the committee at this late hour, but I do think it is rather important that we should all understand just what the situation is. I sympathize with the view of the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I want to cooperate with them, and I have cooperated with them in the reduction of expenditures. They have both done perfectly wonderful work along these lines. [Applause.] They are entitled to a great deal of credit for the work that they have done.

Let us see what the situation is in regard to the land offices. How much do we save by abolishing a land office? Well, we save the rent, which may be from $50 to $100 a month—I think never more than $100 in these country towns—let us put it at $100. That is $1,200. Then you save the light and fuel. It may be that in those items you save $300 more. That makes $1,500, and that is all we save to a certainty when we abolish a land office. You may save something more, but there is no certainty that we save another penny. One thing is sure, that if there are, say, 100 homesteaders in the district who must make final proof on their land we put them to an expense not of a few hundred dollars but many thousands of dollars when we compel them to go very long distances to reach a land office. Remember these officers are all paid out of fees, and wherever the proof of entry is made somebody gets the fee. If these offices were abolished, the clerk of the court in the county or the United States commissioner in the county would accept the filing and hear the proof. The contest must be tried at the land office, and that means compelling the poor contestant to go long distances. As far as the other matters are concerned, some other officer does the work and receives the fee. It is said that they have been employing more clerks than they should. I am inclined to think that there has been no great extravagance along that line. I doubt if there has been much.

Thirteen thousand dollars' worth of business in a land office means that the register and receiver have been busy. There are hundreds of thousands of acres on which proof must be made. They are the people who hear this proof, and if they do not some one else must. It is very much better for the Government to have the proof made before its own sworn officer rather than to have the proof made before a clerk of the court, who can not be expected to have the interest in the matter or the information in the matter that the land officer has, or before a United States commissioner, to whom the duty of taking final proof is purely incidental.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. And the fee that will be charged by this clerk of a court of record or the commissioner would be an additional cost upon the entryman making final proof over that which he would have to pay if he appeared at the local office.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SINNOTT) there were—ayes 52, noes 50.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "Alliance," strike out the words "and Broken Bow."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "Nebraska," strike out the words "and Springfield in the State of Missouri."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the section which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENCH: Page 1, line 3, strike out all of section 1 and in lieu thereof insert:

"That the land offices now located, respectively, at Bellefourche, in the State of South Dakota; Waterville, in the State of Washington; Del Norte, in the State of Colorado; and Alliance, in the State of Nebraska, are hereby continued for and during the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1922, and that the offices of register and receiver shall on said date be consolidated into one office.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment. It is really a substitute for the language reported by the committee and the bill which is already before the House and which has been agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take the time of the committee in discussing this amendment at length. What it does is to provide for the maintenance of the four land offices to which I referred in the course of the general debate, where I think the evidence is such that we can well continue the office for another year. As regards the other five offices, I am of opinion that nothing has been presented to the committee that would justify continuation of those land offices. I hope that the amendment that I have offered will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAMTON) there were—yeas 56, nays 53.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Seventeen Members—not a sufficient number—and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the land office now located at Durango, Colo., is also hereby continued for and during said fiscal year, but the provisions of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1922, shall not apply to the said land office in so far as they relate to the consolidation of the offices of register and receiver of such land offices.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the committee has just adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH]. Suppose the House votes against his amendment, then will the amendments adopted by the committee heretofore, wherein they strike out certain items, stand, and the bill pass in that way?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be inappropriate for the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to pass on a matter that will have to be decided by the Speaker of the House.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I have the right to offer a perfecting amendment to section 2, have I not?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; the gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VAILE: Page 2, line 5, strike out the word "office" and substitute in lieu thereof the word "offices," and after the word "Durango" insert the words "and Montrose"; and in line 6 strike out the word "is" and substitute in lieu thereof the word "are"; and in line 11 strike out the word "office" and substitute in lieu thereof the word "offices," so that said section shall read:

"SEC. 2. That the land offices now located at Durango and Montrose, Colo., are also hereby continued for and during said fiscal year, but the provisions of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes,' approved May 25, 1922, shall not apply to the said land offices in so far as they relate to the consolidation of the offices of register and receiver of such land offices."

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I want to call to the attention of the Members the fact that the land offices at Durango and Montrose are both large offices. At Durango there are some 475,000 acres of public lands, and much of it is agricultural lands which might yet be taken. This is in the extreme southwest corner of the State, a rather inaccessible part of the State but a part which at the same time we believe in the near future will fill up with settlers. It seems to me that the register and receiver should not be consolidated at that point, at least yet, in view of the probable early influx of settlers. As for Montrose, the office serves seven counties, and they have an enormous amount—2,370,000 acres—of unappropriated public land. I do not think the register and receiver should be consolidated there as yet. These offices are both slightly above the 33 per cent of ratio of expense to revenue, but the revenues are very greatly in excess of the total expenses. They are very important offices, serving large communities where there is yet suitable agricultural land. These offices are not overmanned now. The registers and receivers at both places are capable and experienced men, and they have all they can do. Each of these offices, in addition to other public lands, serves large areas of Indian lands and of forest lands. The service will be greatly curtailed by consolidating the offices of register and receiver, and for at least a year both these officers should be retained.

At Montrose, with its enormous quantity of land, more than all the other offices in this bill combined, the ratio of expenses to receipts is very little over the maximum which makes it discretionary, not mandatory, to consolidate the offices, that ratio being only 38.6 per cent.

I submit herewith the figures for both offices and urge that the register and receiver be retained at each place, in accordance with the amendment which I have offered:

Montrose land office for the year 1921.

Total earnings	$36,853
Indian land receipts	8,596
Net earnings	28,257
Expenses	11,084
Commissions from sales of Indian lands	172
	10,912
Ratio—per cent	38.6
Acres of unappropriated public land	2,370,351

Durango land office for the year 1921.

Receipts	$20,272.30
Expenses	$8,691.46
Acres	474,457
Additional receipts, Indian lands	$10,320.19

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard in opposition to the amendment. The Montrose office is something new. It was not submitted to the committee when the bill was being considered. We think that section 2 should be stricken out, for the reason that the receipts at Durango were $10,320.19 and the total expenses were $8,691.45. As far as the receipts and expenses are concerned this office stands in no better position than the other offices, and we felt that we ought to try to do the practical thing and get some kind of a bill that we could pass through the House, and if it is going to be loaded down we might as well strike out the enacting clause right now. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. VAILE. Division, Mr. Chairman. I withdraw the demand.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado withdraws his demand for a division.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, strike out all of section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That such appropriations as are sufficient to maintain said offices are hereby authorized to be made from time to time as conditions may require.

The committee amendment was read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, strike out the figure "3" and insert the figure "2."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the entire bill after the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers a substitute for the entire bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. MANN: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the land offices now located, respectively, at Bellefourche, in the State of South Dakota; Waterville, in the State of Washington; Dickinson, in the State of North Dakota; Del Norte and Sterling, in the State of Colorado; Clayton and Fort Sumner, in the State of New Mexico; Harrison and Camden, in the State of Arkansas; and Alliance, in the State of Nebraska, are hereby continued for and during the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1922, and thereafter, in the discretion of the President, as long as the public business of such offices shall warrant: Provided, however, That the President may consolidate the offices of register and receiver in any of said offices whenever he may deem it in the public interest.

"SEC. 2. That such appropriations as are sufficient to maintain said offices are hereby authorized to be made from time to time as conditions may require."

Mr. CRAMTON. I make the point of order on the substitute that it simply attempts to restore to the bill the language which was omitted by the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], the amendment adopted to section 1.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman offers it in the form of a substitute for the entire bill. But it seems to me desirable for the Chair to know exactly the nature of the substitute which the gentleman offers. The bill before the House is in two sections. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois is of two sections. Section 2 in the bill is absolutely identical, word for word, with the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Illinois. Section 1 of the bill as it stood before the committee, when the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] offered his amendment, was identical with the language now in section 1 of the substitute. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] knows probably better than anyone else in the House that he could not have offered a straight-out proposition to have this committee consider a second time the same proposition. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho was adopted by a standing vote of the committee. It is possible to have a roll call upon it in the House. It would not have been possible for the gentleman from Illinois to have offered as an amendment to section 1 that which he now seeks to bring before us through this substitute for the full bill. In other words, he is attempting through a subterfuge to do that which could not have been done directly, and if it be possible to do that, then at any time when a bill is pending in the Committee of the Whole House, if an amendment has been adopted to any one section of the bill, and somebody in the House wants a rehearing on that particular amendment, all he has to do is at the end of a bill to offer to substitute a bill that is identical with the bill before the House, except to return certain language which the committee has already thrown out. I urge that the substitute is not in order, the House already having passed upon the elimination of the very language which the gentleman now seeks to have restored.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if this precedent be fixed now its effect will be to destroy for all time to come a vote of the House upon amendments. This proposition, Mr. Chairman, is much more far-reaching than this particular bill necessitates. This bill may or may not be important. I do not know anything about it. I have been willing to support it. I do know that if one can offer an amendment at the end of a bill wiping out all amendments that have been adopted by the committee and restore the bill as it came from the committee, you have destroyed the will of the Committee of the Whole and destroyed the possibility of the House passing upon it.

Mr. MANN. The Committee of the Whole passes upon this, does it not? How does it destroy the Committee of the Whole passing upon it?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. By reason of the fact that they can not pass upon the separate amendments.

Mr. MANN. Take this case: The Committee of the Whole has agreed to three or four or more amendments to the first section of this bill and then adopted another amendment striking all of them out. Does the gentleman doubt their right to do that? They had agreed to certain amendments, and then they adopted an amendment wiping those all out. Does the gentleman doubt their parliamentary right to do that?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; I do not.

Mr. MANN. Why is it not just the same thing?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, it is quite different. Here the gentleman proposes to restore a bill that has been amended.

Mr. MANN. I do not propose to restore a bill at all. I offer a substitute to the entire bill, and, I may say, not in the language of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman never pettifogs.

Mr. MANN. I do not. When the gentleman from Michigan thought it was the same thing, I wish to say that in the language "and" is omitted.

Mr. CRAMTON. I followed it as closely as I could——

Mr. LONDON. What is the object of the substitute?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The object, in my opinion, is to fix a precedent to be used in the future for destroying the power to pass legislation.

Mr. MANN. The precedent was fixed before the gentleman from Tennessee or myself came to Congress or saw the light of day.

Mr. LONDON. What is the object of the gentleman from Illinois in offering the substitute?

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to say I want to give the committee an opportunity to practically pass upon this same question again, but in a parliamentary way, and one that is in order. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. I do not want to take the gentleman's time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, the committee, of course, or the House will have its opportunity of passing upon these amendments after the committee has risen and reported the matter to the House.

Mr. MANN. Nobody knows whether the House would have an opportunity to pass upon the amendments to the bill or not if they should defeat the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

However, I saw this occur in the House, and it was in order. After long consideration of the bill and many amendments adopted to the bill in Committee of the Whole, when it was reported back to the House the gentleman in charge of the bill, instead of moving the previous question, moved as a substitute for the entire bill practically all of the bill with a few slight changes. A point of order was made, but, of course, it was overruled.

It is in order to offer a substitute for this bill. The fact that the Committee of the Whole has agreed to an amendment has not written that amendment into the bill. If it had, it could not have stricken out all these amendments that had already been agreed to; and the motion which I offer as a substitute is just as much in order in its way as the substitute for the first section was in order when it was offered. That was in order when it was offered, and that which I offer to the entire bill is in order when the entire bill is in committee.

That does not make a precedent. The precedent runs back to time immemorial.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois be held in order and is adopted, then, of course, there will be only one vote, or can be only one vote.

Mr. MANN. There would be only one vote if that amendment should be agreed to by the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; so it destroys the amendments that have already been adopted, and destroys the possibility of the House passing upon it.

Mr. MANN. The amendments that have already been adopted, all but one of them to the first section, were amendments to the text of the first section. They have all been wiped out by the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], if his amendment should be agreed to by the House.

If his amendment should not be agreed to by the House, I do not know, because there was a controversy before, and I remember, if I remember correctly, that the Speaker, after he had ruled upon that subject temporarily, stated afterwards that he did not desire the ruling to positively stand. I do not know, but I think that if the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho in the House should be defeated, then the House is called upon to vote for the original Senate provision without any amendment. That is what I am trying to get the House out of—to give them a chance to do what they want to do, amend a Senate bill. The gentleman's position would be that no amendment can be submitted to the House as to the first section except the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho, and if that be disagreed to, then the House will be called upon to vote upon the original first section of the bill, still including in there all of these land offices which the majority of the House want to eliminate. I am trying to extricate the House from that difficulty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. [Cries of "Rule!"]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to what I understood to be some weeks ago the ruling of the Speaker reversing the very policy which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has referred to. As I understand it, the effect of the ruling was——

Mr. MANN. The Speaker ruled on that bill. The bill was passed, and the Speaker, as I recollect, the next day stated that he was not sure that his ruling was correct, and indicated that he thought his ruling of the day before was incorrect.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; and if his ruling on this proposition was the same as he indicated his ruling might be, then——

Mr. MANN. No; on the contrary, the Speaker gave a chance to vote on these separate amendments in the first ruling, and afterwards retracted it.

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman and I, I fear, are not speaking of the same amendments. I am not talking about the amendments in the original bill. I am referring to the amendments in the perfected bill, as to which I introduced my substitute.

Mr. MANN. I understand. As I understand the ruling of the Speaker, if he retracted his original ruling, then if the gentleman's amendment should go back to the House and it should be defeated, the House would be required to vote on the original bill without amendment. [Cries of "Rule!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. There are two methods by which substitutes for the entire bill may be offered. The first is to offer, after the first paragraph has been read, a substitute for the entire bill, with the notice that with regard to the succeeding sections of the bill as they are read a motion will be made to strike them out. That method has been used in a good many instances. In that case gentlemen will notice that, of course, there is no opportunity for amending any subsequent section of the bill, providing the substitute is agreed to.

The other method is to offer the substitute for the entire bill at the conclusion of the reading of the entire bill, as was done in this instance by the gentleman from Illinois. Of course in that case all of the amendments that have been adopted by the committee, whatever they may be, are stricken out if the substitute is adopted. If the substitute contains in effect or in actual language some of the amendments that are already agreed to, that does not deprive the mover of the substitute of the consideration of his substitute. That applies practically to the case that we have before us, in the opinion of the Chair. No matter what the effect of this substitute may be, it is the right of the committee to vote down or to support the motion of the gentleman from Illinois. The point of order is, therefore, overruled.

The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois in order to make clear just what the proposition is.

This bill as it left the Senate provided for the restoration of 16 offices, if I am not mistaken. The French amendment cuts the number to four and provides for the continuance of the four offices that seem most necessary to be continued. It eliminates the real pork-barrel feature but avoids any chance of discontinuing any necessary offices. It provides for the continuance of 4 instead of 16.

The Mann substitute that is now before the House proposes the continuance of 10 offices instead of 4, as the bill now stands. I hope in the interest of real economy that the Mann substitute may be defeated.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOCH. The committee has perfected the first section of this bill. Now a substitute is offered for the whole bill, restoring the original language of section 1. My inquiry is this: Suppose the motion of the gentleman from Illinois prevails in the committee and then there is a separate vote in the House upon that motion to substitute, and that motion does not prevail in the House. Do we then have the original section of the bill, or do we have left the perfected section of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be improper for the Chair to venture an opinion upon a matter that is to be passed upon by the Speaker and not by the Chairman. It is for the committee to take that matter into consideration, if they desire to do so, when they vote upon the substitute.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee I wish to say that the committee have given this bill very careful consideration. The substitute of the gentleman from Illinois substitutes the provisions of the bill as reported by the Committee on the Public Lands. Now, it was apparent to the Committee on the Public Lands, and the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], who had entire charge of this matter in the Interior bill, admitted before the Committee on the Public Lands that he gave absolutely no consideration to the matter of Indian lands; that he was not familiar with that subject; that he was not familiar with the acreage of Indian lands or with the revenues coming from them; and the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations showed that they gave absolutely no consideration to the technical meaning of the words "public lands." They gave no consideration to the acreage of Indian lands. They gave no consideration to the revenue from Indian lands. The Committee on the Public Lands gave careful consideration to those matters and cut down the Senate number by six and inserted one more. I hope that the committee will adopt the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the first section of the substitute, and offer the following amendment thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment as a substitute offered by Mr. FRENCH: Strike out all of section 1 of the substitute after the enacting clause, and insert in lieu thereof the following: That the land offices now located, respectively, at Bellefourche in the State of South Dakota, Waterville in the State of Washington, Del Norte in the State of Colorado, and Alliance in the State of Nebraska, are hereby continued for and during the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1922, and thereafter the offices of register and receiver shall be consolidated in said offices.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I think this is plain enough. I offer the language that was included in my former amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the amendment and substitute be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. FRENCH and Mr. CRAMTON) there were 66 ayes and 61 noes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. SINNOTT and Mr. FRENCH.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were 67 ayes and 71 noes. So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were 61 ayes and 55 noes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. SINNOTT and Mr. FRENCH.

The committee again divided, and there were 84 ayes and 59 noes.

So the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with an amendment to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to. Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 3425) to continue certain land offices, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on each amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there is but one amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Very well, if that is the holding.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the substitute offered by Mr. MANN.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the amendment.

The SPEAKER. But the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. CRAMTON. The previous question has not been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered by the rule.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then, I ask that the amendment be divided and a separate vote be had on each section of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no authority to allow the amendment to be divided.

Mr. CRAMTON. Not when it contains several sections?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOCH. The Committee of the Whole perfected this bill by changing section 1 and making other changes, and then adopted a substitute for the whole bill which restores the original language of the bill. If this substitute is not adopted, will we have left the original bill which is identical with the substitute, or will we have left the perfected original bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is told that the original bill is not identical with the substitute.

Mr. HOCH. It is identical except for the word "and."

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. However, the Chair does not like to cross that bridge until it is reached. The Chair is disposed to think that this is reported with one amendment. There are no other amendments before the House; therefore if this amendment should be disagreed to the original bill, the Chair thinks, would be before the House.

Mr. STEPHENS. As amended.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; not as amended. The only way the House could express itself, if it wished to amend it, would be by a motion to recommit.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TEMPLE. If the substitute is voted down, then would the bill come up in the original form, or would it be the perfected bill for which this substitute was offered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be the original bill.

Mr. MANN. It would be the original bill.

Mr. TEMPLE. This is a Senate bill with certain amendments.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Speaker means the Senate bill, in referring to the original bill?

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SINNOTT) there were—ayes 77, noes 75.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote and make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 126, nays 98, answered "present" 1, not voting 205, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time; was read the third time.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am opposed to the bill. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands with instructions to strike out section 1 thereof and amend by inserting the language which I send to the Clerk's desk and report back forthwith to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Public Lands with instructions to report the bill back forthwith amended to read as follows:

"That the land offices now located, respectively, at Bellefourche, Timber Lake, and Lemmon in the State of South Dakota, Waterville in the State of Washington, Williston, Minot, and Del Norte in the State of Colorado, and Alliance and Broken Bow in the State of Nebraska, and Springfield in the State of Missouri, are hereby continued for and during the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1922, and at the offices named the offices of register and receiver shall be consolidated in one office."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion offered by the gentleman is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Speaker Clark ruled on a number of occasions, I think, and it has become the established ruling of the House, that where a bill with an amendment was reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the amendment was agreed to by the House, it was not in order on a motion to recommit to strike out the amendment. That ruling has been followed by the present Speaker. It is a clear-cut ruling by Speaker Clark, reiterated by him on several occasions, and if I am not mistaken it was followed by the present Speaker, that where an amendment reported has been agreed to by the House it was not in order on a motion to recommit to move to strike out the amendment. A motion to recommit to the committee, of course, is in order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on the point of order. I would like to call the attention of the Speaker to the peculiar circumstances that exist in reference to section 1 of this bill. As it passed the Senate it provided for the continuance of 15 land offices. The Committee on the Public Lands of the House reported the bill to the House striking out some six or seven of these land offices and adding one additional, making a total of 10 offices to be continued in the bill as reported by the Committee on the Public Lands. Now, I want particularly to direct the attention of the Speaker to this proposition, that when we went into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union certain action was taken back and forth, about which the Speaker is supposed to know nothing and about which this House is supposed to know nothing. Finally, there came out of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the Mann amendment, on which we have just voted. Now, it is the very essence of this point of order to be clear what that amendment did. That Mann amendment attached to the Senate bill provided in effect for the cutting out of six land offices carried in the Senate bill. That is what the amendment we have just voted on did. It added nothing to the Senate bill; it did not pass upon anything else in section 1 of the Senate bill except the six offices at Timber Lake and Lemmon, in the State of South Dakota; Williston and Minot, in the State of North Dakota; Broken Bow, in the State of Nebraska; and Springfield, in the State of Missouri. The Mann amendment cut out those six offices. As to the other nine which were originally in the Senate bill, the amendment made no change whatever in the Senate bill. Now, the motion to recommit which I have offered does not attempt to restore any one of those six offices stricken out by the Mann amendment. We accept the situation as to those six.

We are not trying to upset the effect of the Mann amendment at all, but we are trying now to deal with another part of section 1 that was not affected by the Mann amendment; that is to say, we want to strike out several other places and reduce the number which was originally in the Senate bill—15. In the Mann amendment it was 10, and in the motion to recommit which I have offered it is reduced to 4. In other words, I am trying to give the House a chance to cut this bill still further, and not to upset anything done by the Mann amendment, but to supplement it. I submit that the motion to recommit must be held in order.

Mr. MANN. The statement of fact has nothing to do with it. Here is the parliamentary situation——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. While the practical objection stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is forceful, still this question has been settled by a uniform line of decisions and has been ruled upon by the present Speaker several times.

Mr. CRAMTON. Do not all those precedents have in mind that the motion to recommit would in some way seek to contravene the effect of the amendment which has been adopted, which in this case is not true?

The SPEAKER. The rule is laid down very conclusively. After the House has adopted an amendment, as it has in this case, it is not subject to amendment indirectly by a motion to recommit. The Chair thinks the only motion would be a motion to recommit without instructions.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the Speaker mean to rule that a motion to send to the committee with instructions to strike out one or more offices would be within his ruling? If the Chair is not ready on that I will present the motion in a definite form.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see how the gentleman can present it in that form. The House has adopted this amendment. It is not the act of the committee, but an act of the House, and after it has been adopted the House can not amend it.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is, it was an amendment striking out certain language.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is a substitute for the entire bill.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, does this motion to recommit appear in the record? It never has been reported. The House does not know the language contained in the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair instructed the Clerk to report it.

Mr. MANN. The Clerk proceeded to report the amendment, but I raised the question that it was subject to a point of order, and the Chair held that it was subject to a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. The Clerk did not read two lines.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think no one would object to its appearing in the record.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that the motion was reported.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the balance of it may be included in the record.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(For motion to recommit, see above.)

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the Chair was in doubt.

Accordingly the House divided, and there were—ayes 90, noes 83.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members. As many as are in favor of the passage of the bill will, as their names are called——

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The only motion in order would be a motion to adjourn.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members. Those in favor of the passage of the bill will, as their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 118, nays 98, not voting 215, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. Sinclair (for) with Mr. Carter (against).

Mr. Hicks (for) with Mr. Hooker (against).

Mr. Burtness (for) with Mr. Fisher (against).

Mr. Ellis (for) with Mr. Rose (against).

Mr. Patterson of New Jersey with Mr. Wright.

Mr. Connolly of Pennsylvania with Mr. Martin.

Mr. Moore of Illinois with Mr. Deal.

Mr. Porter with Mr. Griffin.

Mr. Kinkaid with Mr. O'Connor.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the last vote and move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, on that I object and demand a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects to the motion to reconsider and the motion to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman does not bring his question to a vote I desire to give notice that I shall move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The motion to reconsider has been made?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If the House adjourns now, does that come up to-morrow immediately?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. WALSH. A motion has been made to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] moved that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and he also moved that that motion lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH. What is the pending motion?

The SPEAKER. It is to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11450. An act to provide for the printing and distribution of the Supreme Court Reports, and amending sections 225, 226, 227, and 228 of the Judicial Code;

H. R. 10871. An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 337. Joint resolution granting consent of Congress and authority to the Port of New York Authority to execute the comprehensive plan approved by the States of New York and New Jersey by chapter 43, Laws of New York, 1922, and chapter 9, Laws of New Jersey, 1922.

MIGRATORY BIRDS.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing some observations on the migratory bird bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD on the migratory bird bill. Is there objection?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Reserving the right to object, are they the gentleman's remarks?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, my primary interest in the migratory bird bill, which was made in order by the Rules Committee, and which will doubtless secure final action this session, is not that of a hunter, although he represents a host of our citizens. In fact, this is a sport that I have never pursued. My primary interest in this legislation is to supply the grounds and provide the laws for the breeding and protection of wild life, especially birds.

With the advance of civilization wild life becomes less and less until it is entirely extinct. The fascinating stories of the American pioneer's life, living on the food of the chase, are of the bygone days. Francis Parkman's recitals of the buffalo hunts are excelled in interest only by those of our pioneer fathers, whose food supply for family subsistence demanded the rifle and powder horn as well as a keen eye and unerring aim.

Well do I remember in my boyhood days at the approach of winter the millions of migratory pigeons that clouded the sky as for days on ceaseless wing these millions of birds passed over our home toward their winter habitation. Their breeding places, with the invasion of civilization, finally gave way through the operation of the ax and spade, the shovel and plow, and their existence is now but a memory, whose story will hardly be believed to-day because of its apparent incredibility.

Wild life, including that on the wing, is rapidly passing and unless protected by such legislation as here proposed is destined to become extinct. It can be protected against the otherwise inevitable. The protection already given by the States shows that the bird life can be wonderfully increased if breeding grounds are supplied and protective laws provided. Our Secretary of Agriculture, appearing before a committee of the House, marshaled the figures and facts on this subject. In the State of Minnesota in 1919 he states that 1,800,000 wild ducks were killed with a value of at least $2,000,000. He urges this proposed Federal legislation as a conservation program in the interest of hundreds of thousands of hunters of wild life amounting to millions of dollars of food values as well as insuring the continuance of valuable natural resources. It is stated that there are 60,000,000 acres of marshland in this country which can be conserved for breeding purposes for birds without loss to agriculture. This measure proposes to utilize such stretches of country of no value for agricultural purposes for permanent breeding places for migratory birds, and to afford hunting grounds to the public. To finance the project it proposes an annual license fee of $1 to be paid by each hunter to insure the necessary funds for the purpose of purchasing these grounds, the protection of the birds, and the cost of administering the law. Those who ought to know the possibilities of the project report that this fee will doubtless produce over $1,000,000, which will be ample to care for all the needs of the enterprise.

Under the present law and migratory treaty we can neither procure the necessary domain nor guarantee necessary protection. We support only 28 full-time Federal wardens to enforce the migratory bird treaty, while for the enforcement of the State laws New York alone had, in 1920, 145 game wardens; Pennsylvania, 110; Michigan, 97; and California, 78. These States are the most advanced in bird breeding and protection.

The State of Pennsylvania owns 1,000,000 acres of land, with at least 20 public hunting grounds, with 40 game sanctuaries. The game commissioner reports that last year there were killed in these grounds 510 bear and 5,000 buck deer. He urges the cooperation of the Federal Government over the plan proposed in this measure, which democratizes the sport of hunting by permitting any person to hunt who pays his license fee. It gives equal advantage to the poor that is given to the wealthy. This bill is urgently pressed by the various State officials interested in the game laws.

In my own State our chief of the division of fish and game reports that 120 organizations indorsed this measure. In Ohio each county endeavors to maintain a game refuge tract of 1,000 or more acres, under rigid regulations of fish and game protection. Ohio is attempting in a small way what this measure proposes on a large scale. There was a time not long ago when our State was almost destitute of game because of neglect of those protective associations. To-day that State, like Pennsylvania, Minnesota, and others, is rapidly reproducing her wild life by rigid trespass laws to protect the game refuge tracts.

The hearings show a remarkably wide and general support of this legislation throughout the country. I want to see this proposal enacted into law, not only from a utilitarian point of view, which must ever be the primary ground of the legislator, but I wish to see it become law because of the sportsman viewpoint, which represents a very wide interest in our country, an interest that can not be sacrificed without distinctive loss to our people. Without some such protective legislation the conservation of this source of natural wealth is impossible and the American hunter will be only a memory. The friends of this legislation had hoped for immediate action. The Agriculture Committee reported it favorably with a recommendation of immediate passage, and the Rules Committee gave it a privileged status. This gives encouragement for early and favorable action.

CHECKS AND DRAFTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ZIHLMAN presented the following conference report for printing in the RECORD under the rule:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill S. 1033, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 1033) regulating the issuance of checks, drafts, and orders for the payment of money within the District of Columbia submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agrees to the same, the effect of which is to agree to the bill in precisely the terms in which it passed the House, to wit:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any person within the District of Columbia who, with intent to defraud, shall make, draw, utter, or deliver any check, draft, or order for the payment of money upon any bank or other depository, knowing at the time of such making, drawing, uttering, or delivering that the maker or drawer has not sufficient funds in or credit with such bank or other depository for the payment of such check, draft, or order in full upon its presentation, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by imprisonment for not more than one year, or be fined not more than $1,000, or both. As against the maker or drawer thereof the making, drawing, uttering, or delivering by such maker or drawer of a check, draft, or order, payment of which is refused by the drawee because of insufficient funds of the maker or drawer in its possession or control, shall be prima facie evidence of the intent to defraud and of knowledge of insufficient funds in or credit with such bank or other depository, provided such maker or drawer shall not have paid the holder thereof the amount due thereon together with the amount of protest fees, if any, within five days after receiving notice in person or writing that such draft or order has not been paid. The word 'credit,' as used herein, shall be construed to mean arrangement or understanding, express or implied, with the bank or other depository for the payment of such check, draft, or order."

Managers on the part of the House.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes on a matter relating to the business of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, objection was made in the Senate to-day to a resolution that had been presented giving the assent of the Senate to an adjournment of the House. In that condition of affairs it will be necessary to present a resolution of adjournment in another form. I shall do that as soon as the business essential to be completed before the 1st of July has been disposed of. We can not tell, of course, whether the Senate will act promptly on our resolution. We hope it will. Our belief is that there is no objection in the Senate to concurring in our resolution of adjournment when we shall have passed it. If we are to adjourn Friday at an early hour it will be necessary for all Members to be present to-morrow. There are quite a number of matters to be considered, and I hope that all Members will be in their seats promptly to-morrow and remain here during the day. It will be necessary to do that if we are to adjourn Friday.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What is expected to come up to-morrow—bills similar to the one which was considered to-day?

Mr. MONDELL. Possibly so.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Some economy measure.

Mr. WALSH. We ought to meet at half past 8 in the morning if we are going to have any more bills of that kind.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, June 29, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 29, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

ANTON ROSPOTNIK.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, before we take up the regular business of the day, the unfinished business, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for two or three minutes. I shall not take longer than that.

I report back favorably from the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 3594) for the relief of Anton Rospotnik and the exchange of certain lands owned by the Northern Pacific Railway Co., and I submit a report (No. 797) thereon. The report was ordered yesterday by a unanimous vote of the committee. It is on a little matter of very great and urgent importance. I will only take a moment to explain it.

A few years ago there was a poor man in Montana who located on 80 acres of land. The land had been prior to that time patented to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. It is a lieu selection. When this man applied to homestead it at the local land office the land office officials, either through ignorance or mistake, permitted him to file on it. He went on it and lived there two years before he knew it was railroad land. He put up a house and fenced it and cultivated it, and has now been on it five years and has put on a great deal of improvement and time and labor on the land. The bill which I have reported merely provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall be permitted to authorize the Northern Pacific Railway Co. in its discretion to select 80 acres of nonmineral public land elsewhere in Montana and to let this man make his final proof, if the railroad company may elect to do so.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, with two amendments, which were accepted by the committee and unanimously recommended by the committee. The time is getting late, and if we are going to pass the bill it must be passed now and go to the House at once.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand it is limited to public lands within Montana?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; in Montana.

Mr. SMOOT. And limited to nonmineral lands?

Mr. MYERS. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. There is none, unless it leads to discussion.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Northern Pacific Railway Co., upon its filing with the Secretary of the Interior a proper relinquishment disclaiming in favor of the United States all title and interest in or to the north half northwest quarter, section 15, township 8 S., range 20 E., in the Bozeman, Montana, land district, under its mineral indemnity selection, list No. 146, embracing said tract, shall be entitled to select and receive a patent for other vacant unreserved nonmineral public lands of an equal area in that State; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to permit, after the filing of such relinquishment by said railway company, the homestead entry of Anton Rospotnik, to be reinstated as though said entry had been properly allowed, the same to remain subject to compliance with the laws governing entries of like character.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Anton Rospotnik and the exchange of certain lands owned by the Northern Pacific Railway Co."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to a resolution (H. Res. 390) requesting the consent of the Senate to an adjournment of the House until Tuesday, August 15, 1922.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were subsequently signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 10871. An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11393. An act to abolish the office of Superintendent of the Library Building and Grounds and to transfer the duties thereof to the Architect of the Capitol and the Librarian of Congress;

H. R. 11450. An act to provide for the printing and distribution of the Supreme Court Reports, and amending sections 225, 226, 227, and 228 of the Judicial Code;

H. R. 12073. An act to provide additional compensation for certain civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923;

H. J. Res. 337. Joint resolution granting consent of Congress and authority to the Port of New York Authority to execute the comprehensive plan approved by the States of New York and New Jersey by chapter 43, Laws of New York, 1922, and chapter 9, Laws of New Jersey, 1922; and

H. J. Res. 344. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to detail four persons paid from the appropriation for the collection of customs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CURTIS presented a letter in the nature of a petition from W. H. Haffner, of Horton, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the transportation act of 1920 so as to abolish the Railroad Labor Board on account of proposed reductions in wages of railroad workers, especially trackmen and laborers, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of sundry citizens of St. Charles and Swan Creek, in the State of Michigan, praying for inclusion in the pending tariff bill of a duty of $2 per 100 pounds on Cuban sugar, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted by the Wooster-Boalt Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Norwalk, Ohio, protesting against amendment of the so-called Morgan bill granting increased pension to Civil War veterans to the sum of $72 per month, so as to confine the benefits thereof to surviving soldiers who have now or may hereafter reach the age of 80 years, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by Key West Grange, No. 1100, Patrons of Husbandry, of Olivet, Kans., protesting against the enactment of legislation granting subsidies, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a letter from Mr. Thomas H. McGrew, of Fayetteville, Ark., making suggestions as to a solution of the Mississippi River flood problem, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NEWBERRY presented a petition of sundry citizens of Henderson and Owosso, in the State of Michigan, praying for inclusion in the pending tariff bill of a duty of $2 per 100 pounds on Cuban sugar, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

S. 494. An act for the relief of Benjamin O. Kerlee; and

S. 3156. An act to amend section 70 of the Judicial Code.

On June 29, 1922:

S. 777. An act for the relief of John M. Green.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. McLEAN. I desire to call up the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 831) to amend the proviso in paragraph 10 of section 9 of the Federal reserve act amended by the act of June 21, 1917, amending the Federal reserve act, which was recalled from the House the other day. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments numbered 1, 2, and 3 of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before that can be done it will be necessary that the vote by which the amendments were agreed to shall be reconsidered. Without objection, it is so ordered. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to concur in amendments numbered 1, 2, and 3.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. McLEAN. I move that the Senate disagree to House amendment numbered 4 and ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia and Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, we have had no explanation of what the amendments are. We are certainly entitled to some explanation.

Mr. McLEAN. I will say to the Senator that the matter has been before the Senate two or three times and explained, and the explanation, I think, is very easily and very briefly made.

The bill was passed by the Senate something more than a year ago. It gives to the State banks which become members of the Federal reserve system the same privileges as the national banks on single lines of credit. The House suggested two or three unimportant amendments changing the phraseology, to which there can be no objection. The fourth amendment does add a proviso which, in the opinion of a member of the Federal Reserve Board, may create some confusion. Personally I do not think it is a very important matter, but in order that we may make no mistake about it, I thought it was worth while to have a committee of conference appointed on the fourth amendment.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I would like to ask the Senator if there is anything compulsory in the amendment. In other words, is a State bank compelled to become a member of the Federal reserve system?

Mr. McLEAN. Oh, no; there is nothing compulsory about it. We want to make this system as attractive as we can and invite in all State banks that we can. It is for that reason that the bill gives to them the same privileges as the national banks will have with regard to single lines of credit.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I myself happen to be the president of a small State bank, and I would not like to be compelled to enter the national system or the Federal reserve system.

Mr. McLEAN. I assure the Senator there is nothing compulsory about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama is now recognized.

Mr. HEFLIN. I only wanted an explanation. I occupy the same position as the Senator from Georgia and just wanted the matter explained. I have no further inquiry at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] that the Senate disagree to amendment numbered 4 and request a conference with the House.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. McLEAN, Mr. EDGE, and Mr. GLASS.

DISTRIBUTION OF SPEECHES BY FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, before the tariff bill is taken up I wish to say that I have modified my resolution as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] so as to read:

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board is hereby requested to call upon all of such Federal reserve banks, except the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, which has already reported to the Senate, to furnish to the Senate in writing all information in their possession, respectively, called for in the following questions.

I have struck out the words—

be, and they are hereby, requested, respectively, to furnish to the Senate in writing a list of the names and addresses of citizens to whom said speech was sent.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution as it now reads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McLEAN. I understand the Senator has stricken out the request for the mailing lists?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. McLEAN. And the resolution is now addressed to the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. HEFLIN. To the Federal Reserve Board, asking it to call upon the other banks to answer who suggested that the speech be sent out, how many were sent out, and at what expense.

Mr. McLEAN. Is the Senator willing that the resolution shall go over until to-morrow? I have not considered the numerous questions very carefully. My impression is there will be no further objection, but I would like to look at it further. I do not think that I shall renew my objection to the resolution as now framed.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will let it go over until to-morrow, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HEFLIN's resolution (S. Res. 308) as modified reads as follows:

Whereas it has been charged upon the floor of the Senate that each and every one of the regional Federal reserve banks of the United States has had printed and distributed at its own expense a speech delivered in the Senate by Senator GLASS, of Virginia, in which the position of Senator HEFLIN on the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board was assailed and criticized: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board is hereby requested to call on all of said Federal reserve banks, except the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, which has already reported to the Senate, to furnish to the Senate in writing all information in their possession, respectively, called for in the following questions:

(1) At whose instance was the speech in question of Senator GLASS sent out? (2) At whose expense was said speech printed and distributed? (3) How was the fund provided, and how many copies of said speech were sent out, and how much money was expended in printing and distributing said speech? (4) Did any member of the Federal Reserve Board suggest the printing or distribution of the said speech? (5) Was any letter sent out with said speech? If so, attach a copy to your report.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the pending amendment.

The READING CLERK. In paragraph 707, page 101, line 3, the committee proposes to strike out "1 cent" and insert "2½ cents," so as to read:

Milk, fresh, 2½ cents per gallon.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, paragraph 707 is an important one, especially for that section of our country which adjoins the border line of Canada. The Senate committee amendment increases the rate on fresh milk from 1 cent per gallon, as provided in the House text, to 2½ cents per gallon; on sour milk and buttermilk from one-half of 1 cent to 1 cent per gallon; and on cream less than 30 per cent of butter fat the rate being 5 cents per gallon, and 30 per cent or more of butter fat the rate being 10 cents per gallon, to a flat rate of 22½ cents per gallon.

Under the Underwood Act all milk and cream in its natural state was free. Under the Payne-Aldrich Act milk was dutiable at 2 cents per gallon and cream at 5 cents per gallon. The Senate committee now proposes an increase in the rate on milk of 25 per cent over the rate provided in the Payne-Aldrich Act and an increase in the cream rate of 350 per cent over the rate provided in the Payne-Aldrich Act. In the emergency tariff act the duty on milk is 2 cents per gallon and on cream 5 cents per gallon. So that the duty fixed on milk by the Senate committee increases the rate 25 per cent, and the duty fixed upon cream by the Senate committee increases the rate 350 per cent over the emergency act.

It might be of interest in this connection to have the RECORD show the relative importance of the different uses of milk in the United States in the year 1921. Cream and butter consumed 22.4 per cent of our milk production; dairy butter, 13.8 per cent; cheese, 3.6 per cent; condensed milk, 3.7 per cent; ice cream, three-tenths of 1 per cent; powdered milk, 3.4 per cent. The total manufactured products from milk amounted to 47 per cent of our production. For household purposes, 45.7 per cent of the milk production was used; for feeding calves, 4.3 per cent; waste, loss, and so forth, 3 per cent; making the grand total of uses 100 per cent, which, of course, represents our total production.

PRODUCTION, IMPORTS, AND EXPORTS.

The estimated production of milk in the United States for 1919 was 6,285,000,000 gallons. Imports of milk for 1919 were 2,800,000 gallons, valued at $740,000, and imports of cream were 930,000 gallons, valued at $1,110,000. The value of our exports of milk and cream in 1919 was $1,800,000.

Imports of milk and cream are far below 1 per cent of our domestic production, and the exports of milk and cream have been in excess of our imports.

TRADE IN MILK AND CREAM.

This item affects solely trade between this country and Canada, particularly those sections of the United States close to the Canadian border. The New England combined requirements of dairy products—fresh milk and cream, condensed and evaporated milk, butter, and cheese—are far in excess of the local production. New England will be particularly affected, as there is a deficiency of milk and cream in that section, and if the Canadian supply is cut off the supply will have to be procured from distant sections of the United States, which will require a long haul. For some time the city of Boston and other centers have had to reach out into eastern New York and that part of Canada south of the St. Lawrence River for further supply of milk and cream. The shortage is particularly apparent during the summer months.

IMPORTS OF MILK AND CREAM UNDER THE EMERGENCY TARIFF.

During the nine months, June 1, 1920, to February 1, 1921, there was a slight decline in the imports of milk and a slight increase in the imports of cream. Imports of milk decreased from 1,245,000 gallons June 1, 1920, to February 1, 1921, to 1,096,000 gallons from June 1, 1921, to February 1, 1922. Imports of cream were 1,122,000 gallons June 1, 1920, to February 1, 1921, as against 1,123,000 gallons from June 1, 1921, to February 1, 1922.

It will be noted that the decrease in imports was comparatively slight, which goes to show that the 5 cents duty on cream and the 2 cents duty on milk were not sufficient to hold down the imports.

COST OF THE DUTY ON CREAM TO THE CONSUMERS.

In 1919 the domestic production of fresh cream for use as such was 82,247,580 gallons, and the imports were 1,111,130 gallons, making a total of nearly 83,360,000 gallons consumed in our country. If this is taxed at the rate proposed in paragraph 707, namely, 22½ cents per gallon, which amounts to an increase of 350 per cent over the Payne-Aldrich rate and over the rate of the emergency tariff law, and the tariff rate is reflected in increased prices, the consumers of America will have to pay a total tax of $18,756,000 for this one item.

In respect to its food supplies, the New England region is in the position of England. For the great bulk—perhaps 80 per cent of its food—it is dependent upon other sections. In the case of dairy products, there is no likelihood of meeting the demand by the local production, and in view of the limited shipping radius of fresh milk and cream the best the duty can do is to distort present channels of trade. Less will be imported from Canada, more bought from more western regions, and there will be a corresponding reduction in the western exports of cheese and canned milk.

UPON WHAT THEORY CAN AN INCREASE FROM 5 CENTS TO 22½ CENTS PER GALLON ON CREAM BE JUSTIFIED?

The only argument advanced is that with sufficient protection the New England producers could reduce their production of butter and ship more cream into the markets; but this bill also proposes an increase in the duty on butter, which can not but operate to increase the market price, and therefore will not have the effect that is expected by increasing the duty upon cream. If the New England producers are now marketing their cream in the form of butter because they can get a higher price for it, is there any reason to assume that under the scale of prices for butter and cream which is proposed in this bill that they will not continue to do so? While we are putting a high duty on cream, to shut out the imports and give the New England producers a chance to charge higher prices to the consumers, we are also putting a duty on butter which will give them cause to continue marketing their cream in the form of butter, and if the consumers are to continue to use cream during the summer months, when production does not meet the demand, they will be obliged to pay the increased tax of 22½ cents per gallon for it.

Freight rates from Canada and New England points to Boston, Worcester, and Springfield, Mass., which are the distributing centers for cream and milk, are an important factor in the discussion of this question. Domestic shipments of cream to Boston are within a radius of 200 miles. Quebec shipping points are about 300 miles from Boston. The freight rate for milk within a 300 to 400 mile radius is from 56 to 62 cents per 100 pounds; for cream, 300 to 400 mile radius, 70 to 78 cents per 100 pounds; for milk, 200 to 300 mile radius, which is the radius within the confines of New England, 47 to 54 cents per 100 pounds; and for cream, 200 to 300 mile radius, 59 to 68 cents per 100 pounds. So it is to be observed that the freight rates favor the domestic producer and give him an advantage over the Canadian producer, because there is a variance of about 10 cents per 100 pounds in favor of the shorter haul. The cost of production in Canada is probably about the same as in the United States, notwithstanding the claim of the New England Milk Producers' Association and Cream Dealers' Association of Boston that the cost of production in Canada is less than in the United States. About the same living conditions prevail and about the same class of people work upon the farms and are engaged in the production of cream and milk in that section of Canada adjoining New England as in New England. So there is very little difference, if any, in the cost of production. But whatever difference may be said to exist on one side or the other, the fact is that the butter market of Canada is higher than that of the United States and that the milk market of Canada is higher than that of the United States. I read a telegram sent from Boston, dated June 28, in response to a request for information as to conditions, respectively, in the Canadian butter market and in the Boston butter market.

Canadian butter market, June 17, 36½ cents per pound; June 24, 38½. Boston market, June 21, 36½; June 28, 38½.

Then the telegram makes a very pertinent inquiry:

How much tariff is needed to equalize figures of this kind, which show the Canadian market to be about the home markets?

For years the butter market of Toronto and Montreal, Canada, has been higher than the butter market in the New England section of our country.

Mr. President, these amendments to paragraphs 707, 708, and 709 are a drive at Canada and constitute an attempt to keep out of the section of our country bordering upon the Canadian line those dairy products which naturally find a market in the large cities of New England and New York State, and possibly farther west in such centers as Detroit. It is proposed to shut out of New England the milk and cream and perhaps the butter that come from Canada. The figures show—and they are not disputed—that New England does not produce enough milk to take care of her consumption; that during the summer months we are compelled to go to Canada for our cream. This amendment is a command to the people of New England to go without cream and possibly milk during the summer months. It means an increase of 350 per cent in the rate, and that the price of cream will reach the sky limit and become absolutely prohibitive. It means that the farmers will be injured instead of benefited, because those who use cream in making, for instance, ice cream will use the unsalted butter produced by the packers as a substitute for wholesome and good cream.

Can we afford to have a quarrel with Canada or with the producers of Canada over an item of this kind? I am not asking that anyone who produces milk and cream in New England or in New York meet foreign competition, but I am asking that we be given the milk and the cream necessary to meet our reasonable demands; I am asking that we be permitted to go into the markets of Canada and buy at a reasonable price what we must have to sustain life and especially to sustain the lives of the children in our large manufacturing cities. The action of the committee is an outrageous attempt to keep up the cost of living for those who can ill afford to have this increased burden forced upon them.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Where did New England get her milk prior to the adoption of the present law in 1913?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Of course, there has been a constant growth and development in New England and an increase in consumption and home producers have furnished milk in large quantities; but does the Senator from Vermont contend that there is now produced in New England sufficient milk or sufficient cream for the consumption?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I did not rise to discuss that question; I have not examined the figures to ascertain the relative amount produced in New England and the amount that is imported from Canada.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It is very important to know that.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. But I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that under the tariff act of 1909 the importation of milk for the year 1913 was only 45,935 gallons, a very small quantity; yet New England did not seem to go hungry during that time.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The expert at my left, in answer to my inquiry, informs me that the city of Boston was dependent upon Canada in the summer months of last year for as high as 18 per cent of its supply of milk and cream.

This is a serious matter. We are talking about milk; we are talking about cream; we are talking about ice cream that the children in the mill cities of New England buy. We are talking about whether we will substitute, instead of cream, cheap butter products in making ice cream. No man on this floor can deny the fact that the production is not sufficient for the consumption. No man can assert that there is any difference in price between Canadian cream and New England cream. This is not a case of underselling the domestic producer. This is a case of penalizing people who must go beyond the borders of our land to get something to eat.

I have farming constituents who produce milk and cream, and I am sure they are not concerned about the levying of this tax, because they well know that they are not able to meet the demand, especially during the summer months, and the only time when cream comes in is during the summer months. The tables show practically no importation during the rest of the year, which means that cream is used by our people in the hot months almost as a necessity. If I were convinced that this duty would help the producers of New England, and that they were able to take care of our consumption, I would feel very different about it; but I am asking that the one and only source of supply of a very necessary food shall not be shut off from the people of New England. I am asking for the people of New England the right to have what they want and require to live. There have been enough laws passed to prevent them from having what they want to eat or what they want to drink. Here is an indirect way of passing a law to say, "You can not have milk or cream." It is a restriction upon our personal liberties which I protest.

I have said these high tariff duties are going to affect Canada. I pointed out the other day, in the address which I made here, that Canada was our best customer; that during the month of May she bought from us three times as much as Germany or Great Britain, our next best customers. It was shown yesterday that Canada purchases from us very much more fresh meats than is imported into this country. We are saying to Canada in this bill, "We want nothing from you, not even the things that slip over the border—a little milk, cream, or vegetables which the farmers can put in their wagons or automobiles and drive a few miles to some of the mill cities of New England." All this is stopped.

Did folly ever go further? Did an effort to deprive people of their personal liberty ever go further? There are other ways of doing it than by a plain enactment. It can be done indirectly by embargo laws and by prohibitive taxation.

Let us see, now, what is already the result of the emergency tariff law so far as business with Canada is concerned. You know, in the emergency tariff law we put some duties upon milk and cream and other farm products for the purpose of hitting Canada; but this bill provides an increase of 350 per cent over even the emergency law in the matter of taxation upon cream. Does any special volume of cream come into New England in January, February, March, April, May, November, or December? If not, then are not the facts clear and unmistakable that it is only an extra supply that the people get when they need it most—in the summer months—that comes in from Canada?

Mr. President, let me read the total United States exports to Canada in the year 1920; and I am glad that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is here, because if he has reiterated one thing more than another during the course of this debate, ably and without being answered effectively by any other Senator, it is that this tariff will destroy our foreign business. Here is the proof of what the emergency tariff has done:

1920: Total United States exports to Canada, $971,852,474—about a billion dollars.

1921: $593,675,306.

A drop of 50 per cent in the things that Canada prior to last year bought from the producers and manufacturers of our own country.

How long can this go on? This bill should be entitled: "A bill to destroy the 20 per cent of export business of the manufacturers and producers of this country." This bill is a bill to limit and restrict the business of this country to the home markets, from which and out of which we have expanded long ago.

Now, let us see what the imports were from Canada. Let us see what we got by shutting out her imports under the emergency tariff law.

Total United States imports from Canada in the year 1920, $503,846,804.

Total United States imports from Canada in the year 1921, $335,441,004.

A drop of 50 per cent in our exports between 1920 and 1921, and a drop of about 40 per cent in our imports from Canada. The balance in favor of the United States for the year 1920 was $458,000,000. The balance in 1921 was $258,334,302—a drop of 50 per cent.

Under the emergency tariff law our business with Canada dropped 50 per cent; but that is not enough. It must be exterminated. The rates under discussion are intended to help do it.

Better than I can say it is the statement annexed to the figures that I have just read, which was handed to me:

Further, we can not sell goods abroad unless we buy some foreign goods. In the year 1920 we sold Canada $458,005,670 worth more of goods than we bought from Canada. Even the comparatively moderate changes of the Fordney Emergency Tariff Act have reduced that favorable balance to only about $258,000,000. Canada is naturally located for a reciprocal trade in dairy products. The principal markets of Canada are nearer to much of our dairy producing territory than are our own markets. On the other hand, the shipments from dairy territory in Canada have to travel farther to our nearest market than our domestic product. This is particularly true in the East, where Boston, Springfield, Worcester, Hartford, and New York are the nearest markets using any Canadian dairy foods. This gives us a natural advantage. Again, the butter market in Montreal averages higher than the Boston market about one-third of the time and the milk market in Toronto and Montreal averages higher than in Chicago.

I ask that the other information contained in the brief from which I have just read may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter refered to is as follows:

First. Milk and its products constitute the most absolute necessity of life, as necessary for the poor as for the rich. It would seem evident that no attempt should be made to consider them on an ad valorem basis. The share of taxation which an article of that kind should bear should be far less than on the average of imports, if, indeed, they are not strictly entitled to go on the free list.

Second. From a standpoint of protection it must be remembered that we export much more in dairy products than we import. This means that in the long run our products are seeking a higher-priced market abroad than they would get in the United States. As to milk and cream, the imports are comparatively small, and were so even when both were on the free list. As to butter, the figures for 10 years show that on the average price at which exports were valued and the average value per pound of imports we received hundreds of thousands of dollars more for the goods which were displaced by imports than we paid for those imports.

* * * * * * *

It is admitted by the proponents of a high tariff rate that all that is needed in a protective tariff is enough tax to meet the difference between the labor cost in the United States and Canada. The United States Tariff Commission finds there is little difference in labor costs in Canada and the United States. The Milk Producers' Association have claimed various differences, one being only about 10 per cent and another about 25 per cent. We know that the first figure is nearer right. On the other hand only about 20 per cent, or one-fifth, of the cost of a pound of butter is made up of labor. Assuming 50-cent butter a very high cost figure, only 10 cents of that is made up of labor, and if there were a difference of 10 per cent on labor cost 1 cent would be adequate to meet the cost difference. We have agreed to 5 cents as a tax we are willing to let stand, but we do protest against any additional raise.

The producers, however, demand a big tax on butter, claiming that they fear competition from Europe and New Zealand. They thus fix 10 cents as a necessary price to protect the butter market, regardless of the fact that the balance of trade has been in our favor and that, as stated above, we have received more money for the goods shipped abroad than we would have received by keeping out exports and filling the home demand. Having fixed the tax on butter at 10 cents, they then proceed to harmonize the cream imports with the butter tax, claiming 35 cents a pound for 40 per cent cream. Their figures are based on the idea that a man might take a jug of cream a mile north of the international boundary, put it in a creamery just on the American side, manufacture butter, and thus evade the payment of a higher tax. They do not figure on the premium for care of sweet cream, on the cartage expenses, the long freight haul, and the freight on a hundred pounds of cream and container as compared with the small cost of shipping 35 pounds of butter.

As a matter of fact, during the years when the Payne-Aldrich bill was in force, 6 cents on butter and 5 cents on cream, and under the Underwood Act, 2½ cents on butter and cream free, butter was never manufactured from imported cream for any length of time successfully, nor has it been done under the Fordney Emergency Tariff Act, with a 5-cent tax on cream and a 6-cent tax on butter.

To meet the possible fears of producers, however, we have agreed that, whatever the butter rate, cream may be harmonized with it when imported for manufacture into butter or cheese, placing pasteurized sweet cream for consumption in the cream market at the 5-cent rate.

Fourth. Much has been said about the decadence of agriculture, especially dairying. From 1900 to 1920 the number of cattle in the country increased from 16,292,000 to 23,747,000. In 10 years past the dairy production increased from $596,413,463 to $1,481,462,091. From 1910 to 1920 the value of farms increased 90.1 per cent, the value of implements and machinery increased 184.1 per cent, the value of live stock 62.7 per cent, the equity of farms 79.1 per cent. If the producers realized it, they are seriously hurting the dairy industry and encouraging the use of substitutes for milk, butter, and cream. Their real problem is to keep the price of dairy products where people will buy them and to encourage foreign trade so that we may have a trade for our surplus.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is to say, the figures presented by the Senator from Massachusetts show that in our attempt to prevent Canada from selling us some of her products, we have succeeded in cutting down the balance of trade in our favor, which was $450,000,000 a year, to about $258,000,000 a year?

Mr WALSH of Massachusetts. Absolutely; that is exactly what has happened, confirming what the Senator predicted as to what would be the effect of the present tariff bill on our foreign trade. If that has happened in Canada, why will it not happen in Great Britain? Why will it not happen in Germany? Why will it not happen in France? Why will it not happen in South America?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is to say, the same wall which our Republican statesmen are building to keep the products of other countries from being sold in the United States will prevent our products in a still greater quantity from being sold abroad?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Why, that is what their boast is, so far as this agricultural schedule is concerned. They already have the home market, because there are practically no imports. They are trivial, inconsequential. There are no imports of cream except for three months in the year. They already have the home market and some foreign market, and they are proceeding now to push away from themselves, to remove from themselves, the markets of the world in other products that others are ready to buy from us if we will let them trade with us.

There can not be any other conclusion. If you increase the prices of agricultural products, the people of other countries will not buy them so readily as if they were reasonable and cheap in price, and if you do not permit them to pay their bills in something besides gold, which they have not; if you do not permit them to pay their bills with goods or with services, those things which we can not produce profitably and cheaply in our own country, and which we need and must have, then, of course, the only result will be that we will be confining our entire activities to the home market.

I have talked longer than I intended. It is not my purpose to discuss these agricultural duties at great length. They are all based on the same principle.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In just a moment. I am going to insist during this debate—and I know the Senator from Nebraska will join with me in it—on asking again and again and again what state of facts justifies a protective tariff duty? Is there any state of facts which any man on the other side of the Chamber can claim to justify a tariff duty? They have pleaded every possible condition in industry as justifying a protective tariff duty. If we are exporting the product, it is justifiable. If we are producing only 5 per cent, it is justifiable. If we are producing none of it, it is justifiable. If we are producing 40 or 50 per cent, it is justifiable. If it is a trust-controlled article, it is justifiable. If it is an infant industry, it is justifiable. If it is a business which controls the purchases of the whole world, it is justifiable. Let us get some state of facts in order to find out when a protective tariff duty is justifiable.

I thought I knew the facts on which the Republicans would rely, until I heard the discussion of this bill in this body. I supposed from the history of protective tariff arguments that the theory upon which the Republicans would rely was that an industry not producing a sufficient amount to meet the American consumption should be protected by tariff duties from the competition of a comparable imported product made by cheap foreign labor—the importation of which was necessary to supply domestic consumption—in order to permit the infant industry to develop so that it could supply the entire demand; but that theory has been abandoned, and we have a tariff bill which can not be justified by any statement of facts or stretch of the imagination. That is the reason for the unpopularity of this bill; that is the reason why the Republican press of this country is complaining; that is the reason why the business men of this country are complaining. I now gladly yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say that the cream imported for the use of the masses of the people in Massachusetts, in the industrial centers particularly, was imported from Canada during the summer and warm months only, largely for ice-cream purposes, for ice-cream cones, and so on. I would like to know whether there was any evidence adduced before the Finance Committee, of which the Senator is a member, to the effect that the cream so imported from Canada was different in any respect from the cream which came from Massachusetts or New Hampshire or Vermont? Did it bear any evidence of having been produced by pauper cows or pauper people, or was it deleterious, or was the price different from what was ordinarily charged?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Not at all. In fact, the health laws of Massachusetts require the same inspection of milk and cream which comes in from Canada and the same inspection of the place where the cream is produced as is required in our own States in New England.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then the old argument of pauper labor does not count. The people on the other side of the Canadian line are just the same as the people on this side, and the cows on the other side are just the same?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Absolutely.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They produce the same cream there, and it is sold for the same price, and there is just as much reason for erecting a tariff wall between Massachusetts and New Hampshire as there would be in erecting one between New Hampshire and Canada.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Absolutely. In this instance it is a command denying the people something which they require. Most of the tariff rates on agricultural products are imposed in order to keep out commodities which can be produced in America and under some circumstances increase the price to the consumer, but in the case of cream the duty amounts to a command to stop using it. We must buy cream from Canada. The very fact that we do not import cream, except during the summer months, shows that we are dependent upon Canada. We should remember that all milk and cream dealers contract with the wholesalers by the year, and our producers would not allow the wholesalers of Worcester and Springfield and Hartford and Providence and Boston to contract with them to take cream for nine months, and in the summer months let them go to Canada. Of course, that is incredible.

There is just one argument advanced in favor of the proposed duties so far as I am able to determine. It is to the effect that if we shut out this cream some of our people in northern New England will stop making butter and will sell the cream instead of the butter to our people. The answer to that is this: That this bill puts a duty on butter as well as on cream. In fact, the figures I have show that the result of the tax upon butter and the result of the tax upon cream will be that there will be a greater inducement now to make butter than there ever has been to make cream.

I suppose the die is cast. I suppose even those from the industrial sections of our country will have to vote against this amendment because of the implied threat that if the agricultural bloc interests do not get the rates named they will penalize the manufacturing interests of the East and Middle West. The manufacturing interests of New England want no protective duty except for those industries which are in the infant class, such as the dyestuff industry and certain other industries. They must ask for duties, because you have compelled them to by taxing the raw materials.

Mr. President, I have said all I desire on this item and I yield the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, in 1919 the production of fresh milk was estimated at 6,285,000,000 gallons. During the calendar year 1921 the imports amounted to 2,579,240 gallons, valued at $466,962, or 18 cents per gallon. On the importing basis that is equal to about 4½ cents per quart.

The duty on a quart under the pending bill would be equivalent to about 6 mills, but on the basis of 18 cents per gallon the rate of 2½ cents per gallon would be equal to about 14 per cent. I am speaking of the 18 cents per gallon as the selling price here.

The rate of duty under the act of 1909 was 2 cents per gallon. Under the act of 1913 it was free. The emergency tariff law laid a duty of 2 cents a gallon on that commodity. The Dingley law fixed 2 cents per gallon as the duty, and practically in all the tariff-for-protection laws the duty has been about 2 cents per gallon.

A duty of 2 cents per gallon is equivalent to one-half cent per quart. I would like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he thinks the American farmer, in days like these, should be compelled to get up at 3 o'clock in the morning, milk his cows, bring that milk miles, and sell it for 4½ cents a quart? Mr. President, you pay ten times that for the near beer you are buying, and you do not do any crying about it, either.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I hope the Senator does not mean that I have been buying any near beer.

Mr. McCUMBER. You buy a lot of cheap stuff, put it in a colored bottle, and you pay 20 cents for the bottle, which does not contain much more than a half pint, and you make no complaint that you are abused.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. We do not give near beer to children in New England.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, Mr. President, look over what your people in Boston paid for their liquor prior to the adoption of the eighteenth amendment. I do not know what it has been since then—there is no way of telling; but it was four times what you paid for milk for your babies.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I pray the Senator not to open up the prohibition question.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought perhaps with that saving you could possibly pay half a cent more on the quart for the milk you buy for your babies.

Mr. President, the only time the children in Boston did not have sufficient milk was when milk was on the free list, when you not only had to feed your babies by charity, under the Wilson-Gorman law, but you had to feed their fathers and mothers, their sisters and brothers. They have money enough now to pay a half cent more for a quart under a protective policy, and there has never been a protective period in which your children did not have all the milk they needed, whether it was 2 cents per gallon or 2½ cents, and I think the average has been 2 cents a gallon.

I do not think we need to be frightened to death about the children not getting their milk. The thing we ought to be concerned about is the fathers being able to earn the money to buy that milk. That is far more important than the little cent or 2 cents upon a gallon of milk.

But I do not for a single moment believe that it will have the slightest effect upon the cost of a quart of milk in Boston or New York. We put a duty on it in the emergency tariff law and it did not keep up the prices. Milk went down according to the demand and the supply, and it has continued to do so. The figures which I have read as to what is produced in the United States are so enormous compared with the small importations that you might cut off every gallon of importation and it would have no effect. It would not affect the price at all, in my opinion, in the great city. Where would it affect the price? Just as the Senator has said, it may be that it would affect the price of cream along the border where the contest and competition are between the Canadian farmer producing cream and the New York and New Hampshire farmers producing milk and cream along the border.

Now, there will be a little line of competition there. Undoubtedly it will raise or hold to a higher level of American prices of milk and cream along that little strip. It will benefit the American farmer a little distance from the Canadian border, but the great American farms will still produce and supply the American cities with milk and with sufficient milk if we give them a price at which they can afford to milk their cows. That is far more important than the little matter of one penny upon half a gallon of milk.

Mr. President, I think that these duties are more than needed generally. On the milk and the cream I admit that it will have but little effect, but that little effect is in a little piece of territory where the farmer living there is entitled to protection the same as he is entitled to protection in other sections of the country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not agree with my colleague [Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts] about his general views on paragraph 707 or the subsequent paragraph. I shall vote for the rates offered by the committee. There is only a single point which I desire to make in regard to a peculiar condition which arises in the summer as to the use of cream. But before coming to the point to which I allude, I desire to say a word about the continual reiteration of the statement that we are destroying our foreign trade and that the emergency tariff has already destroyed our foreign trade. That is an allegation easy to make and impossible to prove, because the facts are the other way.

There has been a general decline in the world trade since the war, owing to the fact that the purchasing power of the nations has been enormously diminished. It is not peculiar to the United States; it is common to every nation which was engaged in the war. In all cases their imports and exports have declined below what they were during the feverish and unnatural stimulus of war conditions, and the only way in which to make an intelligent comparison is to take the level of pre-war prices and then determine the relation of the various nations to that pre-war level. That has been done by the Government through the Department of Commerce with the best statistics that can possibly be gathered. The result of those statistics, taking the pre-war level of 1914 at 100, shows that the United States has held its trade with less reduction than any other power, and also that the increase which has begun has progressed further in our case.

I wish to quote from the report of the Secretary of Commerce. The Secretary prefaces his statement of the figures by saying:

> As a matter of fact, when we consider the diminished purchasing capacity of the civilized world, caused by the war, we are not sure whether we are even justified in adding to our pre-war level the average pre-war normal increase to cover the period since the outbreak of the war. While this reservation may seem superfluous, there is reason to believe that it has not been sufficiently emphasized in some of the popular discussions of our foreign trade.

Taking the foreign trade of the United States, the United Kingdom, France, and Germany before and after the war and taking 100 as the 1913 level, it appears that the imports ratio of 1921 to 1913 shows the United States at 133, the United Kingdom at 112, France at 108, and Germany at 41. The exports ratio of 1921 to 1913 shows the United States at 191, the United Kingdom at 101, a difference of 90 points in our favor, France 121, and Germany 36.

Mr. President, that shows the enormous decline, of course, in the German trade, but it also shows that the United States has bought and sold far more and is far nearer the 1913 level than any other country, for the simple reason that the same conditions work the same results.

The total trade ratio of 1921 to 1913 is 164 in the United States, 107 in the United Kingdom, 114 in France, and 39 in Germany. It is not merely that we have held our trade with less diminution than any other country, but we have improved it over the pre-war basis. Despite the hard times and the general decline throughout the world of all trade, we have kept our lead and improved our situation.

I will now give some direct figures. These come from the Department of Commerce, and I shall give nothing below the thousands. In 1913 the exports of the United States were $2,364,500,000 and in 1921 they were $4,485,100,000. In the United Kingdom in 1913 the exports were $3,089,363,000 and in 1921 $3,118,686,000, showing that while we have nearly doubled our exports as compared with 1913, in the year 1921, which was the worst year from a business point of view that we have had, Great Britain has not attained to the pre-war level, and at the pre-war level she exported nearly a billion dollars more than we did.

France in 1913 exported $1,327,682,000 and in 1921 exported $1,606,570,000. It is remarkable, in my judgment, that France and Great Britain have recovered so far as they have. Germany exported in 1913 $2,403,142,000, a total of more than we exported in that year, and her exports in the year 1921 were $858,292,000. The ratio of 1921 to 1913 was, the United States 191, the United Kingdom 101, France 121, and Germany 36.

We hear a great deal about destroying our imports and therefore being unable, as we do not buy from foreign countries, to sell anything to them. In 1913 the imports of the United States were $1,893,900,000. In 1921 our imports were $2,509,000,000. In the United Kingdom the imports in 1913 were $3,741,048,000 and in 1921 were $4,182,713,000. Her imports had increased out of proportion to her exports. France imported $1,625,317,000 in 1913 and $1,755,633,000 in 1921. Germany's imports in 1913 were $2,563,185,000 and her imports in 1921 were $1,062,684,000. Her imports had not declined to the same extent as her exports. The ratio in imports was 133 for the United States, 112 for the United Kingdom, 106 for France, and 41 for Germany.

Mr. President, these very simple figures show what our trade has been during the year 1921 and that the emergency tariff has certainly had no effect whatever on our exports or imports. As for the reductions, with us, as with everybody else, they are accounted for by the decline of purchasing power throughout the world. It could not be otherwise. The emergency tariff law, while it undoubtedly caused great encouragement and helped the agricultural interests, had no effect, in my judgment, upon our general commerce with the world. In fact, Mr. President, the argument as to the destruction of our foreign trade is in no wise different from that which has come from the same sources in the Senate in previous years, and is based on the idea of the isolation of the United States. Mr. President, the whole world can not isolate the United States, and the United States has no intention of being isolated in her trade and economic relations. We can maintain our commerce, and maintain it at a higher level, considering the decline since the pre-war period, with the tariff which we propose to impose. The best thing the United States can do, in my judgment, not only for herself but for the business of the world, is to build up her own prosperity. We shall not have prosperity in this country unless, so far as possible, we maintain the scale of American living; in other words, the first thing for the United States to do in order to recover her position—I will not say "recover her position," for the United States is in a better position to-day than any other nation in the world to maintain and advance her position—is to see to it, first, that our own people are employed.

I know the difficulties which confront any action we may now take in regard to tariff duties, because there is injected into the situation a condition which we never before had to meet, and that is the situation which is caused by the depreciated currencies of the world. Such a condition casts a doubt on the accuracy of any estimate of difference in cost; it is unavoidable; but, Mr. President, I agree entirely with the position taken by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]; if there is a doubt, I for one propose to resolve that doubt in favor of the American producer. So far as I have anything to do with it, I propose to do all I can to build up the business of the United States. That can not be done without protective duties, owing to the condition of the currencies of foreign nations as well as to the lower cost of labor abroad, it can not possibly be done unless we give the opportunity which the protective tariff will give, in my opinion, to our own operatives and farmers.

Mr. President, the pressure caused by the abnormal depreciation of currencies has been so strong that even free-trade England has been compelled to impose duties on some imported articles in order to protect her own industries against the German invasion; and although Germany is still far behind the pre-war level, she is constantly working up. She has, in addition to a lower labor cost, the great advantage—a false advantage, and one that will bring no good in the long run—the temporary advantage of a greatly depreciated currency. That makes abnormally cheap what she produces and what she exports to us.

Mr. President, I have been led away from the very small point I wished to make in regard to the pending paragraph. I am entirely in favor of the duties proposed by the committee in this instance. The only point which I think deserves consideration by the committee is that there is a seasonal period in which it is simply impossible for the crowded population of New England to get cream without importing it from Canada. That season lasts some four months. The people in New England can not get all of their cream at home; it is not as yet produced there in sufficient quantities. I wish to do everything I possibly can to help the farmers, and especially the farmers of northern New England, who need protection. I do not think the slight amendment which I propose can possibly do any harm, and it will, in my judgment, to a certain extent be a relief in prices to the people of northern New England.

What I propose is to strike out, in paragraph 707, page 101, lines 5, 6 and 7, and in lieu thereof to insert:

Sour cream and cream imported for manufacture into butter or cheese, 22 cents per gallon—

That is substantially the rate proposed by the Senate committee—

pasteurized sweet cream for use other than manufacture into butter and cheese imported subject to the restrictions imposed and under the provisions of section —— of this act—

The adoption of the amendment will require a new section in this proposed act—

10 cents per gallon.

That is the rate carried in the bill as it came from the other House. The only reason that I have for suggesting this modification to the committee is the fact that I have stated as to the irregular supply of cream in New England, where a few hot days will create a shortage in spite of the Canadian supply; and without that supply it will be impossible practically for the masses of the people to have any cream; they will be forced to use as a substitute butter in some form.

My amendment will prevent the cream being used for any purpose except for table use; under the amendment the cream could not be used for the making of butter; and the principal purpose of the protection, as I understand, is to give to the dairymen of northern New England and northern New York a fair chance to make butter.

The Boston market, which takes the bulk of the cream imported, uses less than 4 per cent in the winter months, but the quantity runs up to 10 or 12 per cent in the summer. It is that which has led me to bring this suggestion to the attention of the committee, in the hope that they may be willing to accept the amendment and consider it. I think there is some good reason for it.

It must be remembered—what is often overlooked—that the population of the New England States, comprising a comparatively small territory, numbers 7,400,000, and with New-York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, which territorially make up a small portion of this great country of ours, there are 29,662,000 people, or more than a quarter of the entire population of the United States. Southern New England, where I live, is very densely populated. My own State, which has an area of only 8,000 square miles, has a population of 4,000,000; and it has seemed to me that it is not unreasonable—and certainly it can do no harm to the farmers, whom I desire in every way to protect and aid—to ask, in order to meet the seasonal difficulties, that this slight exception be made in reference to one article, taking care to provide that it shall not be converted into any other. I hope that the committee may be willing to consider that proposition.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. Did I understand him to say that the reduction which he proposes in the duty on cream will apply only to cream which is used for a specific purpose?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. And that the cream is not to be converted into some other product?

Mr. LODGE. The amendment so provides and if it should be adopted an additional section would have to be added to the bill to enforce it, so that the cream could not be used for the production of butter or cheese.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment proposed by my colleague to the committee amendment may be read, and I should like to ask my colleague to which bracket of paragraph 707 his amendment applies? I understand it applies merely to cream.

Mr. LODGE. It applies to the latter portion of paragraph 707. I will send the amendment to the desk.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment reported by the committee on page 101, line 5, after the word "cream," by striking out all of the remainder of the paragraph and to insert:

Sour cream and cream imported for manufacture into butter or cheese, 22 cents per gallon; pasteurized sweet cream for use other that manufacture into butter or cheese imported subject to the restrictions imposed and under the provisions of section —— of this act, 10 cents per gallon.

Then follows the draft of a proposed section to enforce the provisions of the amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I understand that the only importations of cream from Canada are of the kind used for household purposes, not for butter making. The amendment of my colleague will help, but I would go further and make the rate a flat 10 per cent. I shall take pleasure in voting for the amendment, and I am sure most of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber will be glad to vote for the lower rate even if it does not go as far as desired.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I can see, I think, two serious objections to this proposal. First, there is the administrative objection. It proposes to compel the Treasury Department to determine the use for which the cream is imported and to require them to follow it through to the end to see that it is not used for any other purpose than that specified. Very well. Then, suppose that 40 gallons of cream are imported not to be used for butter, but sweet cream to be used on the table, and in the hot days of July there is a slight delay in delivery and the cream sours. It might still be used to make butter, but under the proposal of the Senator from Massachusetts, it could not be used for that purpose because the amendment seeks to inhibit its use for butter, the cream having ben imported for table use only and not for any other kind of use.

I am willing to say that I could not see very much use in putting sour milk and buttermilk in this provision at all. Candidly, I did not think it was worth the printer's ink that was used in printing it, so far as the trade is concerned; but others did think that it was important, and therefore it was included.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. My amendment covers sour cream at the same rate as the committee amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know, but the point that I want to make clear to the Senator from Massachusetts is this: It may be imported as sweet milk and for a purpose other than making butter. Then, suppose it sours before it can be used upon the table. What are you going to do with it?

Mr. LODGE. The loss falls on the importer, does it not?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; of course the loss would be on the importer; I will admit that; but especially during the hot months, with delays in moving and strikes and trouble upon trains, and so forth, that is liable to happen very often. If there really were a seasonal demand for a greater amount of cream than the farmers in New England can produce during the hot months, I would sooner see the bill changed so as to carry a lower rate of duty during those months, thus avoiding the administrative difficulties that it seems to me would necessarily arise.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say that in case the milk or cream soured, or became unfit for table use, it would then be a loss to the importer. Suppose that were to occur after it had passed the importer and had been purchased by the individuals who proposed to distribute it, and it then became unfit for table use?

Mr. McCUMBER. It would then be a loss to the purchaser, because he could not use it for any other purpose than that of table use as sweet cream. In other words, he could not use it for butter.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH. I think, if the Senator will allow me, that the suggestion made by the Senator from North Dakota would be the more practicable—to have a seasonal tariff to cover the period when this material might be brought in in the proper form.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is what I have just suggested, if we have any change.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the souring of cream is not confined to Canadian cream. A man may buy cream from an American farmer and it may turn sour on his hands, and he has to take that risk.

Mr. McCUMBER. But he can then make it into butter.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; if he is a dairyman he can.

Mr. McCUMBER. He can not make it into butter if it is imported for other use.

Mr. LODGE. But the man who buys it—I am speaking of the city consumer, and that is nine-tenths of our population—can not make it into butter. He loses it. It is a dead loss, of course, and he has to take his chances. I am not saying that he does not have to take a chance.

Mr. McCUMBER. Sour cream can make good butter all right.

Mr. LODGE. If it goes to a dairyman, yes; but what about the man who buys a small quantity in the city?

Mr. McCUMBER. If he has a churn, he can make it. If not, he can not.

Mr. LODGE. We have about three and a half million people who do not live on farms and can not make butter.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that this cream might keep sweet under certain temperatures for 48 hours or 72 hours, but if a thunderstorm came up it would sour in 12 hours.

Mr. McCUMBER. It might.

Mr. SMITH. It would sour in an hour.

Mr. POMERENE. So we would have serious difficulty in administering it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can see the difficulties involved in administering that provision, the cost of administration, and so forth. I would suggest that it would be far better to lower the duty during those few months than to attempt to differentiate on duties between the uses for which it is intended.

Mr. POMERENE. I invite the Senator's attention to a reduction of this entire duty so that it may be brought down to a reasonable point, and let us all vote for it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that I will move as a substitute for it simply to strike out on line 5 all after the word "cream" to the end of the paragraph and insert after the word "cream" the words "10 cents per gallon during the months of June, July, August, and September." I understand that the Senator will accept that change; and I move that as a substitute, if it is agreeable to by colleague.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that there are two pending amendments that would come before that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that, if that were done and we simply put in there the words that the Senator suggests, there would then be a duty upon cream during those months only.

Mr. SMITH. If I may make a suggestion, that can be easily remedied by providing that the rate of 22½ cents shall apply during the other months.

Mr. SMOOT. It was worded differently in the Senator's amendment, however, and that is what I wanted to call his attention to.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I thank the Senator. I will add to my amendment that during the remaining months of the year the rate of 22½ cents shall prevail.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I first say generally that I simply suggested that as a better plan than the one offered by the senior Senator from Massachusetts. I did not mean thereby to say that I thought that during those hot months the farmers of New England can not produce all the cream that is necessary for the New England market, provided they have a price that will justify them in saving the cream, not making it into butter but selling it as cream.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I understood the Senator to say that he would prefer to have the rate lowered for certain months of the year, to wit, the summer months.

Mr. McCUMBER. As between the two.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I understand that the Senator is opposed to the amendment of my colleague, but that he would prefer the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I said that if I were to have an amendment at all I should prefer the latter.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. At the proper time, then, I will move the amendment that I have suggested.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is not now the time to offer a substitute?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are two committee amendments yet to be disposed of.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The pending question is on page 101, line 3, where the committee propose to strike out "1 cent" and insert "2½ cents."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I am not going to prolong the discussion upon this item, except to put into the RECORD a paragraph from the report of the Tariff Commission on the operation of rates in the emergency tariff law. I want to call particular attention to this language under the topic of "Milk":

> The tariff problem is a local one, confined largely to the New England States. With the expanding demand for market milk in Boston and other large New England cities, the territory supplying these cities, especially Boston, has been enlarged to include Vermont, Maine, eastern New York, and points in Quebec south of the St. Lawrence. But, according to figures compiled by the Boston Chamber of Commerce, the proportion of Boston's supply of milk coming from Canada is very small, even in the summer months—the period of largest demand. From August to October, 1919, it amounted to only about 1 per cent. Prices of milk in Boston are generally higher than in New York, Philadelphia, and western cities, but it is doubtful if restriction of imports would greatly affect prices of milk in New England because of the small proportion they have constituted of the whole supply.

It is very apparent that this increased duty on milk will not increase the price to the producer. The importations are trivial. The milk problem in New England is a transportation problem and a middleman's problem. The farmer will not get any benefit from this duty, but the middleman will get a benefit and the consumers will be punished to the extent of an increase in the price of milk.

I must ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon that item—paragraph 707.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want also to quote from the report of the Tariff Commission on the operation of rates in the emergency tariff act. I will insert the table on page 124, and the paragraph immediately succeeding it; but I call attention to this statement in the latter paragraph. The Tariff Commission says:

> The relatively small duty upon milk in the emergency tariff, therefore, appears to have had little influence in retarding imports. Neither is it likely materially to have affected prices because of the very small place imports have in New England's supply.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is practically the same thing as in the recent report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from North Dakota will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Canadian exports of fresh milk to the United States.[1]

Months.	Quantity.		Value.
	1920	1921	1920	1921
	Gallons.	Gallons.

August	133,717	116,895	36,253	24,429

[1] Weekly Bulletin, Commercial Intelligence Service, Department of Trade and Commerce, Canada. Canadian exports are given, since imports of fresh milk, by months, are grouped with imports of cream in the United States.

[2] 1921.

[3] 1922.

Imports of milk under the emergency tariff: A month by month comparison of exports of milk from Canada to the United States shows that after the passage of the emergency act, from July through November, imports decreased as compared with the amounts coming in during the corresponding months in 1920. During the nine months, June 1, 1921, to February, 1922, 1,096,308 gallons came in, compared with 1,244,987 gallons during the corresponding nine months of the previous year of free entry. The relatively small duty upon milk in the emergency tariff, therefore, appears to have had little influence in retarding imports. Neither is it likely materially to have affected prices because of the very small place imports have in New England's supply.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, before this vote is taken I want to refer as briefly as I may be able to do to the question which has been raised by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] regarding New England conditions. The position he has taken, in which he has argued exclusively for the consumers in that section of the country and to the sacrifice of the producers of dairy products in New England and in the West, is a position which has been assumed by the Democratic Party for a great many years, and, naturally enough, because that party does not believe, and boldly says so, in a tariff for protection.

There are people in New England who do believe in a tariff for protection. New England has been a stronghold for the advocates of that system, and it is only through that system that New England has been able to maintain herself against the disadvantages which she suffers from location and from climate and from environment. The policy of Canada, on the other hand, has always been for free trade, so far as she is concerned, in the natural products of the Dominion. That is to say, Canada naturally enough, because her population is so much less than ours, and because our markets are so attractive to her, has always, by every effort imaginable, sought to secure the American markets for her natural products; and at the same time Canada has always maintained the stiffest tariff wall against the products of New England and of the rest of the United States where they have been improved by human labor—the manufactures.

Going back to 1854, under the administration of Franklin Pierce, a treaty was made with Great Britain by which the natural products of Canada might have a free market in the United States. That treaty remained in force for 11 years; and the experience which the United States had under that treaty, particularly the eastern portion of the United States, was such that almost without opposition a joint resolution of Congress was adopted by which that treaty was abrogated. From that day to this Canada has been making a strong attempt to again secure an open door into the United States markets for her natural products.

During both of General Grant's administrations as President such an attempt was made, and the President sent to the Congress of the United States messages in which the matter was fully discussed and opposed, and no action was taken. The matter again came up during the administration of President Harrison, and Canada again made the attempt to open the doors of the United States for the introduction of her agricultural and dairy products, but holding all the whole stiffly to her protective policy regarding all manufactured products of the United States.

That being the case, there must be a reason for it, and if you will look at New England's development you will find that reason. Between the years 1880 and 1900, a period of 20 years, and under the protective policy of the Government there were more than 25,000 new manufacturing establishments established and put into operation in New England. New capital, amounting to more than a billion dollars, was put into these enterprises. The population increased until it now amounts to 7,400,856.

The State of Rhode Island has become a great manufacturing center; also the States of Connecticut and Massachusetts. But we have the States of Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont, which are more purely agricultural, and for them we claim, as Republicans, that they shall be protected in their products, and that they are entitled to this market which we have built up in New England for their products, and we claim it strongly. We believe that a policy which has built up Rhode Island and Massachusetts and Connecticut as manufacturing States and to become a great consuming territory should be applied also to the agricultural States, and that they be given a reasonable protection upon their products.

Let us see what kind of a market New England makes for Canada. According to the census of 1910, New England produced one-half of all the cotton goods produced in America. She produced 60 per cent of the woolens, 50 per cent of the brass and bronze goods, 42 per cent of the jewelry, 35 per cent of the paper, wood pulp, and so forth. In fact, New England was producing substantially one-eighth of the manufactured products of the country, and, of course, that brought in a great consuming population, one demanding dairy products and foodstuffs of every kind, and New England farmers were put to their test in supplying that want.

During that period the Vermont farmer, the Maine farmer, and the New Hampshire farmer had not been prospering. They had been following the old lines of competing with the West in raising cattle and in raising grain, but with this new market created near his own door the farmer was wise enough to change his policy and suit his products to the markets that had been so built up.

How did he do it? He naturally turned to dairying, to the production of butter and milk and cream for this market. That was done to such an extent that in 1910 in the State of Vermont—with which, of course, I am better acquainted than with any other—almost every farmer had adopted a new policy. They had thoroughbred herds of cattle on their farms, they were farming scientifically, feeding scientifically, caring for their cattle scientifically; they were preparing their products scientifically, and they found that it paid, because they had this whole near-by market to supply, and the distances from the farms to the market were very short. The result was that in 1910, as the census for that year shows, Vermont alone was producing nearly one-half of all the butter that was produced in New England.

Why do they oppose letting down the tariff bars to permit Canada to come in? Let us look at that question for a moment candidly. In 1920 the population of New England as a whole was 7,400,856 souls. The last census taken in Canada, in 1911, showed that in the whole Dominion of Canada, between the two oceans, there were only 7,206,643 souls. In other words, in 1911 Canada had a population of about 200,000 less than that of New England.

To be fair with Canada, its Statesmen's Year Book shows that in 1920 the estimates of their population had gone up to 9,000,000 souls. Leave it at that. In little New England there was a market of over 7,000,000 people, which the whole Dominion of Canada, from ocean to ocean, with a population on that assumption of 9,000,000 souls, would like.

But that is not the whole story. Lying right north of New England is the dairying section of Canada. There is the Province of Quebec, which has been referred to by the junior Senator from Massachusetts. It is the old French colony of the Dominion. That Province lies directly north of and contiguous to New England. It is conveniently situated for trade with Boston and other of the great central markets. She has a population of 1,612,000, which, as I figure it roughly in my head, is about one-sixth of the population of Canada, and that is greater than that of New Hampshire, Maine, and Vermont combined.

Seventy-eight per cent of the people in that Province are French-Canadian, and they and their ancestors have occupied it from the beginning. They are one of the most industrious, careful, painstaking peoples in the world. It would be a pleasure for any of you to drive through that territory and to see the primitive way in which they live, the primitive methods of industry which prevail among them, the simplicity of their lives, and the way in which they cut down expenses and produce their goods at the least possible cost. About 22 per cent of the population is made up of English, Scotch, and Irish. It is essentially an agricultural Province, and produces 30 per cent of the entire output of farm products in the entire Dominion of Canada.

It goes further than that. In horses, cows, sheep, fruits, vegetables, meats, of animals slaughtered on the farm, and dairy products, which will mostly come in competition with Vermont's chief agricultural asset, she produces 67½ per cent of Canada's entire product.

There you have Quebec, lying directly north of New England, with a population greater than that of New Hampshire, Maine, and Vermont, producing 67½ per cent of all the products I have mentioned produced between the Atlantic and the Pacific in Canada, and she is asking the privilege of coming into the United States without paying duties, to unload her products upon our consuming population, and in competition with the New England farmers.

The Democratic Party stands for a tariff for revenue only, and I am not criticizing them; I am recognizing a fact which is stated daily on this floor and which is freely admitted by them; but because of that policy the Democratic Party has favored every proposition that has been made for the purpose of letting those products from Canada come in.

My friend the junior Senator from Massachusetts, of course, has lived in these populous communities. Of course, he is a consumer himself and has sympathy for the consuming class. I am a consumer, but I happen to live in the agricultural region of Vermont, and I know what the conditions are and am interested in them.

Let us look for a moment and see what was done under the provisions of the existing law. It will be remembered that under the Payne-Aldrich law there was a duty of 2 cents per gallon upon milk, but under the Underwood-Simmons law it comes in free. The Senate committee proposition is to place a duty of 2½ cents per gallon upon milk, not that they care to place one-half a cent upon it for any reason except that if we impose a duty of 8 cents a pound on butter, as the committee has recommended, the duty on milk should be 2½ cents per gallon to equalize the rates. I expect that the committee in adjusting all of these rates on milk, cream, and condensed milk have followed that plan.

What has been the effect of the Underwood-Simmons bill upon Canada's exports?

In the statistics relating to animals and their products we include cattle, horses, sheep, hogs, bacon, ham, mutton, pork, poultry, butter, cheese, eggs, milk, and cream. In 1912 and 1913 Canada's exports of such products to the United Kingdom amounted to $67,000,000 worth, in round numbers. They exported to the United States $22,000,000 worth, in round numbers. After the passage of the Underwood-Simmons law, in 1914 and 1915, Canada exported to the mother country $64,000,000 worth, in round numbers, and to the United States $58,000,000 worth, in round numbers, thus showing that under the Payne-Aldrich law in the years 1912 and 1913 Canada exported to the United States in animals and their products only about one-third as much as she did to the mother country, while during the two years of the Underwood-Simmons law Canada exported to the United States in animals and their products over nine-tenths as much as she did to the United Kingdom.

In other words, her surplus products instead of going so largely to Great Britain were coming to the United States.

On the question of milk I want to call attention to the effect of that law. For the seven years prior to the enactment of the Underwood-Simmons law the entire importations of milk were 486,004 gallons. That was under a 2-cent duty. Under the Underwood-Simmons law, which imposed no duty, in the next seven years the importations were over 11,092,362 gallons of milk. In other words, during the seven years from 1914 to 1920, under free trade, the importations of milk were twenty-two times greater than they were in the previous six years under the Payne-Aldrich law. That shows the effect of the Underwood-Simmons law upon the introduction of milk.

Of the 2,077,000 pounds of cream imported in 1915, 1,735,000 pounds came over the Vermont border.

So we are not without evidence that Canada not only depends upon New England as a market but is using it almost exclusively.

Coming now to the question of preserved milk, I want to call attention to some significant facts. During the seven years prior to the enactment of the present Democratic law the importations of preserved milk amounted to only 4,419,314 pounds, but with the duty taken off, in the seven years from 1913 to 1920 the amount jumped from 4,419,314 pounds annually to 152,950,000 pounds. In other words, in the seven years from 1914 to 1920 under the present law importations of condensed and evaporated milk were thirty-four and one-half times greater than they were during the seven preceding years under the Payne-Aldrich law.

Turning now to the subject of butter, we find that under the Payne-Aldrich law, which laid a duty of 6 cents per pound upon butter, in the six years prior to 1913 we imported 2,947,408 pounds, but under the existing law, where the duty was reduced to 2½ cents per pound, we imported during the next seven years, 1913 to 1920, 21,977,000 pounds of butter. It appears that in two different years, 1919 and 1920, there came in substantially one-half as much butter from Canada as was produced in New England. That made a very stiff competition.

I want to go back for a moment to what New England has had to do in order to live. I have stated that Vermont in 1910 had come to be one of the great butter-making States of the Union. When 1920 came Vermont met new conditions. Butter is produced in all parts of the country and has become a standardized product. In the meantime the demand for milk and cream in the New England markets was becoming stronger. Vermont was finding it was better to modify her policy, and so she began changing her dairy herds and putting in those that would produce a large flowage of milk, suitable for food purposes. To-day Vermont is producing less butter, but a much larger proportion of milk and cream for the market. Collection districts have been created and extended and routes established. So that every night the milk trains from northern New England are moving toward Boston collecting and carrying the milk while it is perfectly fresh. I know whereof I speak, because at my country home I am surrounded by dairy farmers, and I have seen them go out of the butter business and confine themselves more largely to the production of milk and of cream. That is our tendency to-day.

I see no need whatever for the amendment proposed by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I have examined the subject and have examined it carefully. I live up in the country, and I know what our farmers do.

I know that they can produce milk for the market and that they can produce cream for the market, and they are doing it. They are already decreasing the amount of butter they are making and turning their products to meet the demand of the New England market. They are perfectly willing, when they can not compete with western butter and can get a better price for their cream and milk, to adopt new methods. It is but the exercise of common sense that they should do so. So I am standing here thus briefly to call attention to the situation in New England and to say that this is a continuation of the old fight that has been going on for more than 50 years.

Now, we have that splendid market in New England. The consumers are prospering and they can afford to pay a reasonable price for milk. In looking into the conditions of the laboring classes in New England as they exist in the labor centers there, I find that from June, 1920, to March, 1922, the decrease in the cost of living had been 22.9 per cent and from December, 1921, to March, 1922, 4.2 per cent. How is it with the price of laborers? How is it with this consuming class?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will yield in just a moment, if the Senator please. I find that the average hourly wage between May 5, 1920, and May 15, 1921, showed a slight increase, from 88 to 91 cents an hour, or over 3 per cent. We know from our experience in the committee just what the situation is. We had manufacturers before us from every State in the Union, and when we asked them about the wages they were paying they said they were paying from 100 to 140 per cent more wages than they were prior to the World War. When we put the question to them as to how much those wages had been reduced, almost invariably the answer was about 20 per cent.

Now, we all know that wages are high in the United States. We know that in the great centers where men are working they are getting fine rates of wages. To make the plea which the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has made in their behalf is very natural, and I am not criticizing it at all, but when he looks at the mountains of Vermont and among the lakes of Maine and New Hampshire and, as the chairman of the Finance Committee has said, looks upon a people who are up at 4 o'clock in the morning and working until it is time to go to bed at night, he surely ought to realize that it is not any more than fair that they, being Americans, paying their taxes for their schools and for their highways and for the maintenance of their municipalities, should have the New England market. Is it fair that the Province of Quebec, lying immediately north of us, contributing not a cent to our public institutions or to our welfare, should have the bars taken down in order that their products may come in free in competition with ours? I can not see it.

I now yield to the junior Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I simply want to direct the Senator's attention to one thought. I do not want him to misrepresent my position or that of my colleague, so far as I can speak for him, with reference to cream. I am not asking that cream be put upon the free list. I am not asking that milk be put upon the free list. I am simply asking the Senator to give us some reason—in addition to what he has already given and which has been well given—why there should be an increase of 350 per cent in the rate. My colleague by his motion and I by my motion propose an increase of 100 per cent in the rate on the small amount of cream that comes over, and I want to know why it is believed that there is such a threatened danger to the dairy industry of New England as to require an increase of 350 per cent.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have not figured the percentages.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Why can not the Senator accept a reasonable increase in the duty?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will say just this in reply to the Senator. When the war came on enormous wages were offered by the manufacturers in the Senator's own State. Those who were producing munitions of war, those who were producing woolens and the other classes of goods which went into consumption during the war, sent up to Vermont and took the boys off our farms and paid them 50 cents an hour as apprentices, simply as apprentices. A boy who could do nothing but sit before a simple lathe and watch that alone got 50 cents an hour, without any experience whatever. That went on until the agricultural regions were drained of labor and the cost of the management of farms became such that the farmers were compelled not only to pay exorbitant prices for labor but to go to large expense in putting in modern improvements. If the Senator would go into any of those States now he would find the mechanical milkers established, and in practically every stable he would see one man go through and, with the aid of machinery, milk 40 or 50 cows in a comparatively short time.

Then came another proposition. In New England we can not compete with the great West in the production of cereals. It has come to such a point that the corn that is fed to our cattle all comes from the West, with the cost of transportation charges added to the cost of the corn. So I might go on and multiply the increased expenses and show that our farmers to-day are just as hard pinched with present prices as they were before the war and are compelled to work just as hard as they were before the war in order to maintain their farms and to carry on their business. They are perfectly willing to work hard, but they are American citizens, and the rule that is applied to other classes of producers in the country they claim ought to be applied to them and to their products, and that the great advance of which the Senator speaks and which he fears may come shall not be done away with by importations from the Province of Quebec, which is a close neighbor, a very thrifty neighbor, and a very thrifty competitor.

I ask permission to have inserted as a part of my remarks a brief which has been prepared by order of the New England Dairy Tariff Committee, by W. H. Bronson, statistician, New England Milk Producers' Association; by O. M. Camburn, director of dairying, Massachusetts Department of Agriculture; and G. C. White, professor of dairy husbandry, Connecticut Agricultural College. This brief refers to matters which I have discussed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Without objection, permission is granted.

The brief is as follows:

BRIEF OF THE NEW ENGLAND DAIRY TARIFF COMMITTEE ON CERTAIN DAIRY PRODUCTS.

The New England Dairy Tariff Committee begs leave to present some facts which should be taken into consideration in the framing of a tariff on milk, cream, and butter. We believe that the United States producers of dairy products should be given protection equal to the difference in the cost of production between the United States and competing foreign countries. The importance of the dairy industry in New England is shown by the fact that dairy products valued at over $94,000,000 were sold from New England farms in 1919.

The cost of production secured for the New England States and the Province of Quebec for the month of April show a difference at this time in favor of Quebec of 4 cents per gallon for milk, 40 cents per gallon for cream, and 10 cents per pound for butter. It is confidently believed by the committee that the costs secured for this period are nearer together than in normal times, since the decline in the cost of labor and feed is taking place near the industrial centers more rapidly than in the outlying districts. It was also evident from the household conveniences found in the Canadian Province that dairy farming has been more profitable there, due possibly to the more general engagement of the wives and daughters in the milking and other dairy operations in Quebec.

There has been a continuous decrease in the number of farms in operation and the number of cows in New England for 30 years. This is due to only one thing—unattractive returns, often actual losses. That live-stock husbandry is necessary to the maintenance of fertility and to providing a market for roughages produced in New England is undisputed. On a general scale dairying offers the only solution to this problem.

The use of dairy products by the urban population is greatly below what it should be. This is due to two things, viz, lack of appreciation of their importance, and the difficulty of securing a fresh, uniform, wholesome product from remote regions. Business men everywhere agree that without a prosperous and thriving agriculture a contented industrial class is impossible.

1. ORGANIZATION OF THE COMMITTEE.

As a result of unfavorable conditions existing in the dairy industry, which have been developing for the past 20 years, there was brought together a representative body at Boston on February 24, 1921, to consider a tariff on dairy products, with a view to bringing these matters to the attention of the United States Congress. Representatives from practically all of the State dairymen's associations, State departments of agriculture, State granges, State agricultural colleges, and State farm bureaus of the New England States were present. In addition, the Eastern New York Milk Producers and the New England Milk Producers' Association were represented.

As a result of the action taken at this meeting, each State group selected a representative to carry out the necessary work of formulating a tariff schedule. This group consists of W. N. Cady, Vermont State Grange, chairman; O. M. Camburn, Massachusetts State Department of Agriculture, secretary; J. W. Alsop, Connecticut Dairymen's Association; H. N. Sawyer, New Hampshire Farm Bureau; M. D. Jones, Maine Agricultural College; G. R. Little, Eastern New York Milk Producers; J. J. Dunn, Rhode Island State Department of Agriculture; and W. H. Bronson, New England Milk Producers' Association.

2. THE SCHEDULE OF TARIFFS NEEDED.

For the protection of the dairy industry in New England the committee has formulated the following minimum duties: For milk, 3½ cents per gallon; for cream, 35 cents per gallon; for butter, 10 cents per pound.

3. DAIRY CONDITIONS.

In New England the number of farms, as reported by the United States census, have shown a marked decline in each State for 20 years, ranging from 11 per cent in Vermont to 24 per cent in New Hampshire since 1910. Up to the beginning of high prices for dairy products in 1915–16, the number of cows in New England had steadily declined. Dairying is the main source of income to the New England farmer. Adequate protection on dairy products would do considerable to bring agriculture in New England back to a more prosperous condition.

4. COST OF PRODUCTION.

The cost of production of dairy products in the Province of Quebec is lower than it is in the New England States.

Milk.—The cost of producing 1 gallon of 3.7 per cent milk is $0.041 cheaper in the Province of Quebec, Canada, than in the New England States. Transportation charges to Boston favor the New England producer to the amount of $0.0065 per gallon, which, when subtracted from the $0.041, leaves the difference in favor of Quebec of $0.0345 per gallon.

Cream.—Based on these costs, the cost of producing 1 gallon of 36 per cent cream is $0.40 per gallon less in Quebec than in New England. Transportation charges to Boston is $0.006 per gallon less from the New England center of production than from the Quebec center of production, which, when subtracted from the $0.40, leaves the difference in favor of Quebec of $0.394 per gallon.

Butter.—Based on the costs of milk, the cost of producing 1 pound of butter is 10 cents less in Quebec than in New England. Transportation to Boston of butter from the center of production in New England is $0.0003 per pound less than from the Quebec shipping point, which, when subtracted from the 10 cents, leaves the difference in favor of Quebec of $0.0997 per pound.

5. SPECIFIC DUTY DESIRABLE ON MILK, CREAM, AND BUTTER.

From an administrative standpoint, and due to trade practices, a specific duty on milk, cream, and butter is desirable.

6. CHANGE IN PRICE LEVEL MAKES HIGHER DUTY NECESSARY TO PROVIDE SAME PROTECTION.

In 1897, when butter sold for 20 cents per pound, a duty of 6 cents per pound was adopted. At the present price level of butter, a duty of at least 10 cents per pound would be necessary to give the same protection.

7. CANADIAN MILK AND CREAM NOT NECESSARY TO SUPPLY NEW ENGLAND'S NEEDS.

The New England farmer can supply New England's needs for milk and cream. In 1919, when 416,000 gallons of cream were shipped from Canadian points to Boston, the butter produced by New England creameries would have provided 4,500,000 gallons of 36 per cent cream, or eleven times the amount necessary to replace the Canadian shipments.

The butter production in New England would have supplied nine times the amount needed to replace Canadian cream shipments to Boston for the month of heaviest shipment—June. The butter would also have provided a large amount of additional milk if more milk had been needed.

8. BUTTER IMPORTS FROM CANADA.

Butter imports from Canada have increased from 350,000 pounds in 1913 to over 9,000,000 pounds in 1920.

9. STANDARD OF LIVING.

The standard of living in Quebec is lower than in New England when measured by the question as to whether or not the wife and daughters help milk, and higher than in New England when measured by the question as to whether or not the house has conveniences, such as running water, furnaces, and bathrooms. The presence of these latter conveniences indicates more profitable dairy production in Quebec than in New England.

Sanitary facilities for producing milk, such as ice houses and milk houses, are much less numerous in Quebec than in New England.

10. TARIFF SCHEDULES ON OTHER PRODUCTS.

The dairy farmer deserves a protection which is as effective as that applied to other industries, in order to encourage and maintain an intelligent class in the production of this most essential product, and in the preservation of farms in a high state of fertility.

11. IMPORTED OILS A MENACE TO THE DAIRY INDUSTRY.

In recent years the consumption of oleomargarine has increased tremendously until at present 1 pound is consumed to each 2 to 3 pounds of butter eaten. The importation of vegetable oils, used largely for this purpose, has increased from 82,500,000 pounds in 1912 to 435,000,000 pounds in 1920. This has been an important factor in promoting losses to dairymen throughout the country, and it may have damaged materially the health of the Nation. The New England farmer desires to see adequate protection against these products.

12. THE IMPORTANCE OF MILK IN THE DIET.

Eminent scientists and health authorities now recognize milk and its products as the most nourishing of all foods in daily use. The vitamines, present in abundance, are essential to growth, health, reproduction, and longevity. These are supplied most abundantly in fresh milk produced near the consuming centers and from cows whose ration consists of green foods for a considerable portion of the year. In these respects New England products are superior to those of Canada as a source of vitamines.

This report was prepared in its final form by order of the New England dairy tariff committee by W. H. Bronson, statistician, New England Milk Producers' Association; O. M. Camburn, director of dairying, Massachusetts Department of Agriculture; and G. C. White, professor of dairy husbandry, Connecticut Agricultural College.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I want to commend my good friend from Vermont for his very able presentation of the viewpoint of the producers of Vermont. It could not be better said. The Senator is not a man of many words, but what he says is always entitled to a great deal of weight and is always said directly and clearly.

If I may presume to criticize the argument of the learned Senator from Vermont, I would say that the objection to it is that he has described the burden that came upon the producers of milk and cream during the war; the increased price which they had to pay for the cereals which they fed their cattle; the increased price of wages to the laborers whom they had to hire in competition with the high-priced laborers in the industrial centers of New England; but the Senator should have remembered that we are not now legislating for war conditions. The price of labor in the industrial cities has gone down; the price of labor on the farms has gone down; the price of cereals has gone down; the price of everything has gone down; the cost of production has been reduced; the cost of labor has been reduced; and yet, in the face of that fact, the Senator from Vermont asks us to preserve to the farmers of Vermont the conditions and prices which they enjoyed during the war period.

Mr. President, it comes back to what we have observed repeatedly during the discussion of this bill; a request that the manufacturer and the producer be permitted to receive the same prices and to reap the same profits, now that the war is over, that they reaped during the war. The Senator indirectly has disclosed the demand which has appeared here again and again in the discussion of these duties. He frankly states that he wants this tremendous increase in the price of cream to enable the farmer to meet the conditions of the war, the high prices and high wages of labor. This is a move to give to the farmer who sells milk and cream the same profits and the same prices that he received during the war when he paid more for his labor and more for what he consumes.

However, it is not necessary further to prolong the discussion of this important paragraph—important to the people of New England. I want to call attention to the fact that some figures have been given to me showing that even under the emergency tariff act the prices which the farmer received for milk were lower than before, and that protective tariff laws on farm products do not help the farmer. The problem in New England, I repeat—and I think the Senator will not differ very materially with me about this matter—is largely a problem of transportation and largely a problem of eliminating the wholesalers in the big cities, who take advantage of increased tariff duties to charge the consumer more, but the farmer gets no benefit. In my opinion the milk problem will not be satisfactorily settled, so far as the farmer is concerned, until some new arrangement is made in reference to the problem of transportation and the elimination of the middleman.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am ready to vote upon the items which are embraced in the pending paragraph.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I rise to call attention to a rather significant fact. I have from the beginning been very much interested in the discussion of the pending tariff bill, and I have noticed one very peculiar thing. The Democratic Senators who have occupied most of the time of the Senate in opposing the duties on manufactured articles have come from agricultural sections, but when it comes to attacking duties on agricultural commodities, duties which impose seemingly large, but not too large, rates of protection and such as favorably compare with rates upon manufactured products, Democratic opposition is presented by a Senator from a manufacturing section. That may have been simply a "happenstance," as one may say, but it seems rather remarkable to me, especially as the Senators who have spent so much time on the floor antagonizing the duties on manufactured articles are now found voting for the duties which are imposed in the agricultural schedule. It may be, as I have said, that it is purely an accident, but I can not believe it is such. To many of these eloquent Senators the tariff is evidently a local issue. To them the tariff is not so much a principle as it is a policy to be approved or opposed according as it does or does not apply to their local interests.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from Michigan certainly does not refer to me, for I have opposed the duties proposed upon manufactured products and have voted repeatedly against and have never once voted for an increased duty. I am standing on the same ground in discussing the schedule embracing agricultural products. It so happens that members of the minority of the committee have delegated the discussion of this schedule to me, but it might just as well be handled, and it would be much more abler handled, by other members of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I doubt that.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. But I have been asked to represent the minority of the committee, and I am simply performing my duty as a member of the minority.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am not finding any fault with the Senator's action. I think he has been consistent.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from Michigan has intimated that I have advocated higher duties for manufactured products; but I have not voted for one increase in the pending bill, and I have voted for every single amendment to decrease such duties. I have taken the same position regarding duties on agricultural products as I have on manufactured products.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think the Senator from Massachusetts will agree with me, however, that the Senators who have spent most of the time discussing and opposing the tariff on manufactured products are now found voting for the duties which are proposed to be imposed in the agricultural schedule.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think that is true.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think the Senate is ready to vote upon these amendments. I desire only to have a roll call upon the milk and the cream items. As to the other items, I shall be satisfied with viva voce votes. I will now ask that a yea-and-nay vote be taken upon the item relative to increasing the duty on fresh milk from 1 cent to 2½ cents per gallon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 101, paragraph 707, line 3, before the words "per gallon," the Committee on Finance proposes to strike out "1 cent" and to insert "2½ cents," so as to read:

PAR. 707. Milk, fresh, 2½ cents per gallon.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I inquire if the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the senior Senator from Virginia has not voted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He is necessarily absent, and I promised to pair with him for the day. I find, however, that I can transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER]. I do so, and vote "yea."

Mr. ERNST (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I observe he has not voted. I therefore transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. SMITH. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 18, not voting 34, as follows:

YEAS—44.

Brandegee	France	Lenroot	Poindexter
Broussard	Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Rawson
Bursum	Gooding	McCormick	Shortridge
Calder	Hale	McCumber	Smoot
Cameron	Harreld	McLean	Spencer
Capper	Johnson	McNary	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Townsend
Dillingham	Kellogg	Nicholson	Wadsworth
Edge	Keyes	Norris	Warren
Ernst	Ladd	Pepper	Watson, Ind.
Fernald	La Follette	Phipps	Willis

NAYS—18.

Ashurst	King	Sheppard	Underwood
Harris	Myers	Shields	Walsh, Mass.
Harrison	Overman	Simmons	Watson, Ga.
Heflin	Pomerene	Smith
Jones, N. Mex.	Robinson	Trammell

NOT VOTING—34.

Ball	Elkins	Nelson	Stanfield
Borah	Fletcher	New	Stanley

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

THE MOTION-PICTURE INDUSTRY.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think the Senate must sometimes weary of continuous debate on the tariff bill, interesting as it is. I think a change of subjects must sometimes be refreshing. Therefore I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate for a short time only while I make some observations upon a matter of great importance and interest which relates to proposed legislation.

Moving pictures, their educational influence for good or for bad, their growing importance as a factor in our civilization, the announced determination of those controlling the industry boldly to enter politics, and the desirability of regulation by law through censorship constitute a subject of acknowledged importance to the American people.

I have introduced in the Senate two measures relating to some phases of that subject. They were referred to committees of the Senate, where they are now pending, and I hope in the near future they may receive that degree of attention and consideration to which I believe them to be entitled and that ultimately favorable action upon them may be had.

Some months ago, when Hon. Will H. Hays, a gentleman of character, a statesman of national reputation, and a political manager of acknowledged adroitness, then a Cabinet officer of the present administration, resigned a Cabinet portfolio and accepted a position as the managerial director or advisor of the motion-picture industry of the country, with powers of unknown and somewhat undefined nature and extent, at an annual salary, as reported, of $100,000 or $150,000—I forget which—there was much speculation on the part of the public as to the cause of his being called to such work at so large a salary and as to the purposes for which it was done and what would be the nature of his work.

The owners and heads of the motion-picture industry had but recently declared, openly and boldly, that they intended to enter politics, to control or influence the election of all officials, from President to constable. There had become felt a growing tendency to regulate the motion-picture industry and its exhibitions, in the interest of good morals and wholesome education, through official censorship. Those who own and control the industry manifested pronounced opposition to any sort of official regulation or supervision, and declared it to be their intention to enter politics, with all the power and facilities of the screen for publicity and advertising, for the avowed purpose of defeating and preventing censorship of any kind. Therefore many thought Mr. Hays had been employed at such a princely salary to engineer and direct the political activities of the industry. Color was given to this idea by the report that his contract of employment extended to and was to end March 3, 1925, when it might or might not be renewed. It was charged by some that his employment was political.

What may be the nature and scope of Mr. Hays's duties has been a matter of more or less speculation to this time, and continues to be. Not a great deal of light had been had upon it until very recently.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs of the country is and for some days has been holding a national convention at Chautauqua, N. Y. Yesterday Mr. Hays appeared before the convention and addressed it upon the subject of moving pictures and the need for improvement of their moral tone—a need which is very widely felt and almost uniformly and universally admitted. It is admitted, too, to be a long-felt and very great need.

The Associated Press dispatches, appearing in this morning's newspapers, give this account of Mr. Hays's remarks in his address before the convention of Federated Women's Clubs yesterday. I read it:

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., June 28 (by the Associated Press).—Will H. Hays, head of the motion-picture producers and distributers of America, promised the delegates to the General Federation of Women's Clubs in session here to-night that moving pictures would be cleansed at their source.

It was the purpose of his organization, he said, "to establish and maintain the highest possible moral and artistic standards in film production and to develop the educational as well as the entertainment value and the general usefulness of motion pictures."

This purpose, he said, is not merely a vague gentlemen's agreement, but "a legal statement of a legal purpose by a legal organization, and no articles of association breathing a more important message could well be found."

After referring to the legal investment in the industry, Mr. Hays plunged into the cleaning-up process, which has been the subject most generally discussed by the federation delegates.

"There is one place, and one place only, where the evils can be eliminated and the good and great advantages of motion pictures retained," Mr. Hays said, "and that is at the point where and when the pictures are made. And it can be done there, and there make no mistake. There is no zone of twilight in this matter. The correction can be made, real evil can and must be kept out, the highest standard of art and taste and morals can be achieved, and it is primarily the duty of the producers to do it.

"It can not be done in a moment. Years of accumulation can not be removed in a day, and it can not be done in a practical manner without the support of the public, which support I know you will give."

As to the manner in which the club women can help, Mr. Hays said the easiest way was to refuse to patronize theaters that show objectionable pictures. He urged the federation to maintain a vigorous department for better films and to appoint better film committees in every community.

Mr. Hays asked his audience to judge his organization by the pictures now in process of making rather than by promises, declaring "they will be the proof either of our honesty of purpose or of our failure; of our ability to correct our evils ourselves or our inability to run our own business."

As for censorship, Mr. Hays said the American people were against it in all forms.

From that article it would appear that Mr. Hays's employment is, in part at least, for the purpose of improving the moral tone of the pictures exhibited in moving-picture shows; and I hope that may be the principal, aye, the entire scope of his employment and duties, for undoubtedly there is sad need of such improvement. If Mr. Hays is to confine his activities to that work and if his advice should be followed, he would have an opportunity to do a great work and accomplish tremendous good, and work a great reform which is badly and sadly needed.

If Mr. Hays's employment be for the purpose of improving the moral tone of the motion-picture industry, he has a tremendous undertaking and I wish him well in it and desire to help him; but I do not think he can succeed without the aid of the law in the way of official censorship. More strength to his arm, and I favor giving it in the form of censorship. He will need it. The motion-picture industry is in the hands of men who apparently are determined to coin from it all the money they can without regard to the welfare of the public; and I think their sudden zeal for working improvement in the moral tone of their business, need of which nearly everybody else realized before they did (speaking now of the owners, not Mr. Hays), arises from alarm that a revolt of the public at the character of their pictures will cause a falling off of their receipts and a diminution of their profits. In my opinion they will allow Mr. Hays, whose intentions I have no doubt are good, to improve the tone of their business just so much and so far and so long as they may think improvement will increase their profits. I am suspicious of the sudden zeal of the owners to improve the moral tone of their business.

It might not last long unless made permanent by law through censorship in the various jurisdictions of the country. I think reasonable, prudent censorship laws throughout the country, such as now prevail in some States, would greatly aid their newborn zeal to elevate the moral tone of their business, and aid to make the improvement lasting. I speak of the owners. I know Mr. Hays is only an employee; perhaps a temporary one—no one knows.

I approve of Mr. Hays's desire to improve the moral tone of the business, but I think he is mistaken when he says the American people are against censorship. A large and growing part of them favor reasonable censorship, and unless Mr. Hays be permitted to work improvement in the tone of the business more speedily and to a greater extent than I expect, there will soon be many more who favor censorship.

It looks to me as if Mr. Hays was employed to prevent censorship by making such improvement in the business as the owners will permit; but, if so, I think his employment comes too late. Furthermore, I apprehend he can only advise.

If Will H. Hays could personally censor, in advance, every film to be put on exhibition, and if his judgment would be absolutely and unquestionably accepted, and if none but films personally inspected and approved by him could be exhibited, I would feel there was no need for further censorship; but, of course, that can not be done. If the owners are to do the censoring, or employ censors of their choosing, and use their judgment about what pictures to exhibit, I am sure the dollar mark of profits will still be the censor, and that there will still be need of official censorship. I do not believe the public demand for official censorship will be stifled or satisfied by any fair promises of voluntary reform and improvement by the owners of the industry. Official censorship could be trusted much more. The public has a paramount interest in this matter. It is not all with the owners.

The motion picture is a great invention, and it has become a powerful factor for good or bad in our civilization. It has great educational power for good or bad. It may educate young people in the ways of good citizenship or in ways of dissoluteness, extravagance, wickedness, and crime. It furnishes recreation, diversion, and amusement at a cheap price to many millions of our people—largely the young. It is the only form of amusement within the means of millions. It possesses great potential possibilities for good. It may furnish not only amusement but education of a high order.

Through motion pictures the young and the old may see depicted every good motive, laudable ambition, commendable characteristic, ennobling trait of humanity. They may be taught that honesty is the best policy; that virtue and worth are rewarded; that industry leads to success. Those who live in the country or in small interior towns, and who never visit large cities, may see pictured the skyscrapers, the crowded streets, the rush and jam of metropolitan cities. Those who live in the interior, and never see the seacoast, may see on the screen the great docks and wharves of seaports and see the loading and unloading of giant ocean steamers. Those who live in crowded cities, and never see the country or get a glimpse of country life, may have depicted to them all the beauties of rural life and scenery. All may see scenes of the luxuriant Tropics, the grandeur of Alpine Mountains, polar conditions, life in the Orient. The cities, palaces, cathedrals, ports, rural life, daily routine, scenic attractions, mode of living of every country on the globe, may be brought to our doors and eyes for a small price. The industry may be made an education to the young.

However, from all accounts, the business has been conducted, generally speaking, upon a low plane and in a decidedly sordid manner. Those who own and control the industry seem to have been of the opinion that the sensual, the sordid, the prurient, the phases of fast life, the ways of extravagance, the risqué, the paths of shady life, drew the greatest attendance and coined for them the most money, and apparently they have been out to get the coin, no matter what the effect upon the public, young or old; and when thoughtful people have suggested or advocated official censorship, in the interest of good citizenship and wholesome morals, the owners of the industry have resented it and, in effect, declared that it was nobody's business other than theirs and concerned nobody other than them what kind of shows they produced; that if people did not like their shows they could stay away from them; that it was their business, and they would conduct it as they might please. At least they have vigorously fought all attempts at censorship and resented them.

In that they are mistaken. The State has an interest in citizenship and a concern in the education of the young. The State has an interest in good morals. It regulates in many ways all of those things. The motion-picture industry vitally concerns all of those things—citizenship, education, morals—and is therefore subject to regulation by the State. It has become a public utility, and is therefore the legitimate subject of State regulation.

The State can not afford to abandon interest in its young—its future citizens. The motion-picture industry has a great power, and I think I speak truthfully and conservatively when I say it has been frightfully abused and misused, so much so that there has arisen a determined and powerful movement in favor of official censorship. The industry is trying desperately to defeat it, but I think too late. It will grow and is bound to succeed—the movement for censorship, I mean.

The industry has gone so far in defying public sentiment, and has been so flagrant in its abuse of its privileges that a public sentiment for censorship has been aroused which will not be brooked. It may be temporarily checked; it may be temporarily lulled by fair promises, but it is bound to grow, because censorship is needed and would be a good thing.

I care not how much Mr. Hays may improve the moral tone of the industry, if that be his business, and I hope he may vastly improve it, for there is need of it. I wish him all success. Censorship is needed as an assurance that there shall be no lapse into the old loose ways, no return to sensual pictures as a way of grabbing the most money. Hundreds of millions of dollars a year are spent by the public on moving-picture shows, and the State has a right to know as a positive fact, made positive by law, that the money is not spent in ways harmful to its citizenry and damaging to society.

It took the Anti-Saloon League a long time to accomplish its purposes. It met many hard knocks and fair promises, but it grew and succeeded. The sentiment for censorship of moving pictures is just forming, for the need of censorship has just begun to be seriously realized, and it will not be rebuffed by threats of political vengeance or stifled by fair promises of voluntary reform. It is kindling a fire that will not be quenched and will make itself felt. Before very long Members of Congress will begin to feel the warmth of it.

I believe that a great deal of the extravagance of the day, a great deal of the disposition to live beyond one's means, yea, a great deal of the crime of the day comes from moving pictures. Through them young people gain ideas of fast life, shady ways, laxity of living, loose morals. Crime is freely depicted in alluring colors. Lax morals are held up lightly before them. The sensual is strongly appealed to. Many of the pictures are certainly not elevating; some, at least, are not fit to be seen.

About 18 months ago, in this city, there occurred a foul and most shocking murder. There are so many such that it is hard to particularize, but I have in mind one particularly atrocious. Four youths of this city, in age from 15 to 20 years, as I recollect, stole an automobile, and in it followed an honest, peaceable, industrious barber as he was going to his loving family and quiet home after a day's work, and overtaking him one of the youths jumped out of the automobile, in a residential section of the city, and murdered him by firing a pistol at him at close range. The victim dropped dead. The youths became panic-stricken on account of close-at-hand pedestrians and fled in the stolen machine.

A year elapsed before they were discovered and arrested, with the evidence of their atrocious criminality. They admitted the crime, or at least some of them did. They admitted the motive was robbery. The district attorney did everything he could do, and I am satisfied did his full duty; but owing to the extreme youthfulness of the perpetrators and much sentiment for leniency for them, and the improbability of procuring first-degree murder verdicts against them, the young criminals were permitted to plead guilty of second-degree murder, manslaughter, and even lesser degrees of crime, and were given varying terms of imprisonment.

I have no doubt those young criminals got their ideas of the romance of crime from moving pictures. I believe moving pictures are doing as much harm to-day as saloons did in the days of the open saloon—especially to the young. They are running day and night, Sunday and every other day, the year round, and in most jurisdictions without any regulation by censorship. I would not abolish them. They can be made a great force for good. I would close them on Sunday and regulate them week days by judicious censorship. Already some dozen or more States have censorship laws, with the right of appeal to the courts, and the movement is on in many other States.

When we look to the source of the moving pictures, the material for them, the personnel of those who pose for them, we need not wonder that many of the pictures are pernicious.

The pictures are largely furnished by such characters as Fatty Arbuckle, of unsavory fame, notorious for his scandalous debauchery and drunken orgies, one of which, attended by many "stars," resulted in the death of Virginia Rappe, a star artist; William Desmond Taylor, deceased, murdered for some mysterious cause; one Valentino, now figuring as the star character in rape and divorce sensations. Many others of like character might be mentioned.

At Hollywood, Calif., is a colony of these people, where debauchery, riotous living, drunkenness, ribaldry, dissipation, free love, seem to be conspicuous. Many of these "stars," it is reported, were formerly bartenders, butcher boys, sopers, swampers, variety actors and actresses, who may have earned $10 or $20 a week, and some of whom are now paid, it is said, salaries of something like $5,000 a month or more, and they do not know what to do with their wealth, extracted from poor people, in large part, in 25 or 50 cent admission fees, except to spend it in riotous living, dissipation, and "high rolling."

These are some of the characters from whom the young people of to-day are deriving a large part of their education, views of life, and character-forming habits. From these sources our young people gain much of their views of life, inspiration, and education. Rather a poor source, is it not? Looks like there is some need for censorship, does it not? There could be some improvement, could there not?

There was recently some reference in Washington papers to a suggested effort by the Washington Chamber of Commerce or Board of Trade, one or the other, I do not recall which, to induce the Hollywood motion-picture colony to move to this community and establish itself at Great Falls, near this city. I hope it may not be done. From all accounts the Washington Chamber of Commerce or Board of Trade would better invite here a colony of lepers or an institution for the propagation and dissemination of smallpox.

Of course, I do not say all motion-picture actors and actresses are of that character. Some may be and probably are worthy people, but those mentioned seem to have been particular stars, and they and others like them seem to have given flavor to the caste. At any rate, such have no business furnishing education and inspiration to the young. There should be a weeding out. If Mr. Hays is to elevate the business, he should go to the bottom and "scrap" some of the odoriferous characters who have brought the business into disrepute. I am glad to know he has banned further exhibition of Fatty Arbuckle pictures. I give him credit for that.

Unless there be speedy and great improvement in the character of moving pictures, nation-wide censorship is not far distant. In my opinion, it should be had anyway as a safeguard and as an aid to Mr. Hays in his announced undertaking to elevate the tone of the business. He would find it a great help.

Meantime I call attention to the fact that I have introduced in the Senate a bill for a very reasonable and mild censorship law for the District of Columbia, modeled after the successful Massachusetts law, with right of appeal to the courts, which has been referred to and is pending before the Committee on the District of Columbia; also to the fact that I have offered a resolution for an investigation of the open, bold, and brazen declarations of some of the head men of the industry that they are going into politics to defeat all legislators and legislative or congressional candidates who favor any form of censorship, however mild, and all who will not pledge themselves to oppose all forms of censorship, which resolution was referred to and is pending before the Committee on the Judiciary.

I hope early and favorable action may be had on both measures. These measures may not succeed in this Congress, but if not, and if there be not great and speedy improvement in the character of the motion-picture industry, like measures are sure to succeed in some other Congress at no distant day. The people are beginning to be concerned and aroused.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a resolution from the House be laid before the Senate, as the Senator from Alabama is here, and he wanted to be here when it was taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the House Resolution 390, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives requests the consent of the Senate to an adjournment of the House until Tuesday, August 15, 1922.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate consent to an adjournment of the House until Tuesday, August 15, 1922, in accordance with the request contained in the resolution just laid before the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not intend to object, because I recognize that this is a privileged matter. Possibly it could be brought up without unanimous consent, if a motion were made, without sending it to a committee. But there is no reason to put the Senate to that trouble, because it could be taken up to-morrow if not to-day. Courtesy on the part of the Senate toward the House I think requires the immediate consideration of a request of this kind, as it is a matter of privilege, relating to the conduct of business in the House. Therefore I shall not object to the consideration of the motion. The House is entitled to have its request immediately and courteously considered.

I want to say, however, that so far as I am concerned I shall not vote for the motion. If the question of adjournment were only a matter of the House's business, of course no one could question it; but there are matters pending in the House of grave importance to the country, which concern ultimately the vote of the Senate. There is a measure of very universal interest, in reference to the proposals made about the organization at Muscle Shoals, the pending Ford proposal, which has been now reported to the House, and, I understand, is on the calendar. It would probably take but a day or two for the House to dispose of that question one way or another, and if disposed of favorably it would be in a position for the Senate to act upon it as soon as the pending tariff bill is out of the way. I am afraid that if the House adjourns now, without consideration of that question, this important measure may be sidetracked when they come back, and, feeling the grave importance of the matter, I can not get my own consent to vote for the motion. But I realize it is a matter which should be acted on without delay, so that the House may be informed as to whether the Senate concurs in its proposal or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that Senate Resolution 310 be taken from the table and be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In paragraph 707, page 101, line 4, the committee proposes to strike out the words "one-half of" before "1 cent," so as to read:

Sour milk and buttermilk 1 cent per gallon.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On that item I ask only for a viva voce vote. If we may have that vote, it will mean some progress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Did I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say that he desired a yea-and-nay vote on the next amendment?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. No; I do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 101, lines 5, 6, and 7, to strike out the words "having less than 30 per cent of butter fat, 5 cents per gallon; having 30 per cent or more of butter fat, 10," and to insert "22½," so as to read:

Cream, 22½ cents per gallon.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On that amendment, Mr. President, I want to say just a word. This is the most important amendment of all in this paragraph. This is an amendment which increases the House rate on cream 350 per cent.

I wish to read what the Tariff Commission said about cream in the pamphlet which is on the desk of each Senator, with reference to the operation of rates in the emergency tariff act:

As in the case of milk, the trade in cream has been a local one, largely confined to the New England States whose demand is increasingly exceeding the local production. But imported cream has been a much more important factor in New England's supply than imports of milk. For cream, summer is the season of greatest consumption chiefly because of the demand for ice cream.

These are not my words. These are the words of the Tariff Commission, a nonpartisan commission.

During the summer, Boston dealers have reached out farther and farther for their supplies of cream, being forced to do so by the expanding demands and the increasing specialization in market milk in the near-by districts. From August to October, 1919, imported cream made up from 10 to 18 per cent of Boston's total supply. Imports have consisted mostly of pasteurized cream for the household and hotel trade and for manufacture into ice cream. But little cream has been imported for manufacture into butter. A duty high enough to restrict imports would doubtless be reflected in an increased price in the New England States because of their considerable place in the supply.

Notwithstanding the high duty which was placed in the emergency tariff law, so necessary was it to import cream to meet the demands of the people of New England that there was an increase in the importations of cream in 1921 over the year 1920.

Mr. President, I wish to read some telegrams which have just come to my desk to-day. The first one reads as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., June 29, 1922.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

More important than ever that duty on market cream be kept low enough to permit importation. New England and New York States have not produced even small fraction of enough to supply normal demand through present flush period on milk, and dealers positively obliged to import Canadian cream. Urge that you support bonding amendment to tariff on cream.

CREAM DEALERS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW ENGLAND.

These men have even asked to put an amendment on the bill putting them under bond, penalizing them if they use the cream for making butter.

Mr. POMERENE. Who are the men to whom the Senator refers?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The distributors. They express their willingness to be put under bond that "We will not use a pound of this cream except for distribution to householders; we will not use it for the making of butter."

The Boston and Suburban Milk Dealers' Association wire me as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., June 29, 1922.

DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

September and October, 1921, only 2 months in past 12 since emergency tariff in effect when spread between Montreal and Boston butter markets sufficient to allow importation of Canadian butter. Higher tariff not necessary. New York and New England States not producing enough cream to supply even small part of demand. We need Canadian cream. Urge that you support bonding amendment to tariff bill.

BOSTON AND SUBURBAN MILK DEALERS' ASSOCIATION.

There is a statement from these organizations that only in two months was the Canadian butter cheaper than the New England butter.

I desire also to read a telegram from T. P. Grant Co., of Boston, as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., June 29, 1922.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Have made earnest endeavor to locate and purchase sufficient cream in New York and New England to meet our needs, but without success. Have been positively obliged to import Canadian cream. Urge that you work to keep tariff no higher than in House bill or support bonding amendment to tariff bill.

T. P. GRANT CO.

Mr. President, I shall not prolong the discussion further than to say——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that his colleague, the senior Senator from Massachusetts, offered an amendment, and I think we had better submit that amendment and have it voted upon before we vote upon the pending amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Because if we agree to the pending amendment, then the Senator could not offer his amendment until the bill has reached the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I ask that the amendment of my colleague may be divided.

ATTORNEY GENERAL DAUGHERTY.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I arise to warn Attorney General Daugherty to look to his kidneys. The junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] has been offering his job to a "friend" in his own State, provided this "friend" would keep out of the race for the Senate. I have here a letter. A statement therein makes me desire to warn the Attorney General. The statement as made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] is:

I do not think either the health or inclination of Mr. Daugherty will incline him to indefinite service in the position which he now honors.

I do not presume Mr. Daugherty knows he is sick. Doubtless he will be as much surprised to learn of his failing health as I was, but he had better beware, because the Senator from Missouri will have him doped and out of his job before long if he is not careful. Whether he will use soap, as was said to have been used on Mr. Morse, or whether it will be some other chemical, I am not prepared to say. I do know, however, that he is in danger of finding himself in "failing" health. The occasion, as I understand it, for his job being offered to a man in Missouri is this: The attorney general of Missouri, Mr. Barrett, wanted to run for the Senate on the Republican ticket. He lives in St. Louis. The junior Senator from Missouri also lives in St. Louis. It seems that the junior Senator from Missouri wanted the "other" candidate to come from western Missouri, not eastern Missouri. Therefore he said that if Mr. Barrett would stay out of the race and be good, he would have him in Attorney General Daugherty's place in a short time, as I said, on the theory that Daugherty's health and inclination to hold office were failing.

I have an idea that it will be good news to the country if Mr. Daugherty has made up his mind to resign. I do not say that the country wants his health to fail and I do not presume his health is failing. If he will, however, have consideration for the wishes of the junior Senator from Missouri and the law-loving people of this country and quit, he may quit with his health. Whether he quits with any credit I will, of course, leave for somebody else to say.

But the junior Senator from Missouri assured the attorney general of Missouri that both Mr. Daugherty's health and inclination were failing—that is, his inclination to hold office. I am reading from a Missouri paper under a headline of Jefferson City, June 27. The article is short. I will read it. I shall try to differentiate the news item from the letter. The headlines are:

SPENCER HELD OUT CABINET POST BAIT, BARRETT ASSERTS—LETTER, POINTING OUT POSSIBILITY OF OBTAINING UNITED STATES ATTORNEY GENERALSHIP, IS MADE PUBLIC

[By a staff correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.]

JEFFERSON CITY, June 27.—How Senator SPENCER had held out to him the alluring possibility of being appointed United States Attorney General, as bait to keep him from becoming a candidate for the Republican nomination for United States Senator, was related to-day by Attorney General Barrett in commenting upon a letter from SPENCER which was published in a St. Louis paper this morning.

Barrett made public a letter which he, too, had received from SPENCER, in which SPENCER pointed out that "A man with the record which you will have behind you as attorney general of Missouri is the most available man for Attorney General of the United States, a position which ought to go to the Central West. I do not think either the health or inclination of Mr. Daugherty will incline him to indefinite service in the position which he now honors."

Of course, I am sure that is news to Mr. Daugherty. I have not the remotest idea the junior Senator from Missouri consulted him when he "auctioned" off his job to his friend out in Missouri, provided his friend Barrett would stay out of the senatorial race.

"DON'T BREAK YOUR CONTRACT."

This letter had contained the previous statement by SPENCER that "You have made a splendid record thus far as attorney general. Do not let anything persuade you to break your 4-year contract with the people. When your term of office is ended with the added record that you will undoubtedly make, you will be in a fortunate position for many things."

Barrett declared in his statement that he would not have entered this race had not Kansas City Republicans been unable to center on one candidate, and that his last minute announcement came in response to hundreds of requests from Republicans who feared that the Kansas City candidates would threaten Republican solidarity by carrying city factional fights into the senatorial race.

"Senator SPENCER does not say whom he wants elected, but he makes it clear that he wants me defeated, and on the sole ground that I am from St. Louis. I had hoped that he would assume a more generous attitude. I gave several months of my time in 1918 to the management of his primary campaign, performing a service which few were willing to undertake."

He does not say why.

"Of course, my nomination and election would mean that Senator SPENCER at his next campaign would be met with the same argument that St. Louis should not have two Senators, but I had hoped that his sense of sportsmanship would prompt him to say that if I could overcome that obstacle now he would take his chances at overcoming it later.

REFERS TO GOLDSTEIN MOVE.

"Instead of that he wrote, urging me to forego the Senate campaign and holding out as a possible reward a place in President Harding's Cabinet. Later he persuaded his friend, Nat Goldstein, to force a resolution through the St. Louis committee, expressing opposition to the candidacy of any St. Louisan. This was accomplished by a vote of 12 to 4 after Nat had succeeded in ruling out the votes of those who held proxies.

"If Kansas City had agreed upon a nominee, I would have gladly stayed out of the race. It was because the Kansas City candidacies threatened further party troubles and a repetition of the conditions in the city election that hundreds of Republicans over the State urged that my candidacy would be a solution of the problem.

"They believe that my nomination will end the thought of dissension within the party.

"The result of the poll taken by Senator SPENCER does not tally with the reports being received by many others, and it is possible that his correspondents had particularly in mind the bits of information which they thought the Senator wanted to hear."

The SPENCER letter to Barrett was dated May 1 last. Soon after it reached the attorney general there came other indications that SPENCER was making a strong effort to prevent the attorney general from getting into the senatorial race, and as the last day for filing drew near, Mrs. Bessie Parker Brueggeman, of St. Louis, Republican national committeewoman, from Missouri and a close personal and political friend and appointee of SPENCER, telegraphed Barrett in the same vein, at the same time trying to get other Republican women to do likewise.

As I said, Mr. President, I rose merely to warn the Attorney General to beware of soap.

Mr. KING. Soft soap.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Utah suggests "soft soap." It is the kind of soap that makes one appear to have Bright's disease when he has nothing but a desire to get out of the penitentiary. I never before knew that soap was particularly effective in getting a man out of an office, but I now know and the Attorney General must know that his job is to be vacant, and the Senator from Missouri is to give it to his political friend, if he is good. I take that for granted, because I am sure the Senator from Missouri would not have said, if it were not true, that—

I do not think either the health or inclination of Mr. Daugherty will incline him to indefinite service in the position which he now honors.

And have told Barrett that he was in a fair way to get the place. I do not know what great service the Senator from Missouri has rendered the Republican Party that he should have a Cabinet position to dispose of to keep down future opposition, but evidently he has. I should like to serve notice, however, upon the Senator from Missouri and the attorney general of Missouri that there is only a piece of a term that they can have the Attorney Generalship to trade on among their political friends. In 1924 there is to be an election, and in the March following there will be no Cabinet positions open to Republicans. Unless, therefore, Mr. Barrett is willing to take only a piece of a term, he might as well run for office in Missouri and be defeated, because there is only a piece of the term that is going to be available. It is fortunate for both the Attorney General and the Senator who wants to trade on his job there is no recall or there would not be the piece of a term left. Anyway, Mr. President, in conclusion, as I began, I merely wish to say the Attorney General had better be careful of his kidneys.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I only wish to say a word, and first that the prophecy of the Senator from Arkansas to-day is precisely the same kind of a prophecy as that which he made in 1920, with a result which I am sure even he has not forgotten. The result in 1924 will be precisely as it was in 1920.

I should also like to state, Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from Arkansas has been good enough to bring my name into his dissertation based on some newspaper gossip in regard to the political situation in Missouri, what the fact is, since, as has not been infrequent in the past, when the fact is presented the inference sought to be drawn at once fades out of sight.

Unfortunately for the Senator from Arkansas, he is absolutely mistaken with regard to the facts; and, as to the novelty of what he has said, it is so old that it is stale.

The fact of the case is that away back in last April or the 1st of May, in a personal friendly letter to the then attorney general of the State of Missouri, who has been for many years and is now my warm personal friend, and a man for whom I have the highest esteem and in whom I have the greatest confidence, I wrote to him in connection with the senatorial situation in Missouri, into which he was intending then to enter. I stated to him frankly that, in my judgment, he had better complete the term of office to which he had been elected and in which he was, as a matter of fact, making an enviable record, and that I hoped he would complete his term of office.

I then stated in that letter, as well as I can remember it, that he was making such a record as to prove himself to be the kind of a man who would be available for the Attorney Generalship of the United States, which, in my judgment, ought to go to the Central West if the occasion ever arose to have another Attorney General.

That is all there was to it. I never spoke for the Attorney General; I never gave the slightest intimation that there was any vacancy that either ought to be created or was about to be created. I merely stated that, so far as the office of Attorney General was concerned, if ever a vacancy occurred, General Barrett was the kind of man who ought to fill such a place, and out of that molehill this mountain of mistaken inferences which has interrupted the discussion of the tariff bill has been erected. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Missouri said that my prophecy for 1924 would be like my prophecy for 1920. Of course, the Senator dreamed that I had made a prophecy in 1920 as to what was going to happen, but he is in error. I made no prophecy as to what would happen in 1920. Everybody knew what was going to happen in 1920, just as everybody knows what is going to happen in 1924. The people are not going to repeat the mistake made in 1920. They made the big mistake in 1920 of voting as the Senator from Missouri wished, but it will be a long time before they forget and repeat it.

The Senator from Missouri says it was just a "friendly letter"; that there was no "suggestion" about taking Daugherty out of his job and giving it away. I want to read what the Senator really wrote, because he writes so many letters that he forgets; and I notice every time when any question is raised he always says, "As I remember," but he does not remember, I am sorry to say. Here is what he said:

> I do not think either the health or inclination of Mr. Daugherty will incline him to indefinite service in the position which he now honors.

Of course, it will not. But here is what the Senator meant to say: "I have inside information that Daugherty is going to be fired, and if you will be good and stay out of this race for the Senate I will have you put in his place.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. CARAWAY. With pleasure.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator knows that that was not what I intended to say or was it even written between the lines. I never had the slightest idea then, nor have I now, that the Attorney General ever thought of resigning.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, what was written between the lines?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator knows that there was no suggestion of that kind in my mind. The Senator knows that the attorney general of Missouri never could have drawn such an inference from what I said, and I do not believe there is a living man, unless it is the Senator from Arkansas, who would ever draw such a conclusion from the statement made by me.

Mr. CARAWAY. Just a moment. What was in the Senator's mind?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not know from what the Senator is reading. He holds in his hand a clipping from a newspaper.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am reading from the Senator's letter.

Mr. SPENCER. I should depend——

Mr. CARAWAY. Wait a moment.

Mr. SPENCER. I thought the Senator was asking me a question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was. What was in the Senator's mind when he wrote that sentence?

Mr. SPENCER. That is exactly what I was about to answer.

Mr. CARAWAY. Very well.

Mr. SPENCER. I should say that my recollection——

Mr. CARAWAY. No; here is the letter.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator let me answer?

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course.

Mr. SPENCER. I should say that my recollection of what I wrote was far more to be relied upon than the newspaper clipping which the Senator is now holding in his hands. What was in my mind when I wrote that letter was precisely what I have already indicated. The statement was made in a personal letter to a personal friend, telling him I thought he ought to continue his present term of office, and indicating to him that he was making such a record that if there ever came a vacancy in the office of the Attorney General of the United States he was precisely the kind of a man who would be available for that position. I never then dreamed, nor do I now, that there would be any vacancy in the office of Attorney General, the place which the present Attorney General is filling with such credit to himself and honor to the Nation. I never dreamed that anybody could by any possibility of inference put into that suggestion anything except what to my mind is clear upon its face. Of course, I had no information that there was to be any resignation or vacancy, and I never dreamed of a resignation or vacancy, nor do I now.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPENCER. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Does the Senator from Missouri mean to say that the Attorney General honored himself and honored this country when he persuaded the President to pardon that Ohio violator of the Mann Act, whose victim was a little 15-year-old girl?

Mr. SPENCER. I know nothing about the multitude of the details of his great office; but I repeat to the Senator from Georgia, with all the emphasis I can put into the statement, that, in my judgment and in the judgment of the Nation, the Attorney General of the United States to-day is making a record for himself and for that office which is a credit to the Nation and an honor to himself.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Opinions differ widely upon that subject. Charges have been made here on the floor of the Senate, which, if the Attorney General had been a man of honor, would have been answered by him or he would have resigned. I made those charges myself, and I stand by them; and one of those charges was that he persuaded the President to grant a pardon to a 51-year-old millionaire of Ohio who debauched a little girl 15 years old in violation of the Mann Act, and who was convicted and sentenced and sent to Atlanta to serve out a term, which he did not serve because Harry Daugherty got him pardoned out.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course the Senator from Missouri is entitled to his own opinion as to what constitutes a good Attorney General. Daugherty seems to be the kind of Attorney General that he wants. However, I want to ask the Senator from Missouri a question, if I may. I have quoted a sentence alleged to be from the Senator's letter. If it is incorrect, I should be very glad indeed if the Senator would get a copy of that letter and put it in the RECORD. The Senator has a copy of the letter in his office.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not know whether I have or not, but the effrontery of the Senator from Arkansas in asking me to put private correspondence in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD amuses me.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know it amuses the Senator, because he will not do it.

Mr. SPENCER. I never had the faintest intention of doing it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know that. But here is what I want to put in the Senator's mind: He says now that he never expected the Attorney General to resign, and yet this is what the Senator from Missouri is said to have written his friend Mr. Barrett. I quote:

> I do not think either the health or inclination of Mr. Daugherty will incline him to an indefinite service in the position which he now honors.

The Senator says that nobody in the world but myself would ever have thought that was an implication that the Attorney General was arranging to quit and that Barrett could get his job, and yet it does not even need to be read between the lines. The Senator from Missouri always wants to state what is between the lines, but there is no use to go between the lines in this instance. The Senator from Missouri was undertaking, so Mr. Barrett says—and the Senator from Missouri says that Mr. Barrett is a friend of his bosom; that he loves him as he loves his own good standing in the community—I am interpolating a little bit there——

Mr. SPENCER. Yes; indulging in poetic license.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; to some extent, and somehow when I am arguing with the Senator there is something that suggests that course to me. The Senator, according to Mr. Barrett's idea, was undertaking to persuade him to stay out of the race for the Senate in Missouri, and in order to do so was suggesting to him that Daugherty's health was about to fail, and his inclination to hold office was also waning, "and if you will just be patient I shall be able to put you in the office of the Attorney General of the United States."

I know what a Missourian would think, because—and I apologized at one time for having that thing happen to me—I was born in Missouri. Of course I left there just as quickly as I found out where I was. I was 6 months old when I got out. If I had been a precocious child, I would have gone away much earlier.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will allow the Senator to say the same thing he said once before.

Mr. SPENCER. No; I was about to say that I have never heard any expression of regret from Missouri on the departure of the Senator, and I am sorry about it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am sure that is true; and I do not like to say it, but when the term of office of the Senator expires, if he will move back from whence he came, I do not expect to hear any wails go up in Missouri. I rather expect it to happen, and I expect Pennsylvania to get back its own. Yet I have never heard of Pennsylvania "wailing" about having lost the Senator when he went to Missouri; but of course I shall not be a bit more popular in Pennsylvania for having suggested that the Senator from Missouri was born there.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think the Senator could say anything that would affect his popularity in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not think so, after the statement I have just made. I think I kissed good-bye to every friend I had in Pennsylvania when I reminded them that the Senator from Missouri was born in that State. That, however, is aside from what we are talking about. I still want to know just exactly what the Senator did intend Barrett to understand when he said to him:

I do not think either the health or inclination of Mr. Daugherty will incline him to indefinite service in the position which he now honors.

What was it that the Senator expected Mr. Barrett to understand by that?

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will yield to me——

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator states himself out of court, even from his own quotation——

Mr. CARAWAY. I know I do.

Mr. SPENCER. Because, as a matter of fact, the attorney general of the State of Missouri has yet more than two years before his term of office is completed; and the Senator has already read how earnest I was in recommending that the attorney general of Missouri should complete his term of office, which has more than two years yet to run. So the Senator, I am sure, will see how unfortunately mistaken is his own individual interpretation, for there could not have been any immediate intention of transplanting the attorney general of Missouri to the office of Attorney General of the United States when I was so desirous that the full term of office in Missouri, with more than two years to run, should be completed.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, I did not mean that there was any intention, but that is what he thought.

Mr. SPENCER. I thought the Senator asked me what my intention was.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no. I said, "What do you presume Barrett thought from that language?" He thought you were offering him a job.

Mr. SPENCER. I thought the Senator asked me what my intention was.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no; the Senator said his intentions lay between the lines. I am satisfied that Mr. Barrett now knows what I know, that the thing was for him to stay out of the race for office and he would get nothing; but, anyhow, he would not get anything by running. The Senator from Missouri was doing his friend no real injustice by asking him to stay out of a race for office, because the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is to be reelected in Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. Is that another prophecy of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no; that is merely a statement of facts.

Mr. SPENCER. Is it equal in truthfulness with his other statements of "prophetic" facts?

Mr. CARAWAY. It is equal in truthfulness with anything that I read in the letter.

Mr. SPENCER. That may be true so far as the inference which the Senator from Arkansas draws from the letter. I am inclined to think it is.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, it is; and the Senator wrote the letter, and I read it as he wrote it. Anyway, let me just conclude what I started to say, that the Senator from Missouri did his friend no real injustice, whatever his intention may have been, by warning him to stay out of the race for office in Missouri this year on the Republican ticket, whatever the motive of the Senator from Missouri might have been in giving it. It would be equally applicable, I think, to nearly anybody who intends to run for office on the Republican ticket this year. There never was a time, if I may be able to say it without getting into a new controversy with my friend from Missouri, when so many Republicans discovered that their "private business" was so urgent that they have to retire from public life. Why, to pick up the roll in the House, nearly every man who has been there long enough to have a record has "discovered" all at once that business requires him to quit or else age impels him to seek rest. In other words, they know they are going to quit, and they are quitting without any controversy. There are a number of very excellent Senators on the other side of the Chamber who also had as well discovered that private business demands their attention, because they are going to be attending to their private business after the next election, whether it needs their attention or not.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator fom Utah [Mr. SMOOT] offers an amendment on behalf of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 101, paragraph 707, it is proposed to strike out the last three lines of said paragraph, or all of lines 5, 6, and 7, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Sour cream and cream imported for manufacture into butter or cheese, 22 cents per gallon; pasteurized sweet cream for use other than manufacture into butter and cheese, imported subject to the restrictions imposed and under the provisions of the succeeding paragraph, 10 cents per gallon.

PAR. 707-a. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the foregoing paragraph relative to the importation of pasteurized sweet cream, it is provided that any importer desiring to import pasteurized sweet cream shall pay the duty provided thereon in said paragraph at the time of entry, and shall further file a bond conditioned that he shall furnish monthly a detailed and complete sworn record of all sales for the preceding month, including the name and address of each customer, and the purposes for which said cream was to be used; and in event that any of said cream has been manufactured into butter or cheese or sold for manufacture into butter or cheese, he shall pay the amount due as additional duty thereon. Such bond shall be further conditioned to comply with all the requirements of the law and all regulations of the Treasury Department in relation thereto, and shall be in such form and in a penalty to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the penalty thereof to be paid as liquidated damages.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I ask that the amendment be divided and that separate votes be taken upon the first and second parts of the amendment. There are Members in the Chamber who are opposed to the rate of 22½ cents per gallon during the entire year for all purposes, and who want to have the amendment separated. I suppose there is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to demand a division of the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, an amendment has been offered to the amendment reported by the committee, the amendment just read being one which has been tendered by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is tendered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] on behalf of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and is offered as a substitute for lines 5, 6, and 7 of the House text.

Mr. KING. It purposes, then, to be a substitute for the entire amendment which we are now considering?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands, the Senate is considering the amendment of the committee to strike out, in lines 5 and 6, the part indicated there. This, as the Chair understands, is offered as an amendment to perfect the text of the House bill before action upon the motion to strike out.

Mr. KING. I was called from the Chamber when the amendment was first tendered, and I heard only the concluding lines. I should like to ask my colleague or the junior Senator from Massachusetts what is the purpose of it?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the request of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is that the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] be divided. The effect of that request is that instead of the rate of the committee amendment—22½ cents a gallon—the first part of the proposed amendment imposes a rate of 22 cents a gallon on cream for use other than manufacture into butter and cheese. The rest of the proposed amendment provides that the rate shall be 10 cents per gallon, and the junior Senator from Massachusetts asks that the question be divided, so that the Senate shall vote first upon the rate of 22 cents a gallon.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The first part of the amendment offered by my colleague provides that sour cream and cream used for the making of butter shall carry the rate named by the committee, 22½ cents per gallon. The second part of his amendment provides that cream used for household purposes shall carry a rate of 10 cents per gallon. Many Senators on this side, including myself, do not want to vote for the high rate of 22½ cents. I am willing to vote for the reduction if it is the best that can be obtained. Therefore I have asked that the amendment be divided in order that we may have a separate vote on each part of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be divided.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the senior Senator from Utah a question. Under the law of 1909 the duty on cream was 5 cents a gallon. This bill makes it 22½ cents a gallon, nearly four and a half times what it was under the law of 1909. What are the circumstances which justify that?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want to repeat here what the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] so well said before; but he gave the figures to the Senate in detail, with an explanation that I think nobody else could make any better, claiming in that explanation that it was absolutely necessary in order to protect the farmers along the Canadian border from the importation of cream at times when the American producer of cream ought to have the market to himself.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the first part of my colleague's amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, has the amendment been divided?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been divided.

Mr. KING. I am not ready to vote on this matter until I understand the provisions of the amendment a little further. May I inquire now of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who has been giving this schedule and this paragraph attention, whether he is willing to vote for a provision that taxes cream, whether it is sour or sweet, whether it comes in during the winter or during the summer, 22 or 22½ cents a gallon?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is why I have asked to have it divided, because I do not intend to vote that way.

Mr. KING. That question is involved in this amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I shall vote against the first half of the amendment. I shall vote for the second half.

Mr. KING. What is the first half of the amendment?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. A tax of 22½ cents per gallon upon all sour cream or cream that will be used for making butter; and the second part of the amendment is a tax of 10 cents per gallon upon cream which will be used for household purposes.

Mr. KING. Of course, then the first provision of the paragraph under consideration aims at taxing cream which may be imported to make butter 22½ cents a gallon.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is true.

Mr. KING. The object is to exclude any possible importations of cream for butter making. The purpose is to penalize those who may make oleomargarine by the imposition of a tax to penalize those who import cream to make butter in order that the domestic producer of butter may charge higher prices. People in the great congested city districts, where they have to buy all of the food which they consume, will be compelled to pay additional taxes upon butter, as well as upon other products.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Utah has fully stated this proposition.

Mr. KING. I will be glad to have my statement supplemented.

Mr. POMERENE. We know that labor in the United States and labor in Canada are paid about the same. We know that more feed is produced in this country than in Canada. So that it resolves itself into this, that our cows in giving milk out of which the cream is produced, can not compete with the pauper cows of Canada.

Mr. KING. That is an angle, of course, which is quite alluring and lends itself to wide observation. But after all, the purpose of this amendment, as I understand it, is in line with the purpose of the bill to increase the prices of all products which enter into the lives of the people. We are to reduce wages to bring conditions down to normal, having reduced them in many industries; but we are to keep up prices. If there is a tendency for prices to respond to the laws of supply and demand, we must, by legislation, interpose artificial barriers to prevent the operation of those laws. We are, in other words, to use the power of the Government not to obtain the revenue, but to help men in their business, whether they be dairymen or manufacturers of clothes or of the thousands of commodities indispensible to the health and welfare of the people. Why not be frank and say that this is not a bill for revenue purposes; that it is a bill to exploit the American people; that it is a bill to rob and plunder; that it is a bill to impose additional burdens upon the poor, to tax them. This item, a sop for the farmers, is a thrust at the laboring men of the United States. Let the amendment as divided be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first branch of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the amendment of the committee.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 101 strike out all of lines 5, 6, and 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Sour cream and cream imported for manufacture into butter or cheese, 22 cents per gallon," and a semicolon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. PHIPPS. Making the same announcement as on the previous vote with reference to the transfer of my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN. I inquire if the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] and vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. ERNST. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 3, nays 53, as follows:

YEAS—3.

Broussard	Johnson	Lodge

So the first branch of Mr. LODGE's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, on the remaining half of the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. May the Secretary report the proposed amendment to the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. The second part of the amendment is to insert after line 7, page 101:

Pasteurized sweet cream for use other than manufacture into butter and cheese, imported subject to the restrictions imposed and under the provisions of the succeeding paragraph, 10 cents per gallon.

PAR. 707a. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the foregoing paragraph, relative to the importation of pasteurized sweet cream, it is provided that any importer desiring to import pasteurized sweet cream shall pay the duty provided thereon in said paragraph at the time of entry, and shall further file a bond conditioned that he shall furnish monthly a detailed and complete sworn record of all sales for the preceding month, including the name and address of each customer and the purposes for which said cream was to be used, and in event that any of said cream has been manufactured into butter or cheese or sold for manufacture into butter or cheese, he shall pay the amount due as additional duty thereon. Such bond shall be further conditioned to comply with all the requirements of the law and all regulations of the Treasury Department in relation thereto, and shall be in such form and in a penalty to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the penalty thereof to be paid as liquidated damages.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts what the effect of the adoption of the amendment will be? As I understand it, if it were adopted, it would supersede paragraph 707 and would mean that cream which came in for butter purposes would pay one rate——

Mr. LODGE. It would pay 22½ cents a gallon.

Mr. KING. And that which came in for household use would pay 10 cents a gallon.

Mr. LODGE. Cream brought in for household uses, not to be used for the manufacture of butter, would pay 10 cents a gallon. There is a long provision at the end for seeing that it is not used for butter purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts as in the nature of a substitute subject to amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is subject to amendment. It is a provision to strike out and insert.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it could be construed as a substitute.

Mr. KING. I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, to strike out the numerals "22½ cents"——

Mr. LODGE. That portion of the amendment has been voted on already. The amendment was divided and that part of it has been disposed of.

Mr. KING. Then I shall not press that matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know whether I understand the matter or not, but I think I do. As I understand it, the Senator from Massachusetts offered an amendment and we have divided that amendment for the purpose of voting. We voted first upon the part of the amendment, which fixes the rate at 22 cents, and the balance of the amendment, which reduces the rate to 10 cents when the cream is used for certain purposes, is to be voted upon now.

Mr. LODGE. That is correct.

Mr. KING. I presume that the Senate will take up for consideration the committee amendment imposing a rate of 22½ cents a gallon; in other words, the vote recently had will not be a final disposition of that part of the committee amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not. The committee amendment has to be voted on yet.

Mr. KING. So when we reach the committee amendment I shall offer the amendment which I have in mind.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The portion of the amendment offered by my colleague to be voted on now I think is very helpful and should be accepted. It seems to be the best that can be gotten under all the circumstances, and I shall take pleasure in voting for it.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator if the amendment shall prevail, it means, of course, 10 cents per gallon tax?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. KING. It would be far better, it would seem to me, in the interest of the consumer to have no tax at all.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If the Senator will make a motion to that effect, I shall support it; but under the circumstances we have to be practical men, and this appears to be an amendment which may get some votes on the other side of the Chamber and some on this side of the Chamber, reducing the rate from 22½ cents to 10 cents. I am going to vote for any reduction I can get. This is the first one before the Senate. After it is voted down, if it shall be voted down, I shall then vote for any other reduction that may be offered.

Mr. KING. The argument of my learned friend is plausible.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What should I do? Should I vote against a reduction to 10 cents and let the 22½-cent rate stand? If we can reduce the rate to 10 cents from 22½ cents I shall certainly vote for it.

Mr. KING. Perhaps the Senator's logic would be supported by Aristotle. However, I am opposed to a rate at all, and if I can have an opportunity under the parliamentary processes which we are now following to record my convictions I shall be very happy to do so. I do not like to vote for even a 10-cent tax upon the people of the United States who are compelled to buy cream.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and transfer. I vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on a previous vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has not voted. I have a general pair with that Senator. Making the same announcement as before regarding the transfer of my pair, I allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Ashurst	Harris	Kendrick	Simmons
Borah	Harrison	King	Trammell
Broussard	Heflin	Lodge	Underwood

So Mr. LODGE's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On the amendment of the committee I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair that I previously made, I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as previously in reference to my transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—40.

Brandegee	Fernald	Ladd	Phipps
Broussard	France	La Follette	Poindexter

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, at this point I desire to say that I have no objection to the committee amendments in paragraphs 708, 709, and 710. The committee amendments which are proposed to those paragraphs are merely of a formal character. In those paragraphs none of the House rates are increased and in one instance they have been decreased. At a later stage of the proceedings I shall offer some amendments to the House text, for I think the rates are high. I have, however, no objection to the committee amendments being now adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 101, line 9, after the word "per," to strike out "pound;" and to insert "pound,"; in line 12, before the word "cents," to strike out the numeral "8" and to insert the numeral "6"; and in line 13, after the word "compounds," to insert "or mixtures," so as to make the paragraph read:

PAR. 708. Milk, condensed or evaporated: In hermetically sealed containers, unsweetened, 1 cent per pound, sweetened, 1½ cents per pound; all other, 1½ cents per pound; whole milk powder, 3 cents per pound; cream powder, 6 cents per pound; and skimmed milk powder, 1½ cents per pound; malted milk, and compounds or mixtures of or substitutes for milk or cream, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. KING. On page 101, paragraph 708, line 12, before the word "cents," I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out the numeral "6" and inserting in lieu thereof the numeral "4."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 101, at the beginning of line 17, to insert "and other butter substitutes," so as to make the paragraph read:

PAR. 709. Butter, 8 cents per pound; oleomargarine and other butter substitutes, 8 cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Recurring, if I may, to the amendment in line 17, which has just been agreed to, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Finance or of my colleague, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], what they understand are comprised within the words "and other butter substitutes"? Would those words embrace all oils that might be so used?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not as oils, but if converted into a butter substitute and used as butter, of course, oils would be included. I know of no instance in which the oil alone may be converted into butter without further admixtures.

Mr. KING. The purpose is that if oil forms the principal ingredient of any substitute which may be spread upon the bread of the laborer, then it is to be called a substitute for butter and is to be taxed?

Mr. McCUMBER. We have taxed substitutes for butter; we have taxed oleomargarine under the internal revenue law if it is colored in any way, and if it is uncolored the tax is less; and the idea is to impose just as heavy a duty on butter substitutes as on butter itself; and for the same reason that a duty is levied on butter.

Mr. KING. I desire to know if there has been any standard definition promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury or by the Treasury Department to determine just what would be embraced within those words?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I think all the substitutes are sold as butter. It is not said they are real butter, but they are advertised as being just as good as or better than butter. They look like butter and are used for butter.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that I think the existing law and the law of 1909 were better worded; but the items have been segregated for statistical purposes. The present law reads "butter and butter substitutes," and those are also the words used in the act of 1909; but under that wording it could not be ascertained how much of each of the substitutes was imported. Oleomargarine and the other substitutes were included in the same figures, and so the House decided to put oleomargarine separately and the Senate committee decided to insert the words "butter substitutes"; so that we shall get the statistical information from the Treasury Department hereafter as to what the importations of each substitute have been.

Mr. SIMMONS Mr. President. I should like to ask the senior Senator from Utah a question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to say to the chairman of the committee that I have to attend a committee meeting in a few moments, and that I have been engaged in a committee meeting all morning, and have not been able to prepare the data which I desire to have. I should therefore like to ask that when paragraphs 718, 719, and 720 are reached they may go over until to-morrow or any time after to-day, when I will be ready to have them considered.

Mr. McCUMBER. We will probably reach them, but I will ask that they be passed over, if that is the Senator's wish.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I was unable to hear the reply of the Senator from North Dakota to the request of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. McCUMBER. My statement was that if the Senator from Washington desired that the paragraphs mentioned by him go over until to-morrow, on account of his being busy in attendance upon a committee meeting, I would agree to do so.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Very well; I have no objection to that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was about to ask the Senator from Utah a question. I assume that the committee when it reported this amendment covering oleomargarine or other butter substitutes had some information with respect to the character of the butter substitutes, but I confess that I do not know of any substitute for butter except oleomargarine.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, Mr. President; there are a number of them.

Mr. SIMMONS. I assume that the committee had some information with regard to the matter?

Mr. SMOOT. Peanut butter is not oleomargarine, but it is a substitute for butter.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not know that peanut butter was used as a substitute for butter.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, certainly it is.

Mr. SIMMONS. Peanut butter is the name of it, but I did not know it was used as a substitute for butter fat.

Mr. SMOOT. The paragraph does not say "butter fat," but it is a substitute for butter.

Mr. SIMMONS. Or for oleomargarine, which is an oil fat?

Mr. SMOOT. Oleomargarine is made from a good many oils and mixtures of oils.

Mr. SIMMONS. I had in mind peanut butter; I knew of that and that is exactly what I wanted to get information concerning. Is there anything except peanut butter that will be covered by the words "other butter substitutes"?

Mr. SMOOT. There are other butter substitutes than peanut butter. There is a butter substitute of which coconut oil is the principal ingredient, and there are butter substitutes made with oils mixed with cream. A compound is a substitute for butter whenever it is made from other materials than cream and is sold as butter.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am under the impression that the department has ruled that the word "oleomargarine" covers all of these butters that are made out of oils, such as butter made out of peanut oil or butter made out of coconut oil.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that in the manufacture of oleomargarine they sometimes use not only vegetable oil but animal oil as well, and the product is a mixture. It may be made out of all vegetable oil, it may be made out of all animal oil, or it may be made out of part animal oil and part vegetable oil.

Mr. SIMMONS. Exactly. What I have in mind in asking these questions is to find out whether it is the purpose of the committee, by the insertion of these words, to impose a tax of 8 cents a pound upon peanut butter?

Mr. SMOOT. It is.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no, Mr. President; because that is not regarded as a butter substitute.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Utah has just stated that it is.

Mr. McCUMBER. No. There are butter substitutes in the making of which peanut oil is used; but what we generally understand as peanut butter—that is, merely peanuts crushed and mixed with oil—is not a butter substitute at all. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the House omitted to put in just what was in the present law and in all previous laws; and taking out the words that are in the present law, "and other butter substitutes," might lead the department to conclude that we did not intend to include anything but oleomargarine. So the Senate committee, at the suggestion of the Tariff Commission, put in the same words that we had in all previous laws on the subject, the present law, and the Payne-Aldrich law.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then do I understand the Senator as construing these words in such a way as not to include peanut butter?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, certainly. This does not include peanut butter, nor apple butter, nor anything of that kind. It really is intended to mean what is generally understood to be a substitute for animal butter.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am glad to know that the Senator from North Dakota disagrees with the Senator from Utah on this matter, because I could not believe that it was the intent of the committee to impose a duty of 8 cents a pound upon what we ordinarily call peanut butter.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think the Senator from Utah intended to be understood that way, either; but we do have what we call a nut butter that is a substitute for butter. We have butter made from oil of peanuts with stearine, and so forth, added, and that is also a butter substitute; but peanut butter, apple butter, peach butter, and those things, of course, are not included.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator from Utah is of the same opinion still; but that is sufficient, Mr. President. I simply wanted to know what was the interpretation placed by the committee upon this additional language that they have written into the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am informed that we have no more copies of the first print of the tariff bill, H. R. 7456. I am told that there are only about three copies now in the folding room, and I ask unanimous consent that a thousand additional copies be printed for the use of the folding room.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator means in the same type as this?

Mr. SMOOT. The same that was printed before.

Mr. SIMMONS. The same type as this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am glad the Senator has made the request.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think the request ought to be granted.

Mr. SMOOT. I placed the number at a thousand copies because the thousand copies can be printed within the limit of $200, and that amount can be ordered printed by a simple Senate resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the bill have the index annexed to it?

Mr. SMOOT. Just the same as it was originally printed.

Mr. SIMMONS. The original print did not have the index.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I will say to the Senator, it had the index.

Mr. SIMMONS. The original print had the index?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; I mean the same as the bill of which we had a large number printed for distribution.

Mr. SIMMONS. The original copies on the desks of Senators have not the index.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the one that we have printed in large numbers had the index, and it will be printed just as it is.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that index matter is very important. It is the copy of the bill that was printed in small type that has the index. The copy of the bill that is printed in large type has not the index. Now, the Senator is asking to have additional copies of the large print, and I should like the index to be attached.

Mr. SMOOT. I should have to have a new resolution for that. There are indexes for the large print, but they are separate. Those can be obtained, I think, at any time we wish.

Mr. SIMMONS. I know they can be obtained; we all had them in the beginning; but they are very quickly lost, and now we have to have that small print by us and use the index in that. I think if the Senator would take a little time and draw the resolution in such form as to include the index, it would be very desirable.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will withdraw my request at this time and find out whether that can be done without too much cost and whether we can do it within the $200 limit that the law provides for a simple Senate resolution.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, day before yesterday there appeared in the RECORD, in connection with a speech of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], a statement with reference to the reincorporation of Morris & Co., meat packers. This statement is rather misleading, from my viewpoint, therefore I take this occasion to say a word in reference to it, and to state what I believe to be the exact situation in connection with this reincorporation.

The statement is a quotation from the New York Times of February 3, 1921, and is headed:

> One thousand two hundred and thirty-three per cent dividend in packers' stock—Morris & Co.'s report shows unannounced capitalizing of $37,000,000 surplus.

Mr. President, this would suggest to the average reader an annual dividend of 1,233 per cent on the company's capitalization. I want to point out the fact that it is really the accumulated earnings of the company covering a period of 18 years, extending from 1903, when it was reincorporated, to 1921.

This business was initiated in Chicago in 1859. For a long time it was the largest organization of the kind and the largest industry of the kind in the country. In 1903 it was incorporated for $3,000,000. This amount is said by those who assume to know to be very much less than the actual value of the property at that time; so that the $37,000,000 included in the stock dividend represents the earnings of this company of 18 years.

In this connection, Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD some figures showing the losses sustained by the packers during the year 1921, but I am only going to refer to them briefly.

In 1921 Morris & Co. lost $11,447,541.

In the same year Armour & Co. lost $31,709,000.

In the same year Swift & Co. lost $7,112,000.

In the same year Wilson & Co. lost $8,462,000.

I ask that these figures and the accompanying statement be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Morris & Co. in 1921, lost $11,447,541 before payment of dividend amounting to $525,000 on preferred stock—none on common stock. During 1921 their surplus was reduced approximately $12,000,000 and now is $1,299,255. Surplus in October, 1919, was $53,327,000. At the end of 1920 Morris transferred $27,000,000 from surplus account to capital stock account—this representing savings of many years. Paid no dividends on common stock 1921. The "profit" Morris & Co. were charged with making, 1921, therefore is a myth. Savings invested in machinery and equipment were simply capitalized.

Armour & Co. in 1921 lost $31,709,000 before paying from surplus dividend of $3,526,000 on preferred and $2,000,000 on common. Surplus at the beginning of the year of 1921 $80,711,000—at end of year $63,454,000. However, in 1921, reappraisal of machinery and buildings added $20,000,000 to fixed assets on books; thus loss for year actually was $20,000,000 above the $31,709,000 figures. The reappraisal was made on property purchased, buildings erected, and equipment acquired some years ago when markets generally were much lower than at present.

Swift & Co. in 1921 lost $7,112,000 before dividend out of surplus of approximately $12,000,000. Surplus reduced during year by $19,812,000.

Wilson & Co. in 1921 lost $8,462,000 before paying dividend on preferred stock of $744,000. Surplus reduced during year by $9,406,000. Paid no dividend on common stock in 1919–20–21.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, on yesterday I referred to the way in which the packers have accepted and are cooperating in the enforcement of the law supervising our market agencies; and I want to say here that the operation of this law so far has justified the faith of the friends of the legislation who endeavored so long to secure its enactment. Very recently, since the law was enacted, for the first time in the history of this industry the packers and the producers of this country have combined in their efforts, and are working harmoniously toward increasing the consumption of meat food products of the country. In doing this they are carrying out, as a part of the plan, the bringing of these food products to the consumers at the lowest possible cost. They have now established by this cooperation something very much more satisfactory in the way of relation between prices received by the producer and prices received by the wholesalers of this product—that is, the packers. There is a closer relationship to-day than there has been in the past, and these two agencies of this industry are now working hand in hand with a view of carrying that improvement to the actual consumers of the country; and before the efforts are ended we hope within the near future to bring into closer cooperation the representatives of the men who actually consume these products in the East.

The results of the legislation have been to increase good will and good standing in the industry, and as we have believed from the first it is calculated to and will undoubtedly result in a delivery of these products at a lower cost to the actual consumer, which from the beginning was the purpose sought by those who desired the enactment of the law.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Did I understand the Senator from Wyoming to say that the information which he has about Morris & Co., the packers, is to the effect that the enormous dividends which the New York Times quoted them as distributing last January, namely, over a thousand per cent, represented the earnings of 10 years?

Mr. KENDRICK. Eighteen years.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Then the facts are that they earned on their capitalization of 20 years ago about 60 per cent each year.

Mr. KENDRICK. Not necessarily. The statement was that at the time the company was organized the capitalization did not fully represent the value of the property, because it was more of a partnership than a corporation, after all, as was indicated by the Senator's own statement.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Not my statement; the New York Times statement.

Mr. KENDRICK. The New York Times statement. It is a close corporation, owned in the family, and, as it appeared to me, the statement made in the Times was more or less misleading, as it gave the impression that those people had earned 1,233 per cent as an annual earning.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I did not construe the statement to mean that. I made no comment upon it at all. I construed the article to indicate that there had suddenly come forth, which the public had discovered, this enormous capitalization dividend, which represented the earnings of a large number of years. I never thought it meant one year. So I do not think the New York Times differs very much from what the Senator said. He said that during a period of 18 years, on the capitalization, which was under the valuation of the property at that time, there was an earning amounting, as accumulated, to 1,200 per cent.

Mr. KENDRICK. The Senator in his statement made this comment:

I desire now to call attention to a newspaper article published in the New York Times in reference to the extent of the profits made by some of the packers, and to suggest to the Senate that there was not much need of increasing tariff duties that would be reflected in increased prices that the packers could charge the American consumers, or increased profits.

The impression I drew from the statement was that the stock dividends issued represented an annual earning.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I made no such statement, and the article in question gave no justification for that inference. The article reads:

The declaration of a stock dividend of 1,233 per cent is revealed in the annual report of Morris & Co., packers, made public to-day. The company has increased its capital stock from $3,000,000 to $40,000,000 by capitalizing $37,000,000 of surplus.

Of course, that means surplus over a long period of time. I read further:

The new stock consists of $27,000,000 common and $10,000,000 preferred, which is to pay 7 per cent annually and on which an initial dividend is expected to be paid within a few months.

The distribution of the new stock took place some time ago, but no announcement was made. The stockholders received 9 shares of new common and 3⅓ shares of preferred. The company is a close corporation, all the stock except a few shares held by officers being owned by the heirs of Nelson Morris, founder of the business, and the estate of Edward Morris.

I think the Senator's information that it represents the accumulated earnings and surplus of 20 years is valuable, and does help to explain the enormous dividends reported by the New York Times.

Mr. KENDRICK. My statement is made in justice to this industry, and in making the statement I also called attention to the actual losses sustained by Morris & Co. during last year, which, as I recall, represented about $11,000,000.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am informed by people who claim to have authoritative information that there is no occasion for expressing regret for the losses of the packers, because they met with the same losses which all other business people suffered in that year on account of the tremendous slump in their inventory accounts, and that the losses are due to charging off all depreciated values in their inventory. I am further informed that the profits made in South American plants more than offset the losses which they charged off on their books for the great depreciation in the value of their stocks, which every concern in the country experienced.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I want to make just this statement, that the packers need no sympathy from me; but I was actuated by a disposition to be fair and just to them and correct what appeared to be, from the quotation referred to, something of a false impression as to their earnings. I know the inference I drew from it was that they were earning enormous profits, when the actual figures show that they suffered losses along with every other industry, and even with every phase of the industry with which they are connected. There is no part of the industry of which I have obtained information—certainly not that of the producers—but what has suffered as terrifically and as disastrously, I may say, for a number of years as the packers seem to have suffered this past two or three years.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The dividend referred to was distributed in the year 1920, as I understand it from that article.

Mr. KENDRICK. Nineteen hundred and twenty-one.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The newspaper clipping is of January, 1921, but it says the information first became public in the annual report for 1920.

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes.

TRICOUNTY IRRIGATION PROJECT, NEBRASKA.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report on behalf of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. I report back favorably without amendment from that committee the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 215) providing for reinvestigation of the tricounty irrigation project, Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to make a reinvestigation of the tricounty project in Nebraska, comprising the counties of Gosper, Phelps, and Kearney, in said State, and to extend said investigation into Adams County, Nebr., with a view of ascertaining whether it is practicable to convey for irrigation purposes flood waters from the Platte River onto the lands of said counties.

For the purpose of making said investigation and survey there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I ask if the report is approved unanimously by the committee, so that there is no difference of opinion regarding it.

Mr. NORRIS. It is not only approved by the committee but the Secretary of the Interior gives it his unqualified indorsement in a letter which accompanies the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Interior be printed in the RECORD in this connection.

There being no objection, the letter of the Secretary of the Interior was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 28, 1922.

Hon. H. L. McNARY,
Chairman Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made to your letter of June 26, 1922, transmitting copy of S. J. Res. 215, with request for report.

The proposed measure is entitled "Joint resolution providing for reinvestigation of the tricounty irrigation project, Nebraska." It would appropriate from the General Treasury the sum of $5,000 for the purpose of irrigation investigations in the counties of Gosper, Phelps, Kearney, and Adams in the State of Nebraska.

I am informed that about 500,000 acres of cultivated land is involved. The rainfall in this section is inadequate, and it is proposed to supplement the rainfall by taking the flood and unused waters from the Platte River at times in the year when the water is available and storing the same in the subsoil. It is contended that through such storage of from 8 to 12 inches in the fall or spring, maximum crops can be produced with the average rainfall in that section.

I am in favor of the proposed investigation and the enactment of the resolution into law.

Respectfully,

ALBERT B. FALL, Secretary.

FISCAL RELATIONS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the provisions of House bill 10101, the District of Columbia appropriation act, the Chair appoints as members, on the part of the Senate, of the Joint Committee on Fiscal Relations between the District of Columbia and the United States the Senator from Colorado, Mr. PHIPPS, the Senator from Delaware, Mr. BALL, and the Senator from Georgia, Mr. HARRIS.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE—JOHN BURKE (S. DOC. NO. 228).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, Treasury Department, 1923, for the relief of John Burke, former Treasurer of the United States, in amount $9,100, so as to comply with provisions of existing law, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TAX SIMPLIFICATION BOARD (S. DOC. NO. 232).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, Treasury Department, fiscal year 1923, for expenses of the Tax Simplification Board, $7,500, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, NAVY DEPARTMENT, 1922 (S. DOC. NO. 229).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, Navy Department, fiscal year 1922, for payment of court costs, $45.20, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, WAR DEPARTMENT, 1922 (S. DOC. NO. 230).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, War Department, fiscal year 1922, for claims for damages to or loss of private property incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army, $95,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

EXPENSES OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD (S. DOC. NO. 231).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, Treasury Department, fiscal year 1923, for salaries and expenses, Federal Farm Loan Board, $35,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. EVANS, Mr. HARDY of Colorado, and Mr. WRIGHT as members, on the part of the House, of the joint committee provided for in the act approved June 29, 1922, entitled "An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1033) regulating the issuance of checks, drafts, and orders for the payment of money within the District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disageeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9527) to amend section 5136, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to corporate powers of associations, so as to provide succession thereof until dissolved, and to apply said section as so amended to all national banking associations.

The message also announced that the House had insisted upon its amendment numbered 4 to the bill (S. 831) to amend the proviso in paragraph 10 of section 9 of the Federal reserve act amended by the act of June 21, 1917, amending the Federal reseve act, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MCFADDEN, Mr. DALE, and Mr. WINGO were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurent resolution (H. Con. Res. 61) providing for the printing of 50,000 copies of parts 3 and 4 of House Report No. 408, being the report of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 24) providing for the printing of 5,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 179, Sixty-seventh Congress, entitled "Report of the United States and Canadian Government Engineers on the Improvement of the St. Lawrence River from Montreal to Lake Ontario," with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I find we can print 900 copies of the tariff bill with the index attached for $200. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed 900 copies of the tariff bill, in the larger print, together with the index.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator intend to include the amendments which have been made so far?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not think we should undertake to do that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why should we print it now? Have we not enough copies?

Mr. SMOOT. No; there are only three copies left in the document room. There are calls made on Senators and Representatives to send them out, and we have not the copies to send.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would seem to me, inasmuch as there have been quite a number of changes made, that it would be well, if we are going to print copies as late as this date, to give really the latest information on the tariff situation.

Mr. SMOOT. I hardly think we ought to do that for the purpose for which these copies are asked.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota would be a wise one if the amendments had been finally voted on; but those amendments have not been voted on in the Senate, and it might be misleading if we should send them out.

Mr. SIMMONS. This print is just to take the place of the bill we are using every day, and it ought to be reprinted without any change.

Mr. SMOOT. With the index added, there will be no change from the copies of the bill before us.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The order was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That 900 copies of the bill H. R. 7456 be printed, with the index attached, for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I will ask the Secretary to state the pending amendment, in order that what I may have to say about it may appear in the RECORD, following the proposed committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 101, line 22, after the word "Poultry" and the comma, the committee proposes to strike out "2" and insert "3," so that if amended it will read:

Birds, live: Poultry, 3 cents per pound.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, what I have to say on this amendment will be very brief. The Senate committee amendment increases the House rate of 2 cents per pound to 3 cents per pound on live poultry and birds. I think the increase is not justified upon the facts. I am opposed to the adoption of the Senate committee amendment. The history of the tariff legislation upon live poultry is as follows:

The Underwood Act provided a duty of 1 cent per pound for poultry and birds, and land and water fowl were free of duty. The Payne-Aldrich Act provided a duty of 3 cents a pound on live poultry, the same amount as provided in this amendment.

The proposed rate on live poultry is an increase of 200 per cent over the Underwood Act, and although the rate on poultry is the same as that provided in the Payne-Aldrich Act, there is the added provision for the same duty on birds and land and water fowls.

In 1919 our estimated production of poultry was 500,000,000 pounds. We imported only 1,500,000 pounds, about one-sixth of 1 per cent of our production. We imported one-sixth of 1 per cent of our production, and our exports were also insignificant. There seems to be no accurate estimate as to what they were. Our domestic production, if we add imports, makes our consumption about 301,000,000 pounds. If the increased tax on this one item becomes effective in increasing prices, the increase of 1 cent per pound over the House provision will exact from the consumers an increase of $3,000,000. If the increased rate over the Underwood law becomes effective, the increase to the consumers will be $6,000,000, and this over the present law.

Mr. President, we have here the same situation that we have at such length discussed in the consideration of the items of cream and milk. This increased rate is for the purpose of eliminating the small amount of poultry that comes over the Canadian border and is sold in the markets of the northeastern part of our country. Practically all of the importations are from Canada. Over 1,000,000 of the 1,500,000 pounds are from Canada; in fact, practically all of the live poultry comes from Canada, because I think the other pounds of poultry include birds other than those classified under the term "poultry."

So we are in the position of increasing the duty upon live poultry 2 cents per pound over existing law. Poultry was not included in the emergency law.

In view of the exceedingly small imports and in view of the fact that the imports are from our best customer, Canada, and in view of the fact that it is practically a local tariff issue, as the only part of the United States affected is the northeastern part, it seems to me that this rate is not justified. One-sixth of 1 per cent of our consumption of the enormous amount of 300,000,000 pounds of poultry is imported, and it is proposed to shut out the few chickens which the people in the cities and towns along the Canadian border can buy from the Canadian farmer. The same issue is involved here as in the items we have heretofore discussed. Have we any doubt, as was expressed in the discussion of the other items, that the bill intends to drive out of our markets the few products which come from our best customer, Canada, the only country that buys more of our manufactured products and even of our agricultural products than any other country?

The few agricultural products which she sells and distributes over the line we are attempting to exclude by increasing the duty 200 per cent over the present law. There can be no justification for this increased duty. No theory of protection is involved; there is nothing to exclude that will lessen the American producer's price—the imports are so small.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts always assumes that if we place a tariff duty upon any product it is necessarily going to raise the price of that product just so much above its present price to equal the duty we place upon it. But it somehow or other does not work out that way. When we had a duty of 3 cents per pound under the Payne-Aldrich law live poultry averaged from 12 to 15 cents a pound. Now, with only a 1-cent duty, the importing price is 24 cents a pound. So that it is very much more than one-third higher to double what it was when we had the higher rate of duty. Of course, we all understand that many other elements enter into the question of prices, and I doubt if the tariff would do more than merely steady the price.

Under the Payne-Aldrich law there was a rate of 3 cents per pound on live poultry. In the act of 1913 the rate of duty was 1 cent per pound. The estimated production in the United States in 1919 amounted to 600,000,000 pounds. During the first nine months of 1921 the imports of live poultry amounted to 373,498,000 pounds, valued at $89,267,000, or 24 cents a pound. On the basis of 24 cents a pound the 3-cent rate is equivalent to 13 per cent ad valorem, which is certainly not a high rate of duty, considering the amount that is coming over from Canada. I doubt very much if it will have any effect whatever upon the retail price of these commodities.

But I especially want to call attention to the second clause of the paragraph:

All other, valued at $5 or less each, 50 cents each; valued at more than $5 each, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, there is no amendment there. What is the use of discussing something we can not consider now? I have allowed three paragraphs to which I objected to pass without discussion because there was no committee amendment proposed. If the Senator is going to discuss matters which we can not vote on now, we will never make any progress. I intend at the proper time to object to some of the provisions of this bill not amended by the Senate committee, but it is a waste of time to do it now when the rules will not permit action on any amendments but Senate committee amendments.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; but I think it quite appropriate to say why the committee did not change that by either adding to or taking from. I simply call attention to what it means, namely, those at $5 or less each are really the canary birds and those that cost $5 are, for the most part, parrots. So it carries a duty of 50 cents each only upon singing birds, but it does give a very much greater tax, if it is a tax, upon the parrot—that bird which says the same thing over and over again day after day without any change. The committee without any provision of the rules was enabled to get after the parrot by giving a very much heavier duty.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, what application does the Senator from North Dakota expect to make of that language?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not want the Senator to expect any.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from North Dakota in what section of the country we raise parrots and canary birds in commercial quantities?

Mr. McCUMBER. This is purely a duty for revenue both upon the singing bird and upon the noisy parrot.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is the duty on live poultry a revenue duty, or is it a protective duty?

Mr. McCUMBER. We raise live poultry all over the United States, of course.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is for protection?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is for protection along the Canadian border line, over which the live poultry is liable to come. I do not know whether any quantity would come from anywhere else than Canada. I think not.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word upon this amendment. The Senator expresses the opinion that the increase in the present duty proposed by the committee will probably not increase the price of American-grown poultry.

Mr. McCUMBER. It may maintain and hold a little better price along the Canadian border. I do not think it will affect the price generally. I do not think anyone else thinks so, because the importations are infinitesimal as compared with the entire production.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, Mr. President, we have the case pretty well stated. The imports are so infinitesimal that a duty levied upon the product will neither raise revenue in sufficient quantity to be really considered, nor will it materially or to any appreciable extent advance the price of poultry in the country. Even upon the border, where it is said to be intended to operate principally, its effect would not be materially or beneficially to advance the price of poultry.

What is the purpose of it then? It will produce no revenue. It will not increase the price of the poultry raised in this country. I had understood, when we enacted the emergency tariff law, that the justification for that act was that the farmers of the country were in a state of financial embarrassment, that the prices of their products had been depressed until they were selling in many instances below the cost of production, and that the high rates were justified upon the theory that a situation had been created where we were justified in using the legislative power of the Government to advance the prices of agriculture. Now, it is here proposed to further increase the rate, and we are told that it will not tend to accomplish that beneficial purpose so far as the raiser of poultry even along the border is concerned. Therefore, there is no justification for the high rates upon poultry growing out of the theory upon which we justified the emergency tariff legislation. There are none of the benefits to accrue to the farmer which we said we desired he should have and which we made the excuse for the emergency tariff legislation.

We are then told in addition that the importations of this product are so small that there is no justification which grows out of the importations for imposing this high duty. If these facts be true, and they are vouched for by the chairman of the committee, why should we write into the bill a provision which can not be justified by any theory of the tariff which has ever been advocated by either party in this country? It can not be justified upon the ground of revenue. It can not be justified upon the ground of protection.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Now if we attempt to justify it upon the ground of protection, two things would happen: First, that there were imports of a substantial character coming in competition with the domestic product; second, we would have to show that there was a difference in the cost of production or a difference in the selling prices of the foreign article and the domestic article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish the Senator would let me develop this idea, and then I will yield to him.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I desired to ask the Senator if there was not another element to be considered?

Mr. SIMMONS. We will discuss that after I get through with this proposition.

I want to ask the Senator from North Dakota if he contends that a hen or a duck or a turkey which is raised just across the border in Canada can be produced at a cheaper price than on the American side of the border? Is there any difference in the labor cost of producing a duck or a turkey or a chicken on one side or the other of the artificial lines which separates this country from Canada, and if there is a difference in the labor cost of producing chickens in Canada on the border line and in the United States on the border line, what is that difference? Is it 3 cents a pound or 2 cents a pound or is there any difference at all; and, if there is any difference, what is it? Did the Senator from North Dakota have before his committee any information showing the difference in the labor cost of producing chickens on the Canadian side and on the American side?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am not an expert in the matter of the cost of production of chickens on one side of the line as compared with the cost of producing them on the other side of the line. It may be that the cost of maintenance is a little greater on this side of the line than it is on the other side; but I can not say as to that by any close calculation. I simply know that the general cost of living of the farmer, so far as the things he has to buy are concerned, is greater in the United States than it is on the Canadian side and, therefore, he should get a little larger profit on the things that he has to sell on this side, because his expenses are greater for the ordinary articles which he must purchase than are the expenses of the farmer upon the other side of the border. So I am willing to give him a little the benefit of this little duty of 3 cents a pound if it will help him. I have stated frankly to the Senator that, while I believe it will make a little difference to the farmer living around Detroit, who has competition from across the river, and it may help the farmer in selling in little local markets along the border line of New York and possibly all along the border, nevertheless I do not think that is going to add 3 cents a pound generally to the price of poultry.

Mr. SIMMONS. So, then, Mr. President, the difference in the cost of raising chickens on the border line between this country and Canada is to be measured by the difference in the cost of living of a family in Canada and of a family in the United States; that difference in the cost of living upon the border is reflected in the labor cost of raising chickens.

I mention these things because it seems to me that this, more than any other little item which we have considered thus far in the bill, shows the utter absurdity of some of the duties in the pending bill, and shows that they have been levied without regard to any principle whatsoever, because if there is anything in the world that can be produced as cheaply in one country as it can in another, especially when those countries may be divided only by an artificial line, it is poultry. I do not know that there is anything on the other side of the line that furnishes better feeding for poultry than there is on our side of the line; I do not know that the cost of producing a chicken is any greater on the Canadian side of the line than it is on the American side of the line; the Finance Committee has not attempted to find out whether there was any such difference; and when I ask the chairman of the committee if there is any difference, he says he does not know whether there is or not. All he does know is that the cost of living may be a little higher in this country than it is over there, and as a farmer raising chickens finds his cost of living a little higher than the farmer raising chickens in Canada, we must consider that in the determination of the question of whether or not there ought to be a duty on chickens.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I desire to say that I do not want him to think for a moment that I do not contend that labor prices are higher in the United States than they are in Canada. I think they will average probably 25 per cent higher here. Our land also is higher priced, but to what extent that enters into the cost of raising the ordinary poultry upon the farm I am perfectly willing to admit that I do not know.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I was sure the Senator did not know and had no information of that sort.

Mr. McCUMBER. Nor do I know whether it costs as much to raise a chicken in China as it does in the United States. However, we really live on a much higher plane than do Chinamen, and the Chinamen buy many things very much cheaper than we do, so I am willing to have a little duty imposed against the importation of frozen chickens from China.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator contend, then, that the Canadian chicken sells lower in this market than does the American-grown chicken?

Mr. McCUMBER. What was the Senator's question?

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator contend that the Canadian chicken, which is raised on the border, sells lower in the American market than does the American-raised chicken?

Mr. McCUMBER. I should hardly think that the retailer would make a difference in the price that he would charge for chickens based on where they were raised. Undoubtedly the cost is practically the same, no matter where the chicken comes from; but, may I ask the Senator, why did the Senator put a 1-cent duty on poultry in the Underwood law?

Mr. SIMMONS. It was put on for revenue purposes. The Senator says he puts this duty on for protection purposes, and I am trying to see if I can find an element of protection that justifies it.

Mr. McCUMBER. We treble the duty, and have 1 cent protection, and the Senator desires 2 cents protection.

Mr. SIMMONS. I asked the Senator from North Dakota the direct question if this duty was levied for the purpose of revenue or for the purpose of protection, and he said it was levied for purposes of revenue. I was merely testing out the protection theory as it is applied to the chickens. Now, if we apply it to eggs which are produced in China the theory in such a case has been that those eggs come in here and undersell our eggs, and that frozen chickens from China come in and undersell our chickens; but I never have heard that contention made with reference to Canadian chickens.

The Canadian chicken neither undersells ours nor is the labor cost of producing the Canadian chicken less than ours. Therefore we have a duty here which is said to be for the purpose of protection, although there is not a single element to justify protection.

Mr. President, I beg pardon for even taking the time of the Senate to call attention to so trifling a matter, and I should not have done so had it not seemed to me a good opportunity to show how utterly baseless are some of these duties upon the theory on which they are proposed to be levied. If they are levied for revenue, that is another question altogether.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I simply wish to add to what I have said that the wholesale selling price—I am not referring to the cost of production in Canada—but the wholesale selling price in Ottawa, according to the latest figures, is about 10 per cent lower than on the American side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Upon that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. He not being present, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLASS. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is temporarily absent from the Chamber. He is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If the Senator from Mississippi were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Poindexter

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 102, paragraph 712, "Birds, dead, dressed or undressed," after the word "Poultry" and the comma, on line 1, the committee proposes to strike out "4" and insert "6," so that, if amended, it will read:

Birds, dead, dressed or undressed: Poultry, 6 cents per pound.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator just let me make a general statement? Paragraph 711 puts live poultry at 3 cents per pound, and the change on line 1, page 102, from "4" to "6" is to make the difference in the loss—in other words, the differential between the live poultry and the dressed poultry.

I think it proper at this time to give just a little epitomized statement of importations, production, and so forth.

The act of 1909 gave a duty of 5 cents per pound on dressed poultry. The act of 1913 gave a duty of 2 cents per pound. During the fiscal year 1920 the imports were 1,765,296 pounds, valued at $753,931, or 43 cents per pound. During the first half of the fiscal year 1921—and that is as far as I have the record—the imports of dressed poultry amounted to 1,370,147 pounds, valued at $618,927, or 45 cents per pound. If the same importations continue for the last six months as in the first six months, there has been a very great increase in importations. On the basis of 45 cents per pound, the 6 cents a pound rate is equivalent to 13 per cent ad valorem.

On the second line, the paragraph as proposed to be amended reads:

All other, 8 cents per pound.

Mr. President, this means game birds, like quails, partridges, ducks, and so forth; and as we regard those game birds as a luxury rather than a necessity, we have given a very much higher rate on them—

All the foregoing, prepared or preserved in any manner and not specially provided for, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Those that are prepared or preserved in any other manner not specially provided for, as I am informed, are also products that come in under the luxury class.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the Senator has consumed more time than I would have consumed had I obtained the floor at the outset in explaining the opposition which the minority entertain toward this amendment.

I want to state just a few facts.

The production of dressed poultry is 600,000,000 pounds, and the importations are one-tenth of 1 per cent. We have here exactly the same conditions that were described in the discussion of the last paragraph. Here is an item where there are scarcely any imports. Whatever importations there are are from our neighbor and our best customer, Canada; and there being no revenue, there being no claim made that the increase of 2 cents per pound will be reflected in increased prices to the producer in America, nothing can be said in favor of this tariff rate except that it may give an opportunity for those who desire to do so to pretend that they are giving to the farmer what the manufacturer enjoys, the benefits of a protective duty. The difference is, however, in this instance that the protective duties are merely paper duties, while in the case of manufacturers who do not produce sufficient commodities to take care of our consumption they are invariably effective. One class, however, may be benefited, and that is the middleman or retailer. He may use this increased tariff to increase prices.

Mr. President, for the same reasons named in the discussion of the previous paragraph, I am opposed to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 2 it is proposed to strike out "20 per cent ad valorem" and to insert "8 cents per pound," so as to read:

all other, 8 cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 4 it is proposed to strike out "22" and insert "35," so as to read:

all the foregoing, prepared or preserved in any manner and not specially provided for, 35 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Paragraph 713——

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, I ask that paragraph 713 be passed over for the present. I notice that two or three Senators who are very much interested in it are not here, and I will ask the chairman of the committee to be kind enough to pass it over.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand, also, that one of the Senators who desires to offer an amendment to that paragraph is not well to-day, and therefore desires it to go over, and I will consent to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the paragraph will be passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Paragraph 715, black or silver foxes.

Mr. CALDER. I ask that that go over.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask also that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the paragraph will be passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Paragraph 717, honey: On line 17 the committee proposes to strike out "2½" and insert "3," so that if amended it will read:

Honey, 3 cents per pound.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the House bill fixed a duty of 2½ cents per pound upon honey. The Senate committee amendment increases that rate to 3 cents per pound. The Underwood law provided for a duty of 10 cents per gallon upon honey. The Senate amendment rate of 3 cents per pound is equivalent to a duty of 35 cents per gallon; so we have the Underwood rate of 10 cents per gallon and the Senate committee amendment rate of 35 cents per gallon, an increase of 250 per cent. The Payne-Aldrich rate was 20 cents per gallon. The emergency act contained no provisions for tariff duties on honey, so the Underwood law is still operative. So we have the Payne-Aldrich rate, 20 cents per gallon; the Underwood rate, 10 cents per gallon; the House rate, about 30 cents per gallon—between 25 and 30 cents—and the Senate committee rate, 35 cents per gallon on honey.

Estimating 11.75 pounds of honey to the gallon, the rate in the Senate bill represents an increase of 250 per cent, as I have stated, over the Underwood bill, and an increase of 75 per cent over the Payne-Aldrich bill. Our production of honey amounts to about 50,000,000 pounds, and is valued at $13,000,000.

If the production in small towns and on small farms should be included, the total would approximate 150,000,000 to 250,000,000 pounds, valued at about $50,000,000. Bee keeping is a side line with many farmers and gardeners, but is gradually becoming more important as a main enterprise.

Our imports of honey are very small. From 1910 to 1914 the average was only 104,000 gallons, valued at $57,000, principally from Cuba and Mexico. In 1913 the imports were 116,000 gallons, valued at $68,000. The imports fell to 75,000 gallons during the war years. Following the reduction of the duty from 20 cents to 10 cents per gallon, the imports in 1914 declined to 75,000 gallons. Even after the passage of the Underwood law, lowering the rate 50 per cent from the Payne-Aldrich rate, the imports were reduced. During the war, of course, they increased, as all other imports of foods produced increased.

In 1920 the imports from Cuba amounted to over 40 per cent of the total. So that if this rate succeeds in shutting out this product, it is going to injure our business with that country, which gives us the second largest amount of export business, Canada being the first and Cuba the second in the amount of business per capita done with our country.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Was there any evidence before the committee that this tariff was necessary to protect the American bee from the pauper bees of Cuba and Mexico? I suppose the pauper labor of the bees down there is threatening the existence of honeybees in the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. No more than there was need of a tariff to protect the chickens of America from the pauper chickens of Canada.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There might be some argument that those chickens up in Canada scratched unusually hard and vigorously for less food than the American chicken got on account of the climate. Now, we are talking about a climate to the south of us. Is it possible that the pauper bees of Mexico and Cuba, in a climate so calculated to ease and comfort, can produce honey cheaper than the bees in the stimulating climate of the United States?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not think even the Senator from North Dakota would claim that.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Responding to the thought of the Senator from Nebraska, that there are American men, women, and children employed in the care of the aforesaid bees? We are not concerned primarily with the happiness of mind of the individual bee, but we of California are thinking of the men and women engaged in that great industry.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that it is rumored that a most elaborate and scientific investigation on the part of the Tariff Commission has demonstrated that without this duty the American bee can not maintain the American standard of living. My colleague from Nebraska seems to show a startling unconcern about the busy and industrious American bee. Without this duty he would immediately drop to the low standard of living and dying, of dress and custom, in which we find the pauper bees of Europe, the uncared-for bees of Canada, the neglected bees of South America. Would you leave the bee family absolutely unprotected? Would you see the bee queen uncrowned? Would you have the bee drone uncared for? Would you leave the American bee without the protection of the law, without the wise and safeguarding ægis of this beneficent Congress? I am surprised at the brutal and callous indifference of the learned Senator from Nebraska to the happiness and the honor and the comfort of the great American bee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it had occurred to me that possibly the enervating climate of Cuba and Mexico would so detract from the activities of the bees down in those countries that it might be possible for the American bee, living, of course, in the higher standard of American life, enjoying a climate much more stimulating, to produce sufficient honey to compete successfully with the bees in those enervating climates. Is not that an argument which might be taken into account?

Mr. STANLEY. That weighs with me, and it should have weighed with the committee. Then another thing: There is a good deal in habit and environment. The American bee lives in a protected atmosphere. He works in a protected hive. He is robbed by a protected owner, and it will not be long before he will make protected honey from protected flowers, winging his way through a protected atmosphere; and perhaps sooner or later those flowers themselves will bloom under the beneficent influences of protected sunshine.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska evidently forgets that the bees in Canada and in Europe work longer hours than the bees over here. We do not want to compel our bees to labor as long as the bees in Canada and Europe labor.

Mr. STANLEY. I had not heard, but probably the American bee will organize under the beneficent influence of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill. It is pathetic, though, to see the utter indifference of the Democratic Party to the welfare of the American bee. Then, when you think of the men, women, and children who are dependent upon the activities of this bee, when you think of the arduous labor in placing a bee gum under a tree, and waiting for God and nature and the energy of the bee to fill it with honey! If they were not supported in their arduous task by this wise duty, I can now see the want and the penury and the unrequited toil of the happy bee owners of California, where God sends flowers all the year around, and sunshine with each returning day, to aid the poor, unprotected bee.

Just think of it. With nothing on earth but the California climate, California flowers, and California fruits to aid a California bee to have to lead an unprotected life, helpless against the competition of some foreign bee on a sand waste down yonder in Mexico, or perhaps some other bee trying to lead a precarious life among the frozen wilds of Canada. Or perchance he should be protected against the wayward bee who happens to make a little honey in China or Japan. Oh, Mr. President, if this duty is not imposed, I see the ruin of the American bee, the desolation of American industry, and broken-hearted dwellers all over the fair and once prosperous State of California.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator has entirely omitted the impending menace of competition from the German bee.

Mr. STANLEY. I forgot that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There the mark has fallen so tremendously that no doubt the bee is able to live at far less cost than the American bee, and I have no doubt that this country will be flooded with a great importation of honey from Germany in consequence, if the Republican argument is valid.

But, Mr. President, this has been a glorious day. The Good Book describes a country of prosperity as a land flowing with milk and honey, and this afternoon will be signalized by this Republican Senate in putting a higher tariff not only upon the milk but upon the honey, so that even our prosperity is now to be subjected to a tariff.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the case is much worse than even the eloquent Senator from Kentucky or the able Senator from Nebraska describes it. The exports of honey are many times the imports. Compared with a total production of about 12,000,000 gallons of honey, we imported only 151,000 gallons. It is so insignificant. Our imports were valued at $237,820 and the total American production was valued at about $50,000,000.

The exports of honey, largely to Great Britain, it seems—21 per cent going to the United Kingdom—were 1,147,000 gallons in the nine months of 1921, valued at $141,100. In every one of the years 1918, 1919, 1920, and 1921 the exports were much in excess of our imports.

In addition, our imports do not compete at all with the American-made honey. Even the salubrious climate of Cuba does not permit the bee to produce honey that competes with American honey. It is very much inferior. It is a much lower grade honey. It is called "wild" honey, in contradistinction to the cultivated honey of this country. We get back to these facts, that this is an industry producing in such large quantities that it exports a large amount of its production to foreign countries; that it is meeting with practically no competition from imports. No comparable product seeks to drive down the domestic price in the home market. There can be no justification whatever for an increase of 250 per cent.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, if it is true that the cost of the production of honey to the bee or anybody else in foreign countries and in this country is practically the same; if the operation, the plant, the machinery, and so on, are practically the same, if the exports exceed the imports, I can see but one good reason why this duty is imposed. It may tend to lower the high cost of living, and enable our protectionist friends on the other side, in so far as honey is concerned, to keep their platform pledges, and lower the cost of living wherever it is possible.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Let me read just a sentence from the Tariff Information:

> The great bulk of our imports consists in wild honey from the West Indies. It is lower in price and inferior in quality compared with the domestic production. It is chiefly used by large manufacturing bakeries and confectioners.

Mr. President, when it is considered that our domestic production is 200,000,000 pounds and our exports are larger than our imports, what benefits can the agricultural interests hope to obtain from this paragraph to compensate them for the increased duty upon the things they buy?

Mr. President, I think this is so flagrant a case that we ought to have the yeas and nays on it, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I listened with certain qualified admiration to the grandiloquent tribute paid to the bee falling from the lips of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. He was good enough to make reference to the State whence I come. Of course, there is a great difference between our two States. It is quite true that the climate of California is very delightful. Indeed, it is the land of eternal sunshine, whereas Kentucky is the land of eternal moonshine. As for Nebraska, I doubt whether its inclement climate would suffer any kind of a bee to survive. But we are not concerned with the happiness of the individual bee, however facetious or witty that may appear to some to be.

This is a very important industry, in which a great many American citizens, a great many in California and other of the American States, are engaged. Bees are not all wild as they are in Kentucky. They are somewhat domesticated, and it costs time and money to guard and protect them, all to the end that the product may be made available for human use. The cost of so doing in California and other American States is vastly more than the cost in other countries.

In respect to this particular item, as suggested by the committee, we are applying a doctrine which we think is economically sound; that is to say, we are seeking to make profitable an American industry, by giving it adequate protection, in order that American men and women may enjoy that prosperity. My learned friend and I now differ radically—perhaps we shall always differ radically—as to the two theories of tariff legislation. He would have the honey of other countries come in free of duty, or with a very low rate of duty. I would impose a tariff duty necessary or sufficient to equalize the cost of production here and abroad—and hence our firm, fixed difference of opinion.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. Has the Senator any authenticated figures on the difference in cost of production for the educated and the uneducated bee—the domesticated and the wild bee?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Oh, Mr. President, if my friend can come down from the heights of facetiousness——

Mr. STANLEY. I do not mean to be facetious. I am asking it in all seriousness. The Senator has applied the time-worn standard of equalizing the cost of production at home and abroad. Has he any figures or does he know of anybody else that ever had any, to show the difference in the cost of producing honey from a bee that is domesticated and from a bee that is not—the difference between the little wild bee with the long sting in Cuba and the brown Italian bee with the short sting in California?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If that be argument, it is argument. I am dealing with those who engage in this legitimate and important American industry. I do not wish to detain the Senate by quoting here elaborate figures or statements showing the vast amount in pounds and in value of this product. It is considerable. It is not insignificant. It is important in quantity and the number of people who are engaged in the industry. It is the industry with which we are dealing, as I am sure my learned friend from Kentucky apprehends very clearly. As to the cost of the industry here and in Mexico and in Cuba, it would be a very easy matter to show that it costs more to produce honey per pound for the market in California, for example, than in Cuba or in Mexico.

If the doctrine I am attempting to apply be time-worn, it is time-tested and time-defended; but I shall not undertake to defend that doctrine here and now. I content myself by saying that this rate of 3 cents per pound is not excessive, but less than adequate, applying the principles of protection, for which I stand.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I believe I can put the statement which the Senator from California has just made into appropriate language. In fact, the thought of the disaster that is about to overtake the United States if we do not give the bee some protection has driven me to forgery and I suggest this:

> How doth the little foreign bee
> Destroy our home-made honey.
> He sends his product over here
> And takes away our money.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will reply to that poetic gem, Mr. President, by saying that I would preserve the American honey eater for the American honeybee.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, just for the sake of the record let me state that the production of honey in the United States is about 200,000,000 pounds. The import prices are from 10 to 12 cents per pound. Therefore, 3½ cents per pound would be equivalent to about 25 per cent ad valorem. The present duty is 10 cents per gallon. A gallon weighs 11.75 pounds. Therefore, the rate is a little less than 1 cent per pound. Under the Payne-Aldrich law there was a duty of 2 cents per pound. We were importing in 1910 about 1,000,000 pounds. Under the present law in 1920 we imported 9,000,000 pounds, showing a very considerable increase in the importation.

Now, so far as the California honey is concerned I doubt if there is what might be called serious competition except in the matter of displacement, because the California honey is regarded by all as being a very much superior honey, as it comes from flowers, and so forth, which are used there, and brings a much higher price in the market than the ordinary wild honey or the honey that is imported. The honey from the Gulf States, and especially the western portion, where they have many flowers of different kinds nearly all the year round, is very similar to that which comes from the Central American section, and there is some competition, of course, with that class of honey, because they both sell for about the same price.

I simply give the data to indicate as nearly as I can about what the tariff means both as to ad valorem and as to the question of any competition.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. MCCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. As I understand the competition, if there is any, it is not between the finer qualities of honey made in this country. There is no honey that comes in competition with the fine honeys made in the central States and in California. The competition is between the lower grades of honey, the wild honey and the cheaper honeys which are imported.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I think that is correct, so far as price is concerned.

Mr. STANLEY. And also so far as quality is concerned.

Mr. MCCUMBER. To the extent that the product is displaced, there is some effect in the competition upon the value of the California product. There must necessarily be some, but the 25 per cent ad valorem duty is certainly not a high duty upon any honey or anything which may be regarded as a luxury.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, is there any question here of a compensatory duty?

Mr. McCUMBER. Compensatory duty upon what?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand the Senator's bill puts a duty on buckwheat. Buckwheat is used by the honey bee in producing honey, and I was wondering whether a compensatory duty was partly responsible for raising the tariff on honey.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has made quite a number of similar remarks which, I think, while possibly they lend some amusement to Senators and others, do not add any more to the discussion than if he would suggest that by placing a duty on butter we are protecting the American cow against another cow and to deduce therefrom that we were making a distinction between the standard of living of the American cow and another cow. We are, nevertheless, giving protection to the farmer who produces the butter. We are giving the agriculturist, the farmer, the bee man, who uses his labor for the production of honey, a protection that we think is not excessive, but is decidedly fair.

Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. STANLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. I was simply going to submit a few remarks on the honey proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will yield to the Senator in order that he may make his remarks, because mine will deal more or less with statistics.

Mr. STANLEY. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from California.

Speaking in all seriousness and very briefly, if there were importers of honey who were in the business of producing honey, as a few people are in the United States, there might be some ground for the Senator's very groundless fear—and I say it with all courtesy to my accomplished friend, the junior Senator from California. Honey is produced in this country, as the Senator from California well knows, by two kinds of bees and under two conditions. There is the old-fashioned wild black bee, the fierce black little animal that takes care of himself. He makes his honey in the woods. Now, the old farmers used to go out with a little conical bee gum, as they call them—they look a good deal like a stack of poker chips, but I know the Senator from California does not know what that is. They would capture a swarm of bees and put them in this gum and go and rob the gum when the time came.

Some years ago bee raisers began cultivating the Italian bee. It is more domestic than the wild bee. The Italian bees are more easily swarmed and controlled, and in some climates they are fed in the winter. In many places the honey is produced from buckwheat, which is sowed for that purpose. In other places, where the white clover is common, they make a fine quality of honey. It is a legitimate industry, of course, like anything else.

But, as the Senator from North Dakota has said—and it is a fact—there is absolutely no honey of that kind imported into this country; there is no competition whatever. The only honey that enters this country is the honey that comes into competition with the cheap honey or the wild honey or the honey that is extracted from certain parts of the comb of the honey which is full of dead bees or is dark or discolored or otherwise not up to the standard. That honey is extracted from the comb and is used principally for making cakes and in bread and similar things in the bakery shops. In the main it is only that cheap wild honey that comes into this country.

The imposition of this duty is another illustration of the wickedness or of the stupidity or of the folly of this bill. The only purpose that this duty can possibly subserve is to enable the bee growers, like every other class in this country, to form an organization and to fix an artificially high price for honey. In the event they do so, it is proposed to say to them, "Fix the price of this edible sweet, this necessity of life, as high as you please, and you have ready to hand a tariff wall that will cover it." Neither the Senator from California nor any other Senator advocating this duty can show where there is a single bee industry in the world which is shipping a pound of honey into this country.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, we have had a very charming and delightful interlude this afternoon. I wish to congratulate my friend from Kentucky and my friend from Nebraska upon the entertainment they have afforded us, even though it be at the expense of some of those I know very well who come knocking at the door of Congress asking protection for a legitimate industry in which they are engaged. Senators may indulge as they see fit in their humorous references to the bee; they may even reach the height which the Senator from Kentucky reached in descanting upon the bee, its labors, and the like, and their imaginative flights may even become poetic like those of the Senator from Nebraska; but, after all, let me assure the Senate there is a legitimate industry in this country engaged in the production of honey. It does meet with foreign competition and, meeting with foreign competition, upon the theory upon which we on this side of the Chamber are acting, it is entitled to such protection as will enable the industry to live.

My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] indulged in some statistics and I think he was in error in confounding, perhaps, imports and exports. Imports into this country are computed in gallons, while exports from this country are computed in pounds.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I tried to take that into consideration, I will say to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think, however, the manner in which the Senator from Massachusetts stated the figures as to gallons and pounds would lead his auditors to believe that each was of like measurement.

In April, 1922, the imports of honey into this country were more than double the exports from this country, and not only does that condition exist to-day but an industry which has been thriving in the past—thriving, perhaps, upon California flowers and California sweets, thriving, of course, in that community under conditions which are incomparable with other conditions in all the world—has been of late threatened with destruction and to-day is in a very serious condition. That Senators may understand, let me respond to the humorous references of my friend from Nebraska and to those of the Senator from Kentucky by reading a telegram which came to me from Orange County, Calif. Says this telegram:

REDLANDS, CALIF., April 18, 1922.

Hon. HIRAM JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.:

April Government market report quotes South American honey 5½ cents pound New York. No foundation for claim this is inferior honey. Present cost of production orange and sage honey approximately 10 cents per pound. Freight to eastern market additional. Future outlook very discouraging. Industry greatly appreciate further efforts to increase tariff.

ORANGE BELT HONEY PRODUCERS' COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION.

That is a sample only of the telegrams which have come to me from those who are engaged in this industry in California. Because of that fact I asked the Finance Committee to increase the rate on honey in this bill from 3 to 4 cents a pound. In their wisdom the committee declined to do so. I recognize the utter futility of pressing the amendment which I presented to the committee and which I also presented to the Senate as well, with the Finance Committee opposing. So I have to be satisfied, though our people are not so, with the rate which is prescribed in the bill of 3 cents a pound.

However, let me assure Senators who have had their laugh, in which I have joined, that this is not a matter of wild bees doing various things that Senators have described so pleasantly and so delightfully to-day. This is a legitimate industry, a legitimate business, in which men have become engaged and in which and to which they have given the very best that was in them. To-day, because of importations of honey, those men find themselves confronted with disaster. That is not a matter for the laughter or the humor or the scorn of any man. My friends on the other side of the Chamber would be the last ones, I am sure, if they realized the conditions that exist in this industry, to indulge in any humor respecting the men and the women who are engaged in it or to indulge in any scornful utterances regarding their efforts. Those people are fighting for their very lives in this little industry of theirs, and, fighting for their lives in a legitimate industry, they come here asking for this protection. Three cents is not enough; 4 cents ought to be accorded them. I take the 3 cents because it is impossible, with the conditions confronting me here, to obtain more; but I beg of Senators on the other side of the Chamber, no matter how they may laugh at some of the items in this bill, no matter how they may laugh concerning the bee and its busy work, to keep in mind that after all it is a legitimate industry, requiring and legitimately asking for and legitimately entitled to protection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). Transferring my general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], I vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on former votes as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore with regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. RAWSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Making the same announcement as heretofore with regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Making the same announcement as on former votes with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to announce the temporary absence from the Chamber of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. He is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If the Senator from Mississippi were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. STANLEY (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—44.

Ashurst	Edge	Ladd	Pepper
Ball	France	La Follette	Phipps
Borah	Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Poindexter
Broussard	Gooding	Lodge	Shortridge
Bursum	Hale	McCumber	Smoot
Calder	Johnson	McKinley	Sutherland
Cameron	Jones, N. Mex.	McLean	Townsend
Capper	Jones, Wash.	McNary	Wadsworth
Colt	Kellogg	Nelson	Warren
Cummins	Kendrick	Newberry	Watson, Ind.
Curtis	Keyes	Norbeck	Willis

NAYS—14.

Caraway	Overman	Simmons	Walsh, Mass.
Harris	Pittman	Stanley	Watson, Ga.
Hitchcock	Pomerene	Trammell
King	Sheppard	Underwood

NOT VOTING—38.

Brandegee	Gerry	Nicholson	Smith
Crow	Glass	Norris	Spencer
Culberson	Harreld	Oddie	Stanfield
Dial	Harrison	Owen	Sterling
Dillingham	Heflin	Page	Swanson
du Pont	McCormick	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	McKellar	Rawson	Weller
Ernst	Moses	Reed	Williams
Fernald	Myers	Robinson
Fletcher	New	Shields

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire at this time to ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its session on this calendar day it recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have here the deficiency appropriation bill. I ask the Senator from North Dakota if he will lay aside the tariff bill in order to permit its consideration.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I ask that the tariff bill may be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 12090) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN OIL COMPANIES.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, from the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 311, for the investigation of certain oil companies, and ask that it go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received and placed on the calendar.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for the passage of this resolution? If it provokes any discussion I shall not insist. It merely asks for certain information.

Mr. WARREN. If it provokes no discussion, I will consent.

Mr. KING. It asks for certain information from the Federal Trade Commission in regard to the Dutch Shell Oil Co. and other corporations that are acquiring interests in the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by the Senate and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission investigate and report to the Senate respecting the ownership by persons who are not citizens of the United States of the shares of the Union Oil Co., a corporation of Delaware; the Union Oil Co., a corporation of California; and the Shell Oil Co. a corporation of California; the interrelations between said corporations; the interest of said corporations in other corporations in the United States; whether or not Great Britain, the British Dominions, Holland, Rumania, or other countries having oil lands within their territories discriminate against American citizens with respect to the ownership of oil lands, or with respect to the ownership of shares in corporations which are organized to exploit and develop oil lands or engage in the production of petroleum; the acreage of oil lands in the United States which is held by lease or otherwise by said Union Oil Co., a corporation of Delaware; the Union Oil Co., a corporation of California; and the Shell Oil Co., a corporation of California, and their subsidiary and affiliated companies; the acreage of oil lands which has been acquired by said corporations or any of them within the last year; and what measures are being pursued by said corporations to further extend their holdings of oil lands within the United States.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12090) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 9, after the numerals "$271,000," to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the fiscal year 1922 is hereby made available until expended for payment of the cost of constructing necessary tunnels and conduits, laying pipes and cables, and for all other expenses, including labor and materials, necessary to connect the Capitol power plant with the Government Printing Office for the purposes herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee. I suppose the distinguished chairman has already secured permission to have the committee amendments considered first. I agree with the Senator in that, and I am glad he has done that; but unfortunately my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] and I are obliged, on a matter that is very important, to leave the Chamber soon. I have an amendment which is simply a reappropriation of an appropriation that is carried in the Indian bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the matter. I shall be glad to have the Senator send up his amendment and let it be read.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask to have the amendment read.

Mr. WARREN. I join in the request, on account of what the Senator stated, that it is necessary for him to leave the Chamber.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator on behalf of my colleague and myself, and I thank the committee also for their consideration in permitting this matter to be disposed of at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 12, after line 10, it is proposed to insert the following:

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

That the $150,000 reimbursable appropriated by section 2 of the act of February 14, 1920 (41 Stat. L., p. 417), for completing the construction of a dam with bridge superstructure and the necessary controlling works, for diverting water from the Gila River for the irrigation of Indian land on the Gila River Indian Reservation, Ariz., is hereby reappropriated for the fiscal year 1923 for such purposes.

Mr. WARREN. The Senate committee has considered that amendment, and has no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after line 20, to insert:

SENATE.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay from the appropriation, "For compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, and others," for the fiscal year 1923, to the financial clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, a sum sufficient to make the salary of the position $4,500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the amendment just agreed to, to insert:

For additional compensation during the fiscal year 1923 to the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, after the amendment just agreed to, the following:

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers to committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, after the amendment just agreed to, the following:

For stationery for Senators, committees, and officers of the Senate, $5,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire if these amendments have been printed?

Mr. WARREN. They have not, Mr. President. The Senator probably understands the situation—namely, that unless we pass this bill almost immediately it will have to go over for two months or more, and some of this money is needed right away. The situation in the other House is such that the bill must be passed to-night, so that it may be printed with the amendments and be ready for the conferees in the morning. For this reason the committee had not the time to accomplish the printing and the amendments offered are in typewriting.

Mr. KING. No doubt that condition is very satisfying to the Senators who have passed upon these items.

Mr. WARREN. These are the regular items asked for by the disbursing office, and are made necessary by legislation passed from day to day asking for investigations, and so forth.

Mr. KING. How much is added in dollars and cents in the aggregate?

Mr. WARREN. The items are separated. There is $50,000 for miscellaneous purposes, $30,000 for printing, I believe, $2,000 for printing speeches, and so on. It is in pursuance of an estimate from the office which takes care of our accounts. The Senate asked for so many investigations that $150,000 will not quite cover this class of expenditures for the fiscal year 1922.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the amendment just agreed to, to insert:

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the amendment just agreed to, to insert:

For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the amendment just agreed to, to insert:

For fuel, oil, cotton waste, and advertising, exclusive of labor, $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the amendment just agreed to, to insert:

For driving, maintenance, and operation of an automobile for the Vice President, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of insurance," on page 6, after line 3, to insert:

RENT COMMISSION.

For salaries and expenses authorized by section 103, title 2, of the "Food control and the District of Columbia rents act," approved October 22, 1919, as amended by the act approved August 24, 1921, extending the rent commission until May 22, 1922, and the act approved May 22, 1922, extending the said commission until May 22, 1924, fiscal year 1923, $72,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, under the heading "General Accounting Office," after line 23, to insert:

For necessary employees to enable the General Accounting Office to audit the accounts for the monthly payment of pensions, as follows: Four clerks at $1,400 each, 8 clerks at $1,200 each, 5 clerks at $1,000 each, 5 clerks at $900 each, and 1 messenger at $840, fiscal year 1923, $25,540.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator the reason for this appropriation, which seems to project itself into 1923?

Mr. WARREN. That is because of late legislation, in which the Senator and others probably participated, in which it is required that all pensions shall be paid monthly instead of quarterly; and legislation of that kind requires this number of employees. The amendment has been duly recommended and comes down from the Bureau of the Budget as a necessity. There are some other items of the same general nature. We go on legislating here from time to time without thinking where we are going to land; but the Appropriations Committee has a duty to appropriate under the law and has to appropriate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator's observation is quite accurate, that we go ahead here appropriating without thinking what we are doing. That is one of the complaints——

Mr. WARREN. I did not quite say that. I said that we go ahead legislating, which requires appropriations afterwards.

Mr. KING. Even with the qualification which the Senator has made, his statement is true; and I think we appropriate or pass legislation without thinking where the money is coming from. One distinguished Senator said that it was not the business of the House or of the Senate to inquire where the money was coming from; that it was the duty of the Finance Committee to raise the money, and that it is our duty to spend it. I know that the Senator from Wyoming tries to conserve the interests of the Treasury, but I do not think it can be said of the Senate, and if it were not improper I would say that it could not be said of the House, that we conserve the Public Treasury very much. I wish there were more economy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert after the amendment just agreed to the following:

Contingent expenses: For office supplies (including stationery) and equipment, repairs, and maintenance, and miscellaneous items in connection with the audit of monthly pension payments by the General Accounting Office, fiscal year 1923, $3,577.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, to strike out lines 3 to 15, both inclusive, in the following words:

Allotments of appropriations for medical and hospital services may be made during the fiscal year 1923 by the United States Veterans' Bureau to the United States Public Health Service for the care of beneficiaries of the United States Veterans' Bureau, and incidental expenses, and such allotments shall also be available for expenditure by the United States Public Health Service for the necessary personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers of the United States Public Health Service, clerical help in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including all personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers and others heretofore or hereafter detailed for duty to the United States Veterans' Bureau.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 1, to insert:

BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to use any balance remaining in the appropriation for "Salaries, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, 1922," to pay salaries of any employees of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce for the month of June, 1922, until such time as anticipated reimbursements shall have been received from officers of the department overseas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, under the heading of "Interior Department, Office of the Secretary," after line 7, to insert:

That portion of the appropriation for the Government Printing Office for the fiscal year 1922 which may be necessary to execute printing and binding for the Interior Department under orders placed with the Public Printer during the fiscal year 1922, within the total allotments to the Interior Department, Geological Survey, and Patent Office for that fiscal year, is hereby reappropriated and made available during the fiscal year 1923 for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, under the heading "General Land Office," line 17, to strike out "$5,726.85," and to insert in lieu thereof $16,726.85."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, after line 17, under the heading "General Land Office," to insert:

Registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of district land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 per annum each, fiscal year 1923, $45,850; for clerk hire, rent, and other incidental expenses of the district land offices, including the expenses of depositing public money, fiscal year 1923, $40,000; in all, $85,850.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire the reason for this appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. I am glad to tell the Senator.

In the Interior Department appropriation bill your committee were weak enough, perhaps, to agree with some economy proposed on the part of the House. It was proposed to close a portion of the land offices in the United States, and the legislation was so passed; but the House and Senate have concluded since then that it was an error and that it ought not to have been done, and they have by legislation attempted to cure that defect, and a large proportion of those offices will remain open during the coming year; and this amendment is to provide the necessary money. It would have been in the original Interior Department appropriation bill if it had not been stricken out. It would have been that much larger in the Interior Department bill.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that a number of land offices were closed, and I believe that some which are open ought to be closed.

Mr. WARREN. The authority rests with the Secretary of the Interior to do that at any time; but this was compulsory, as it came over to the Senate, and was allowed to pass both the House and Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Senate bill 3425, which we passed on June 10, 1922, created these land offices which had been by law abolished.

Mr. KING. I did not know that had been passed. It was passed when I was out of the Chamber.

Mr. WARREN. An explanation is due the Senator, because it appeared as if it were out of character. It was to remedy a fault.

Mr. KING. Has it become a law?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the conference report will be here to-night from the House. I expect it here every moment. This bill has been held up for some time in order that we might know whether that was going to pass or not.

Mr. KING. I want to say to my colleague that unless some very good reasons are shown for the adoption of the conference report when it is presented, there will be some opposition to it.

Mr. SMOOT. If the bill does not pass, the money will not be used; but if it does become a law, then we will have to have this appropriation in order to pay the expenses.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will not ask for the consideration of that conference report until full opportunity is given to examine it. I do not want it brought up to-night.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not over here yet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was on page 11, line 24, to strike out "fifteen" and to insert "thirty-five," on page 11, line 25, to strike out "eighty-four" and insert in lieu thereof "sixty-four"; and on page 12, line 2, to strike out "$211,830" and in lieu insert "$219,830," so as to make the paragraph read:

PENSION OFFICE.

For additional employees from July 15, 1922, to June 30, 1923, inclusive, to enable the Bureau of Pensions to carry out the provisions of the act of May 3, 1922, for the monthly payment of pensions, at annual rates, as follows: Three supervising clerks, at $2,000 each; clerks—13 at $1,800 each, 35 at $1,600 each, 45 at $1,400 each, 64 at $1,200 each; 2 messengers, at $840 each; 3 assistant messengers, at $720 each; in all, fiscal year 1923, $211,830.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was on page 12, after line 19, to insert:

JUDICIAL.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

For the salary of the reporter from November 1, 1921, to June 30, 1922, $5,333.33; and for his expenses during that period for professional and clerical assistance and stationery, to be paid upon vouchers signed by him and approved by the Chief Justice, $2,333.33; in all $7,666.66, from which shall be deducted such sums as may have been paid or allowed to the reporter for work done in the preparation for printing and binding of reports of decisions rendered since the opening of the October, 1921, term of the court;

For the salary of the reporter for the fiscal year 1923, $8,000; and for his expenses for professional and clerical assistance and stationery during that fiscal year, to be paid upon vouchers signed by him and approved by the Chief Justice, $3,500; in all, $11,500.

For printing and binding the official reports of the Supreme Court of the United States and advance pamphlet installments thereof during the fiscal year 1923, to be expended as required without allotment by quarters, $21,000.

Mr. KING. I observe that this is for a year which has passed.

Mr. WARREN. Part of it is passed, and part of it will be for next year. It provides differently for the pay of the reporter, because formerly he was partly paid like court clerks, who paid themselves out of fees, which would now go into the Treasury as miscellaneous funds. On the other hand, the reporter is paid a salary and certain expenses provided for in the same way. The bill providing for this has passed. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary present.

Mr. OVERMAN. We investigated this matter. It is what ought to have been done years ago. It saves the Government considerable expense in the printing of these reports. An investigation was made of the law-book concern which has been selling these books for at least $2.50, and wanted to raise the price to $3.

They had a contract with the reporter, and the reporter was getting twelve or fifteen thousand dollars each year. This stops all that and will give the Government the benefit. We will print the reports in the Government Printing Office and give employment to labor here in Washington and will print the reports at about half the cost at which they have been printed heretofore.

Mr. SMOOT. Six or seven years ago this same question was brought up in the Senate, and some of us thought at that time that it ought to be done to save that amount of money; but there were statements made before the Senate to the effect that this work required secrecy, that we could not get it done at the Government Printing Office, and so forth, and it was not done. Now we are trying to save this money.

Mr. WARREN. The law seems to be a very good one, and this is entirely regular.

Mr. KING. I observed the report some time ago of a controversy in which a distinguished Member of Congress from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] submitted some statements which seemed to indicate that the reporter had been either charging too much or obtaining too much from the sale of the books.

Without expressing any opinion as to the merits of that controversy, may I inquire of the Senator whether this adjusts the matter?

Mr. OVERMAN. This corrects all that. Instead of getting $15,000 he will get $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add, after the amendment just agreed to, the following, with a heading "Navy Department":

Payment of court costs:

For payment of court costs in suit brought by Samuel J. Smith against Andrew Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury; Edwin Denby, Secretary of the Navy; and Luther E. Gregory, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in which suit judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, $45.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, after the amendment just agreed to, with a side head, "Damage claims," the following:

To pay the claims adjusted and determined by the Navy Department under the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911 on account of damages occasioned to private property by collisions with vessels of the United States Navy and for which naval vessels were responsible, certified to Congress in Senate Document No. 216 of the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, $3,995.06.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, following the last amendment, the head "Naval Establishment" and the side head "Scrapping of naval vessels" and the following:

For necessary expenses in connection with the care and preservation of ships whose construction has been suspended pending the taking effect of the treaty limiting naval armaments, and for expenses of handling, preserving, and inventorying material on hand or in course of fabrication for said vessels, including charges for freight, mileage, telegraph and telephone tolls, and clerical and technical services, and toward payment of bills of subcontractors for material already completed for these vessels, $5,000,000, to be available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert the side head "Reimbursement of Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co." and the following:

For reimbursement to the Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co., for expenses incurred under contract dated March 27, 1919, for erection of radio towers at Croix de Hins, Gironde, France, and allowed by the General Accounting Office February 8, 1922, $2,167.24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert the side head "Naval air station site, Camp May, N. J.," and the following:

Compensation for property taken over by the President for the naval air station site at Camp May, N. J., in addition to the amount now available, $180,930.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Treasury Department," on page 13, after line 18, to insert the following with a subhead, "Office of the Secretary":

Assistant to the Secretary, to perform such duties in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury as may be prescribed by the Secretary, fiscal year 1923, $5,000.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether this is an additional office that was created?

Mr. WARREN. It is an office which was vacant when we passed the regular bill, so we left out $5,000 and thereby saved $5,000. It is now desired to fill the office, and I think it is very necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 26, to insert a subhead, "Tax Simplification Board," and the following:

For expenses of the Tax Simplification Board established in the Treasury Department under the provisions of section 1327 of the revenue act of 1921, approved November 23, 1921, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, as authorized under paragraph 2 (e) of said act and section, $7,500, this amount, and also the $3,500 appropriated for expenses of the Tax Simplification Board by the second deficiency act of March 20, 1922, being available for personal and other services and expenses in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 14, under the subhead "Mints and assay offices," to insert:

Office of the Director of the Mint: For contingent expenses of the Bureau of the Mint, to be expended under the direction of the director: for assay laboratory chemicals, fuel, materials, balances, weights, and other necessaries, including books, periodicals, specimens of coins, ores, and incidentals, fiscal year 1921, $5.08.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, following the amendment just agreed to:

For examination of mints, expenses in visiting mints for the purpose of superintending the annual settlements, and for special examinations and for the collection of statistics relative to the annual production and consumption of the precious metals in the United States, fiscal year 1921, $10.80.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 16, to insert:

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

NATIONAL HOME FOR LEPERS.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to continue in effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy, and to prevent the spread of leprosy in the United States," approved February 3, 1917, fiscal year 1923, $100,000: Provided, That a statement showing the expenditures made under this and former appropriations for this purpose shall be submitted to Congress on or before December 1, 1922.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish now to offer personnally an amendment which has been duly considered, but as it might seem to contain legislation I offer it as an individual Senator and ask that it may be read. I hope that it will be unanimously accepted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. Following the amendment just agreed to the Senator from Wyoming moves to insert the subhead, "Immigration Service Hospital, Ellis Island, N. Y.," and the following:

The appropriation "Pay of personnel and maintenance of hospitals, 1923," carried under the Public Health Service, in the Treasury Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1923, is also made available to enable the Public Health Service to operate the hospital of the Immigration Service at Ellis Island, N. Y., on the basis of the same items of expense shared by each service during the fiscal year 1922. The Immigration Service shall reimburse the Public Health Service on the basis of per capita rates fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the sums received by the Public Health Service from this source shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 14, after line 21, to insert a subhead, "Federal Farm Loan Bureau," and the following:

Salaries and expenses, Federal Farm Loan Board (reimbursable): For salaries of four reviewing appraisers at not to exceed $5,000 each per annum, and the traveling expense of such reviewing appraisers, fiscal year 1923, in all $35,000: Provided, That on the 1st day of January, 1923, and the 30th day of June, 1923, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall assess the salaries and expenses of the positions hereby provided for, and paid during the preceding half year, against the several Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks in proportion to the gross assets of such banks at such time, and the funds collected by such assessment shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator whether there is any law authorizing the creation of these five new positions. I know some time ago I had the matter up with some members of the board, and I understood from them that they had abandoned the idea of creating these positions.

Mr. WARREN. What does the Senator mean by positions?

Mr. KING. Reviewing appraisers at $5,000 a year.

Mr. WARREN. I have heard of it, and I know the appraisers in the different localities are doing this work. This is reimbursable to enable them to make use of the money for the appraisers' office.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the amendment on the ground that it is general legislation. It may be that it is a wise protection to have a supervisory agency to check up the appraisements made by the local appraisers, because it is quite conceivable that the local appraisers might be inclined to look with great favor upon local valuations.

Mr. WARREN. I happen to have had communication with a new bank that was established during the past year and I know as soon as they opened they had to assent to the appointment of an appraiser in chief by the Government, independent entirely of the local appraisers, to check up and pass upon appraisements, and to go into the field so that he might know we were receiving a proper appraisement.

Mr. GLASS. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if the amendment was sent up by the Federal Farm Loan Board?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, yes; it was sent up by the board. The chairman of the board sent it up to us.

Mr. KING. I am still not enlightened as to whether this is new legislation.

Mr. WARREN. No; it is a payment of money for additional appraisers for new banks, and making it available now instead of asking the men to do work without regular pay; it is to pay as we go and it is reimbursable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 15, after line 5, to insert:

Relief of John Burke: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase and deliver bonds of the issues described in private act No. 70 approved June 3, 1922, entitled "An act for the relief of John Burke, former Treasurer of the United States, for loss of bonds without fault or negligence on the part of the said former Treasurer," and to further enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the amount of matured and accrued interest as may be due at the time of purchase and delivery of said bonds. The total cost of the bonds and the amount payable as interest shall not exceed the sum of $9,100, which sum is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, following the amendment just agreed to, to insert, under the subhead "Public buildings":

Cape Charles (Va.) Quarantine Station: For payment to the Empire Machinery & Supply Corporation, of Norfolk, Va., for balance due on account of materials furnished in connection with construction operations at the Cape Charles quarantine station, Craney Island, Va., $199.78.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 8, to insert, under the subhead "Medical and hospital department," the following:

For amount required to pay adjudicated award for lands condemned for use by the War Department at Walter Reed General Hospital, Washington, $44,109.22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 15, before the words "the American" to insert "for the use of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 3, to increase the total appropriation for settlement of claims from "$3,203,000" to "$4,103,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 7, to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$48,500," so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That in the event any commission or authorized committee is sent abroad to adjust the claims mentioned herein, such expenses (not to exceed $48,500) as are necessary for such commission or committee properly to perform its duties shall be payable from the funds herein extended, including traveling expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, at the end of line 9, after the word "including," to insert:

compensation of employees in the United States and abroad, the cost of needed supplies,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, at the end of line 13, and before the period, to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That of the total amount herein expended, a sum of not exceeding $900,000 may be applied to settlement of claims in admiralty under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad," approved April 18, 1918, arising from the operation of the Army Transport Service in foreign waters.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator what this refers to?

Mr. WARREN. This is not a new appropriation. The appropriation has already been made, as other matters have been made heretofore, in the settlement of certain claims abroad. The amendment refers to amounts where they have been adjudicated and where the language is changed so that they can be handled abroad and also handled here in America. It is more convenient to handle some of them here.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 20, after the numerals "357" and before the comma, to insert:

And Senate Document No. 222.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 25, to strike out "$22,844.32" and insert "$104,418.88," so as to read:

Judgments, United States courts: * * * Under the United States Housing Corporation, $104,418.88.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 1, in the total, to strike out "$120,243.26" and insert "$201,817.82."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 24, after the numerals "356" and before the comma to insert "and Senate Documents Numbered 221 and 226."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items under "Judgments, Court of Claims," on page 21, line 1, to strike out "$334,156.83" and insert "$367,655.05," so as to read:

Under the War Department, $367,655.05.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 4, to strike out "$1,157.94" and insert "$17,927.02," so as to read:

Under the Post Office Department, $17,927.02.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 4, to insert:

Under the Department of Justice, $2,552.84.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 5, to insert:

Under the United States Housing Corporation, $18,880.55.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, in line 6, after the words "in all," to strike out "$472,683.60" and insert "$584,384.29."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. The Secretary has reached in the reading the subtitle "Audited claims." I wish to say that those stand as they came from the House, and are all in the general nature of judgments and are hardly open to any amendment or consideration. I ask that the reading in detail may be dispensed with and that they may be accepted as given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 4, to insert:

AUDITED CLAIMS.

SEC. 3. That for the payment of the following claims, certified to be due by the General Accounting Office under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1919 and prior years, unless otherwise stated, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 219, reported to Congress at its present session, there is appropriated as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 34, line 5, to strike out the numeral "3" and insert "4," so as to read: "Sec. 4."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This completes the committee amendments.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 9, after line 23, insert the following:

For the investigation, improvement, encouragement, and determination of the adaptability to different soils and climatic conditions of pecans, almonds, persian walnuts, black walnuts, hickory nuts, butternuts, chestnuts, filberts, and other nuts, and for methods of growing, harvesting, packing, shipping, storing, and utilizing the same, fiscal years 1922 and 1923, $5,000.

Mr. WARREN. This is to cure a fault in the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was supposed to contain this provision. It is, of course, legislation, but the committee are favorable if there is no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 9, line 23, insert the following:

For conducting such investigations of the nature and means of communication of the disease of citrus canker, and for applying such methods of eradication or control of the disease as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture may be necessary, and cooperation with such authorities of the States concerned, organizations of growers, or individuals as he may deem necessary to accomplish such purpose, $150,000; and, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, no expenditures shall be made for these purposes until a sum or sums at least equal to such expenditures shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by State, county, or local authorities or by individuals or organizations for the accomplishment of such purposes: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the cost or value of trees or other property injured or destroyed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I need not say that this is susceptible of being construed as legislation; of course, it is legislation. But it is a matter of emergency, and I understand that it is considered of importance by several of the States. I have no objection to offer, provided unanimous consent of the Senate may be given for its introduction. I do not know whether it can be protected in conference, but the committee have no hostility toward it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to have spread upon the RECORD a letter from the Department of Agriculture recommending the amendment.

There being no objection, the letter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, June 28, 1922.

Hon. PARK TRAMMELL,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: Dr. W. A. Taylor, Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, has just brought to my attention your letter of June 27, in which you state that you have introduced an amendment to be offered to the general deficiency bill, page 9, line 5: "For eradication of citrus canker in Florida, $150,000."

The Bureau of Plant Industry, as you know, is very deeply interested in this matter, and I am very glad for this opportunity to comment on the present situation as it appears to us to bear upon the eventual success of the campaign for eradicating citrus canker from this country. It had been our understanding that consideration of all appropriations needed during the new fiscal year would be delayed until after the 1st of July. In view of the intention of the House to recess in the near future consideration of any increase in funds for the eradication of citrus canker might, of course, be so seriously delayed as to occasion a breakdown in the eradication work.

Although from the outset it has been realized that the attempt to eradicate a virulent bacterial disease was an undertaking of unusual difficulty, the success which has attended the work during the past four years had led us to believe that the disease had been so largely eliminated that very material decreases in the inspection force, working not only in Florida but throughout the Gulf region, was possible. The history of the disease is, perhaps, effectively summarized by a statement of the Federal appropriations made for fighting citrus canker in cooperation with the Gulf States:

Appropriations for citrus canker.

Urgent deficiency, January, 1915	$35,000
Urgent deficiency, February, 1916	300,000
Agricultural appropriation:
1917	250,000
1918 ($180,000 immediately available)	430,000
1919	250,000
1920	196,320
1921	109,720
1922	79,720
1923	30,000
Total	1,680,760

Unfortunately, it would now appear that we have been somewhat overconfident of our success and that by the rapid reductions recommended in the last two years we had actually lost some ground, which will result not only in individuals losing money, through the spread of the infection, but also undoubtedly would delay the final completion of the eradication work. On the 20th of May an outbreak of citrus canker in the vicinity of Davie, Broward County, Fla., was reported. This epidemic has affected approximately 700 trees, and the most serious problem in connection with this outbreak is not the number of infected trees, although this is by far the most extensive outbreak that we have had to deal with for several years, but the fact that workmen have gone from properties now known to be infected to properties located at more or less distant points. Earlier experience in the canker work leads us to class all of such properties under suspicion.

This is the second canker pocket to be found in Florida, although the one found under somewhat similar circumstances last year was more isolated and had not resulted in such serious loss by the time it was discovered. Two small outbreaks of canker have been found in Mississippi during the past two years, although neither of these have been of sufficient size to make them commercially so dangerous. One small pocket outbreak was discovered during the past season in Alabama, and scattered cases of canker are known still to occur in Louisiana and Texas.

The heavy losses resulting from such an outbreak as the present one at Davie, Fla., show that our plans for gradually working out the scattered canker pockets is likely to prove more costly to the State and Federal funds, as well as to individual citrus growers, than would a somewhat more adequately financed inspection campaign. With the funds available from State and other sources in Florida and throughout the Gulf region, the sum you have proposed for the eradication activities might prove to be adequate. After a very careful consideration of the matter, however, our experts are of the opinion that it would be in the interests of economy to urge an appropriation of $194,000 for enlarging the canker eradication work during the coming fiscal year. This recommendation is made with the expectation that it is in the interests of Florida, as well as of the Gulf region as a whole, to push to completion as rapidly as possible the canker eradication campaign. Appropriation of $194,000 would, therefore, contemplate material increase in the work in Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama, as well as in Florida, if such a sum can be provided.

Two methods of meeting the present emergency appear to me to deserve attention: First, the immediate consideration of the provision of funds for supporting the canker eradication activities substantially as outlined in the amendment submitted by you and reported on page 10276, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; second, the temporary support of canker activities under the authority for interchange of appropriations given me in the appropriation act for the coming fiscal year.

I am raising this question with the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, and my further action in this matter will be in accordance with his suggestions.

Sincerely,

HENRY C. WALLACE, Secretary.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment which is subject to a point of order, but which I think will not be objected to by the committee, to reimburse officers of the Government who paid the rent of their offices in the Panama Canal Zone when they should not have been required to do so. A bill covering the matter has already passed the Senate, as drafted by the War Department, and is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 13, after line 18, insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to William Howard May the sum of $280.32, being the amount collected from the said William Howard May for rent of quarters while holding the office of marshal of the district of the Canal Zone.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to William K. Jackson the sum of $77.13, being the amount collected from the said William K. Jackson for rent of quarters while holding the office of district attorney of the Canal Zone, said refunds to be made out of the appropriation for maintenance and operation of the Panama Canal.

That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reopen the accounts of John H. McLean, former paymaster of the Panama Canal, and allow credit to the said John H. McLean, for payments made by him, as follows: $470.12 paid to Charles R. Williams as a refund of the amount collected from him for rent of quarters while holding the office of district attorney of the Canal Zone; $403.33 paid to Miguel A. Otero as a refund to him of the amount collected for rent of quarters while holding the office of marshal of the Canal Zone; $214.83 paid to Burt New as a refund of the amount collected from him for rent of quarters while a land commissioner in the Canal Zone; and $114.68 paid to George A. Connolly as a refund of the amount collected from him for rent of quarters while a land commissioner in the Canal Zone.

Mr. WARREN. The committee has no objection to the proposition. It has been fully considered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 15, after line 5, insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury and the General Accounting Office are hereby authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States certain items of unavailable funds in the sum of $15,956, now carried in the accounts of the office of the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at Boston, Mass., and in the general account of the Treasurer of the United States as unavailable funds, and representing a shortage found upon the discontinuance on October 25, 1920, of the Subtreasury at Boston, Mass., in the amount of money belonging to the United States while in the custody of said assistant treasurer, the loss of said money having occurred through no fault or negligence on the part of said assistant treasurer, as set forth in Senate Document No. 400, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, and for this purpose the sum of $15,956 is hereby appropriated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, which was submitted on February 15, 1921, and the letter of the present Secretary of the Treasury, dated May 19, 1922, in reference to the amendment to the bill which has just been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letters referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed in the RECORD.

The letters are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 15, 1921.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for favorable consideration of the Congress an estimate of appropriation, in the sum of $15,956, required by the Treasury Department to enable the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to credit said sum in the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States, that amount being now carried in the accounts of the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, Mass.

The subtreasury at Boston, Mass., was discontinued on October 25, 1920, and the final asset and liability statement as of that date submitted by the assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, Mass., shows the following balances due the United States, viz.:

Shortage in shipment of unfit currency April, 1918	$2,456
Shortage in gold certificates held in reserve fund found by Treasury's representatives in discontinuing this office Oct. 25, 1920	13,500

The assistant treasurer at Boston, in the accompanying letter, sets forth the facts in the case, stating that, while he gave every attention possible to the work of his office, he had no physical contact with the moneys, and makes request for relief, in which I concur, as there appears to be no just reason why he should suffer this loss after exercising due diligence and care in the conduct of his office.

Respectfully,

S. P. GILBERT, Jr.,
Acting Secretary.

OUTSTANDING ITEMS—ASSISTANT TREASURER UNITED STATES, BOSTON, MASS.

1. Balance to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, as shown by the books of this office at the close of business October 25, 1920. $15,956.

Above balance reported by the assistant treasurer at Boston, Mass., in final asset and liability statement dated October 25, 1920, as—

Shortage in shipment of unfit currency, April, 1918---------- $2,456
Shortage in gold certificates held in reserve fund found by Treasury's representatives in discontinuing the office, Oct. 25, 1920---------- 13,500

2. Under date of October 25, 1920, the assistant treasurer at Boston debited $86,500 as a transfer of funds to the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston. This amount has not been credited by the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston. The transfer of funds document issued therefor bears the following notation:

"Gold certificates carried in the account of the assistant treasurer as 'special gold fund,' which amount is transferred to Federal reserve bank to be held in custody and for which the receipt of the Federal reserve bank is filed with report of H. P. Huddleson."

3. Correspondence relative to above shortage of $2,456 with Mr. Broughton.

4. Superintendent of Mint, Philadelphia, has advised this office by phone that all gold coins received from the assistant treasurer at Boston have not been counted.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES SUBTREASURY,
Boston, Mass., January 25, 1921.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am bringing to your attention the amount charged to my account as assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston of $15 956, representing a shortage of $2,456, reported in shipments of currency to Washington in April, 1918, and a shortage of $13,500, found by the committee in charge of the examination and count, during the transfer of the funds in my custody to the Federal reserve bank at Boston on October 22, 1920, the date on which the Boston subtreasury was discontinued.

Both the shortages referred to above occurred in currency deposited by the Federal reserve bank between January 1, 1918, and May 1, 1918, and was a part of about $65,000,000 in gold certificates held in reserve and was largely in notes of $10 denomination.

My purpose in taking this matter up with you at this time is in the anticipation that you will arrange to submit to the present session of Congress a bill of relief to clear my account of the items in question.

I wrote you on October 22, reporting this matter, and stated that I had called upon the Secret Service agent of this department for an investigation of the office, and they have had the matter in hand since that date, but I have deferred action until now awaiting their report, which I have not seen but which has no doubt reached your department.

In connection with these discrepancies attention is called to the great volume of work which has been done at the Boston subtreasury during the past six years, constantly increasing since I took the office in 1913, the balance on hand of about $18,000,000 at that time rising to over $100,000,000, besides having the custody on more than one occasion of over $400,000,000 in coupon bonds and $25,000,000 in Federal reserve notes. Currency was received and paid out during the war in sums greater than ever before in the history of the Boston office, and many unusual duties, such as the issue of emergency currency, deposits for relief of Americans abroad, and the collection of notes for funds advanced in Europe, were placed upon this office.

The force was wholly inadequate to meet these emergencies, and many of our best men resigned to seek other employment or went into the war, some of those remaining being way beyond the age when they could be utilized with safety or allowed the responsibility necessary to conduct the work in an office of this character, although willing and anxious to do the best they could.

Oftentimes the force was from three to five clerks short and there was much difficulty during the war in securing competent help from the civil-service register, and our employees often worked overtime without additional help or compensation. The office has turned back into the Treasury over $6,000 as unexpended balance from salary appropriations, due in a measure to the inability to keep vacancies filled with competent help since 1914.

Personally I gave every attention possible to the work of the office, although I had no physical contact with the moneys, depending entirely upon the force of the employees as I found them when I took the office, or as I was able to maintain it under the existing regulations and long-established custom, to do the work in an efficient and honest manner. It is needless for me to say how much I regret this shortage, but I do not see how I could have done more to avoid it.

The first shortage occurred in April, 1918, $2,456, in a shipment of currency to Washington. It was not reported by the department until June, and it was two weeks later before the full details could be obtained.

No examination of the office had been made for nearly four years, and I repeatedly asked that such ar examination be made, without result, until the final transfer and discontinuance of the subtreasury, on October 22, 1920.

The shortage of $13,500 was in the same class of currency as the item of $2,456, but was held and not shipped to Washington under instructions from Washington to discontinue canceling and making these shipments, as had been the custom, thereby accumulating large amounts of currency in value and bulk.

The above are the facts in the case, and I shall feel greatly obliged to you if you will recommend to Congress the relief which I seek. I believe favorable action has always been granted where the Treasurer or assistant treasurer had no personal contact with the money lost.

Respectfully,

CHARLES B. STRECKER,
Former Assistant Treasurer, United States.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 19, 1922.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to invite attention to Senate Document No. 400, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, relative to adjustment of the accounts of the former assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, Mass. The subtreasury at Boston, Mass., was discontinued on October 25, 1920, and the final asset and liability statement as of that date showed a balance due the United States of $15,956, which sum remains unadjusted in the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States and the accounts of Charles B. Strecker, former assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, Mass.

It is my understanding that it has been the uniform practice of Congress to grant relief to the Treasurer of the United States and assistant treasurers of the United States in matters of this nature where there has been no personal negligence or fault on their part, the more recent cases being the following:

In 1906 there was a loss of $61,500 at St. Louis, Mo.
In 1907 there was a loss of $173,000 at Chicago, Ill.
In 1907 there was a loss of $3,000 at Boston, Mass.

The act relieving the assistant treasurer at Chicago may be found on page 1464 of volume 36, part 2, United States Statutes at Large. The act relieving the assistant treasurer at Boston is on page 347, volume 36, part 1, United States Statutes at Large, and the act relieving the assistant treasurer at St. Louis is on page 1866, volume 36, part 2, United States Statutes at Large.

There is inclosed herewith a draft of legislation which is suggested as appropriate to the case, and if an appropriation of $15,956 is made it will not involve the expenditure of any money from the Treasury but will provide for the adjustment of the accounts upon the books of the Treasury Department by bookkeeping entries necessary to close the accounts.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON, Secretary.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury and the General Accounting Office be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States certain items of unavailable funds in the sum of $15,956 now carried in the accounts of the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, Mass., and in the general account of the Treasurer of the United States as unavailable funds and representing a shortage found upon the discontinuance on October 25, 1920, of the subtreasury at Boston, Mass., in the amount of money belonging to the United States while in the custody of said assistant treasurer, the loss of said money having occurred through no fault or negligence on the part of said assistant treasurer, as set forth in Senate Document No. 400, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, and for this purpose the sum of $15,956 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. KING. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill the following:

That to carry out the provisions of the act of May 27, 1902 (32 Stat. p. 263), and other acts relating thereto and amendatory thereof, for the sale of lands in the former Uintah Indian Reservation, in the State of Utah, ceded by the Uintah and White River Tribes of Ute Indians to the United States, and for the reimbursement of the United States out of the proceeds of such sale for any moneys advanced to said Indians and the use of the remainder for their benefit, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment on the claims and rights of said Indians under the acts of Congress aforesaid to compensation for all lands in said reservation which have been set apart and reserved for forest reservation and other public uses, as if sold and disposed of under the public land laws of the United States, in accordance with the terms of the said act of May 27, 1902; and the court shall set off against any sum found due said Indians any sum or sums that shall be found to be properly chargeable under the terms of said acts of Congress, and also any sum or sums paid by the United States to or for the benefit of said Indians, whether as a gratuity or otherwise, except such sums as have been paid for a specific purpose and an adequate consideration; and the action herein authorized shall be conducted by the attorneys appointed by said Indians under authority of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated the 1st of July, A. D. 1921, and the Attorney General shall appear and represent the United States, and in rendering judgment herein the court shall set apart such compensation to the attorneys for the Indians as it may deem reasonable and just for legal services rendered before the appropriate committees of Congress and departments of the Government and in conducting the said cause before the courts to a final determination, and said compensation shall be paid to said attorneys by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any moneys in the Treasury arising from the sale of said ceded lands or from the proceeds of said judgment, and the balance of said judgment shall be held in the Treasury for the benefit of said Indians as a trust fund, and the interest thereon shall be distributed annually to them in accordance with existing law.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish the amendment were in such shape that we could accept it, but it has been considered at length by the committee, and I have asked the advice of two Senators, one of whom was formerly chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and the other one the present chairman, concerning it. Those Senators agree with me that the amendment proposes legislation to a considerable extent, and, furthermore, the question which it involves is now being considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs. On the merits of the case I do not object to the amendment at all, but it embraces a class of legislation which it would be utterly useless to allow to go into the bill, as it would certainly be rejected in conference. I am, therefore, compelled to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming withdraw his point of order for a moment?

Mr. WARREN. I will withdraw the point of order for the present.

Mr. CURTIS. I have given the claim which is involved in the proposed amendment considerable attention to-day, and in my judgment it would be a serious mistake to allow an amendment proposing to send a claim of this kind to the Court of Claims to be inserted in the pending appropriation bill. For a long time the Indian appropriation bill was loaded with claims. After considerable effort all this class of claims was eliminated from that bill, and we now have the appropriation bills in such shape that amendments proposing to send such cases to the Court of Claims are not any longer embraced in them.

I desire to state in reference to this amendment that the act of May 27, 1902, itself provided that the Indians therein referred to should be paid $1.25 an acre for their land. The Government owes them $1.25 for every acre of land which it took; the Government ought to let the Indians know the number of acres taken and ought to pay them the money which is due them for it.

So far as I am concerned, if in the form of a bill the amendment which is now proposed to the pending bill shall be referred to me as a subcommitteeman, as I understand it has been, at the first opportunity I have I shall report it favorably; but as former chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and as a member of the Appropriations Committee I object to a measure of this kind being placed upon an appropriation bill. I hope we shall keep the appropriation bills free of measures of this kind and that they may be passed on their merits, which is the proper method of enacting such legislation.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Kansas if his statement is entirely accurate—I know he would not make the statement he has made unless he honestly believed it were accurate—that the law fixed the price of this Indian land at $1.25 per acre?

Mr. CURTIS. As the Senator from Utah knows, I have to-day attended three committee meetings, and I stated that I had only had time to-day to examine the law hurriedly; but, from the hasty examination I have been able to make, my recollection is that the law provides for the payment of $1.25 an acre for this land. If it does not do so, then I think the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior ought to negotiate with the Indians and pay them $1.25 an acre or whatever their land is worth. The price fixed in the act was $1.25 an acre for the land which was open to settlement.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, has not this matter previously been before the Court of Claims?

Mr. CURTIS. This case did not go to the Court of Claims, but was settled under an act of Congress of 1902, whereby the Indians were allotted a certain amount of land and the remainder was restored to the public domain, to be open to settlement at $1.25 an acre. The Government, however, instead of restoring the land to the public domain set aside a large number of acres for forest reservations, taking the title away from the Indians and reposing it in the Government. Of course, the Government ought to pay those Indians, without any question, what they are entitled to for the land thus taken, and they ought not to be forced to go to the Court of Claims and to wait two or three years for payment.

Mr. KING. My understanding, Mr. President, is that the controversy involves a question of fact, which can only be determined by either a court or a jury. It seems to me it would be better to have a court determine the value of the land than to have individuals do so.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; but the act itself provided that all the land, except that allotted to the Indians, should be restored to the public domain and that the Indians should be paid $1.25 an acre for it. All that remains to be done is to have surveyed the lands over and above what was allotted to the Indians, and to pay to them whatever may thus be determined to be due them.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator that, if the law fixed the value of the land at $1.25 per acre, unless there was some fraud perpetrated upon the Indians, that would be the measure of their compensation.

Mr. CURTIS. I have a copy of the act here, but my recollection, after once reading it over, is that is what the law provides.

Mr. KING. I want to say that some of these acts——

Mr. SPENCER rose.

Mr. KING. If I may be pardoned—which have gone through, I will not say under whip and spur, have been in the interest of lumber companies or white people and the Indians have been robbed. So far as I am concerned, these Indians are going to have a square deal.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. I am inclined to think that the price of the land was not fixed by the law; but, as a matter of fact, this very Indian claim was considered by the Court of Claims and more than $3,000,000 was awarded to the Indians for the land which was taken for forest reserves, so that, as the Senator from Kansas has intimated, there is an exact basis for determining the value per acre. It is claimed that subsequently to the finding of the Court of Claims some land was taken for additional forest reservations; but it would be a simple matter of arithmetic to find out the number of acres and, upon the same basis as the adjudication of the Court of Claims, to provide for payment. The Bureau of Indian Affairs so recommends to the Committee on Indian Affairs. They say that it would be practically useless to send this matter to the Court of Claims, for they can settle it without that expense or delay right in their own office.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I read the law very hurriedly this morning, but I find on examination that it does fix a price of $1.25 an acre, not for the land set aside but for that which is entered. Here is the provision of the law:

That the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent thereto of the majority of the adult male Indians of the Uintah and the White River Tribes of Ute Indians, to be ascertained as soon as practicable by an inspector, shall cause to be allotted to each head of a family 80 acres of agricultural land which can be irrigated and 40 acres of such land to each other member of said tribes, said allotments to be made prior to October 1, 1903, on which date all the unallotted lands within said reservation shall be restored to the public domain: Provided, That persons entering any of said land under the homestead law shall pay therefor at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

Mr. KING. That is not a very satisfactory explanation, and I regard it as a very unfair act. Who authorized the Government of the United States to fix $1.25 an acre for some and perhaps all of the land? The Indians are entitled, if it is taken from them, to the fair market value of the land and not to some value the Congress may fix.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator will probably remember that while he was a Member of the House a great many acres of land in Indian reservations were opened to settlement. The land was given to the settlers under what was known as the free homestead act. A contest ensued in the House, which lasted, if my recollection serves me right, through two sessions of Congress, during one of which and I think perhaps during both of which the Senator from Utah was a Member of the House. At last an agreement was reached that all the land which had been paid for by the Government should be opened to free homestead settlement. That affected, my recollection is, about $11,000,000 worth of land in money value, instead of about $63,000,000 worth. Then the House of Representatives adopted the plan of not opening the lands for settlement under the homestead act but of setting aside such lands as the Indians needed for their use and selling the remainder at the homestead price of $1.25. Afterwards that was changed to $2, and in one or two instances in the semiarid region it was reduced to 50 cents and 25 cents an acre. All the money thus received from the sale of those lands was placed to the credit of the individual Indians.

That is why the policy was changed so as to require that the lands be opened up at $1.25 or $2.50 an acre, or according to whatever agreement was entered into between the representatives of the Government and the Indians.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to put——

Mr. PHIPPS and other Senators. Vote!

Mr. KING. We will vote when I get through. The Senator from Colorado need not be too impatient. We will stay here a little longer.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I call for order in the Chamber.

Mr. KING. I call for order in the Chamber. If the Senator from Colorado will be in order, I will proceed.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I do not understand that it is the custom in this Chamber to designate a Senator from any particular State. If the Senator desires to have order, he may have it by calling for it in a proper manner.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Colorado having completed his learned observations, I shall proceed.

I want to put in the RECORD, Mr. President, a statement which I have not prepared, but which, so far as I can discover, is an accurate statement of the facts, or, at least, some of the facts, bearing upon this matter. I ask the attention of the able Senator from Kansas to the statement, with a view to having him modify his opposition to the amendment. It is as follows:

The proposed amendment is to carry out the provisions of the act of May 27, 1902 (32 Stats. 263), for the cession of the lands of the Uintah and White River Bands of Ute Indians in Utah to the United States.

The said act of cession provides for the sale of the ceded lands after certain allotments to the Indians in severalty, and that the proceeds of sale shall be applied, first, to the reimbursement of the United States for any moneys advanced to the Indians, and that the remainder of the fund shall be used for the benefit of the Indians.

Subsequently, October 6, 1906, and July 1, 1908, about 1,000,000 acres of the ceded lands were set apart as a forest reservation by proclamations of the President; therefore the reserved lands can not be sold as provided by the act of cession.

As the Government can not carry out the provisions of the cession act by selling the reserved lands the proposed amendment authorizes the Court of Claims to treat such lands as sold and to render judgment in favor of the Indians for the value thereof after deducting all moneys advanced to them by the United States, provided the court shall find that the Indians are now entitled to such compensation.

In other words, the proposed amendment would carry out the provisions of the act of cession, the ultimate purpose of which is to reimburse the Government for large sums advanced and to use the remainder for the benefit of the Indians.

As the proposed amendment would only carry out the provisions of the cession act and as it does not provide for a private claim it is within rule 16 of the standing rules of the Senate and not subject to a point of order. The decisions under the rule are that a claim against the Government is not a private claim unless it takes money out of the Treasury. (Decisions on Points of Order, vol. 1, pp. 100 and 101.)

A precedent for the proposed amendment is an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill of March 3, 1909 (35 Stats. 788), conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to determine the rights and claims of the confederated bands of Ute Indians to compensation for lands in their reservation in Colorado, which were set apart as forest reservations, contrary to the act of cession thereof to the United States.

A bill (S. 2951) having the same provisions as this proposed amendment was introduced by Senator SMOOT and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs January 9, 1922.

It is not believed there is objection from any source to the merits of the proposed amendment.

If the Indians are entitled to compensation for the reserved lands they should have received it 16 years ago, when the lands were set apart as a forest reserve; and the failure of the Government to settle with them at that time has doubtless deprived them of large sums of money in the matter of interest, and this money they can not hope to recover.

The amendment does not carry an appropriation.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this amendment ought to be adopted. Of course, I confess that I have objection generally—and, unless the case is very appealing, I insist upon it—to legislation upon appropriation bills; but this measure has been before this committee. The Senator from Kansas is familiar with it. He has been upon the committee considering the Indian appropriation bill for years. Both he and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] seem to concede the rightfulness, the propriety, the justice of this contention. I appeal to the Senators to withdraw their objection and let it go to conference.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Utah agree with me that in the first place this is clearly legislation; that it provides for a new thing which the bill did not provide for, in that the original bill did not provide for any reference to the Court of Claims, while this does provide for sending it to the Court of Claims, and therefore undoubtedly it injects new legislation? More than that, it provides that a certain firm of attorneys, heretofore selected, must prosecute this action, and that there can be no change in them, which is clearly legislation. Now, the Department of Indian Affairs reports to our committee that they have this matter under consideration and ready for adjustment, and that there is no need of sending it to the Court of Claims. On the merits of the case, why should there be any delay and added expense through sending it to the Court of Claims?

On the point of order which the Senator from Wyoming has made, it seems to me the Senator must agree that there is clearly legislation in the two particulars, at least, which I have indicated to him.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would not be unfrank enough—if I may be permitted that expression—to say that I am free from doubt as to whether this amendment is subject to a point of order. If I thought it were, I should so state frankly, though it were against me. If I felt the other way, I should state that fact. I am in doubt, I will say very frankly; but the justice of the claim appeals to me so strongly that I felt that I was justified in urging it, and I feel that the Senate ought to permit it to be acted upon.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator said a minute ago that I had had charge of this bill for some time. I beg to advise him that it was referred to me as a subcommittee, but I advised the chairman at the time they were looking the bill over that I was so busy that I could not look at it nor look after it, and I paid no attention to the matter until upon yesterday the Senator from Utah asked me if I would not kindly look over it; and since then I have taken the time to read the statute, and have reached the conclusion which I have indicated.

Mr. KING. May I make an inquiry of the Senator? I concede that it is not quite proper. He is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the Senator from Missouri is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs and the chairman. Will the committee promptly consider this bill?

Mr. CURTIS. That would be a question for the chairman. So far as I am concerned, the very first minute that I get time away from the other duties that I have to perform I shall take up this bill, if it is before me as a subcommittee.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that we have promptly considered it, and have already appointed a subcommittee, of which the Senator from Kansas is the chairman, and that, as the Senator from Kansas says, as soon as his duties permit, he undoubtedly—as he always does, with unusual diligence—will take up that bill.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Wyoming if there will be another deficiency appropriation bill?

Mr. WARREN. Not, of course, this fiscal year, but——

Mr. KING. Before we adjourn?

Mr. WARREN. I dare say that between now and the time when we finally adjourn it is very likely that we shall have another. This is the third one of this session, and I have no doubt that in view of legislation that is being enacted from time to time it will be necessary to have another deficiency bill.

Mr. KING. I throw myself upon the mercy of the committee.

Mr. WARREN. I should like very much to include the matter if we can get the legislation behind it which I hope the Senator's efforts will bring forth.

Mr. KING. I tender the amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will have to rule that it is new legislation. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the amendment about to be offered has been shown to members of the committee, and I think the appropriation ought to be made. It has been the custom to afford relief to the families of our representatives of the State Department abroad who die in the service, and that is all that this amounts to. I hope the amendment may be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 13, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To the duly qualified guardian of Leonore M. Sorsby, minor daughter of William B. Sorsby, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Bolivia, the sum of $4,200, as reimbursement for extraordinary expenses incurred for medical attendance, nurses, hospital treatment, and transportation to the United States following a stroke of paralysis suffered by said William B. Sorsby at his post of duty, La Paz, Bolivia, from which he remained wholly disabled until his death.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 24) to print 5,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 179, Sixty-seventh Congress, relative to the improvement of the St. Lawrence River, which were, in line 2, to strike out "five" and insert "three" and, in line 6, to strike out "three" and insert "one."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like to have the concurrent resolution read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed 5,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 179, Sixty-seventh Congress, entitled "Report of the United States and Canadian Government Engineers on the Improvement of the St. Lawrence River from Montreal to Lake Ontario," of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 2,000 copies for the House document room.

Mr. LENROOT. The amendments of the House reduce the number of copies authorized by the Senate. I move that the House amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

JOINT COMMISSION OF AGRICULTURAL INQUIRY.

Mr. LENROOT. I present the final report of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, part 3, relating to transportation, and part 4, marketing and distribution. I ask that part 3 be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and part 4 to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 61), as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 50,000 of parts 3 and 4 of House Report No. 408, being the report of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, of which 8,000 shall be for the Senate, 25,000 for the House, 1,000 shall be for the Senate document room, 2,000 for the House document room, and 14,000 for the Joint Commission on Agricultural Inquiry.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this concurrent resolution is exactly the same as the one that was passed with reference to the first two sections of the report. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

ISSUANCE OF CHECKS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BALL. I present the conference report on Senate bill 1033, and move its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1033) regulating the issuance of checks, drafts, and orders for the payment of money within the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

L. HEISLER BALL,
W. L. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
B. K. FOCHT,
F. N. ZIHLMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

CLAIM OF HOBOKEN, N. J.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 254.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is it, Mr. President?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is simply a resolution providing that the Committee on Claims may investigate the claims of the city of Hoboken in connection with the seizure of the Hoboken Docks. It provides no legislation. It is simply to ascertain the facts and make a report.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it be read.

The reading clerk read the resolution, and, there being no objection, the Senate proceeded to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 2, to strike out "Commerce" and insert "Claims," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That a committee composed of three Senators, of the Committee on Claims, to be appointed by the chairman of such committee, is authorized and directed to investigate the claims of the city of Hoboken, N. J., for losses and damage sustained by such city as a result of the acquisition and retention by the United States of certain docks, piers, warehouses, wharves, and terminal equipment and facilities, including all leaseholds, easements, rights of way, riparian rights, and other rights, estates, and interests therein or appurtenant thereto, on the Hudson River, formerly the property of the North German Lloyd Dock Co. and the Hamburg-American Line Terminal & Navigation Co., and to report its findings to the Senate, with such recommendations as it deems proper. Such committee is authorized to hold hearings and to sit during the recesses or sessions of the Sixty-seventh Congress, at such times and places as it may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to report such hearings and finding at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, the expenses of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

INTERNAL REVENUE COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to consider Senate bill 2051. This bill has been considered several time by the Senate and objected to in the past. It provides for the appointment of 10 additional internal revenue collectors. If permission is given for its consideration, I contemplate reducing the number to one additional internal revenue collector. With that explanation, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2051) to amend section 3142 of the Revised Statutes to permit an increase in the number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue and in the number of collectors of internal revenue from 64 to 74.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "74" and insert "65," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3142 of the Revised Statutes is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

On and after July 1, 1921, the whole number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue and the whole number of collectors of internal revenue shall not exceed 65.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have not objected to the consideration of this bill as amended, although I shall vote against it.

A number of years ago, when we were collecting far more revenue than we are collecting now, when if there was any necessity for increasing the number of collection districts within the United States the necessity was greater than now, some Democratic Senators and others appealed to Secretary McAdoo, urging him to ask for an increase in the number of collectors. Secretary McAdoo, who believed in economy and in efficiency, did not assent to it, and said that we ought to get along with the number of districts that then existed, and he made some rearrangements. Some States had no districts at all. Two or three States would be combined. He abolished some districts, as he had the power under the law to do; that is, he united some, and then created new districts within the maximum number of 64. I approved of the course which he then took.

A persistent effort has been made by some persons, since the change of administration, to increase the number from 64 to 74. I thought that such a movement was wrong, impolitic, and extravagant, and I opposed it, as I opposed the action of some Democrats who sought to increase the number of districts when we were collecting double the amount of revenue that we are collecting now. If we could collect seven or eight billions of dollars with 64 districts under a Democratic administration we ought to be able to collect the revenue now with 64 districts when the amount of revenue is very much less.

My good friend from New York, however, has seduced me by his blandishments and his representations until my courage has oozed away a little bit, and I have assented to the creation of one more district; but I shall vote against the bill. I think it is unnecessary. I think that if the persons in charge of the collection of the revenue would rearrange some of the districts and give New York another, as they might, and abolish some of the districts in some of the other States it would be far better.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 3142 of the Revised Statutes, to permit an increase in the number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue and in the number of collectors of internal revenue from 64 to 65."

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate carry out the unanimous-consent agreement and take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, June 30, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 29, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord God, whilst Thou art infinite and terrible in majesty, yet the divine tenderness softens the discipline of life. May we covet the courage and the strength of Him who trod the wine press alone. Be the food for our meditation, the staff for our feet, the light for our eyes, and the wisdom for our understanding. Willingly and courage sly may we always identify ourselves with the great causes for which our Government stands. Let us never shrink from any burden that implies the good and the stability of our Republic. O hasten the hour when a loyal citizenship, knit together by faith in God and love of country, shall move forward in the light and promise of a greater future for homeland and for all humankind. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 390.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives requests the consent of the Senate to an adjournment of the House until Tuesday, August 15, 1922.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the Senate agrees to this resolution the House would adjourn when a motion was made under the consent thus given. Of course that motion will be made when we have completed the essential business of the session.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GARNER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. Would it be in order for a Member at any time to rise in his seat and move to adjourn under the resolution just passed?

The SPEAKER. He would have to get recognition from the Chair in the first place.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that; but assuming that he gets recognition?

The SPEAKER. That is quite a novel proposition which the Chair would not like to decide offhand. The Chair would be slow to recognize anybody except the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that and that is the reason I asked the question. It is a little dangerous procedure to place in the hands of one man, even if it is the Speaker. The motion to adjourn is a privileged matter, and we by passing this resolution place in the hands of the Speaker and the gentleman from Wyoming the sole power as to whether we can adjourn or not.

The SPEAKER. The power of making the motion, but the adjournment is in the hands of the House.

Mr. GARNER. Suppose I should rise and the Speaker should say, "For what purpose does the gentleman rise?" I should say, "For the purpose of moving to adjourn under the resolution just passed," and the Speaker should say, "The Chair does not recognize the gentleman for that purpose," and I appealed from the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that a matter of recognition is not subject to appeal.

Mr. GARNER. That is the reason that I call attention to it. I did not object to the consideration of the resolution, but I do call attention to the fact that we are placing our necks in the hands of one man—the Speaker or the gentleman from Wyoming. I think it is a dangerous thing to do. While without doubt it will be exercised with moderation, at the same time it is there.

Mr. MONDELL. Why, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas is not as accurate as he ordinarily is. The granting of consent by the Senate to an adjournment of the House does not give the Speaker or the majority leader any special authority or power. I should not want to say, for it is a matter for the Speaker to decide, whether or not at a given time any Member could move to adjourn in accordance with the action of the Senate, but whether that is true or not, the House still controls the question as to whether it will adjourn to this date or any other date.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he can relieve the mind of the gentleman from Texas. The Chair thinks that this motion would not be privileged until some rule had been adopted as to the time of adjournment.

Mr. GARNER. That is my construction of it, but I wanted the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. HAWLEY. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Under the resolution presented by the gentleman from Wyoming and just agreed to by the House, if it is agreed to by the Senate, could a minority adjourn, or would it require a majority?

The SPEAKER. A rule would have to be brought in and consent given.

Mr. ASWELL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ASWELL. May I inquire whether the House will have an opportunity to vote on the adjournment in accordance with the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; and it will require a quorum, also.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3458) providing for the building of a bridge over Niagara River.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, and for other purposes, and had concurred in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 13, 64, 65, 86, and 91.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives numbered 1, 2, and 3 to the bill (S. 881) "to amend the proviso in paragraph 10 of section 9 of the Federal reserve act amended by the act of June 21, 1917, amending the Federal reserve act," had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives numbered 4 to said bill, and requested a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. EDGE, and Mr. GLASS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing two letters, one from Charles F. Wood, consulting engineer, stating why the barge service on the Warrior River has lost money. There are four pages of it, it is comparatively small, and relates only to the matter in which the Government is interested.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will it be placed in the back part of the RECORD?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD in reference to the Government barge service on the Warrior River, I wish to say that the main reason why the barge service on this river continues to show loss is the fact that the waterway is not given a just and fair proportion of the joint through rates. Unquestionably an equitable division of revenue, accruing from joint rates, between the rail and barge service would establish this service at once on a profitable basis. Two informing letters received by me from Hon. Charles Francis Wood, a distinguished consulting engineer now residing at Birmingham, Ala., and who has given much study to the Warrior barge service, will prove interesting to the Members of the House, and I invite the Members to carefully read the same.

The letters are as follows:

JUNE 28, 1922.

Hon. W. B. OLIVER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the transportation act of 1920 Congress declared the intention of the people of these United States "to foster and preserve in full vigor both rail and water transportation."

As a part of this policy barge lines established by the Government on the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers as war emergencies were continued, public money was appropriated for their operation, and tariffs of joint rail and water rates were promulgated.

Criticism of the operation of the barge lines on these waterways has recently been voiced in Congress, both in relation to the projects themselves and the operation thereof, because the Mississippi-Warrior service has continually lost money, and the deficit has had to be made up from taxation.

This criticism is growing in volume, and an influential Senator of the United States has declared that unless the lines can be made profitable within the coming fiscal year further appropriations will be denied. The situation is critical for a development which the majority of our people believe to be vital to the future progress of our country and the prosperity of its citizens, and so an analysis of the conditions and an exposition of the reasons why the barge lines lose money is presented for your consideration.

Investigation discloses (a) that the barge lines are doing business in a large and rapidly increasing volume; (b) that they appear to be reasonably well managed; (c) that they serve a wide public; (d) that their published tariffs, averaging about 80 per cent of the all-rail rates, should be profitable; (e) that in spite of these favorable factors they lose money.

WHY?

Because the barge lines are being robbed by the railroads at their junctions as systematically and as ruthlessly as the robber bands of old held up and robbed the traffic which passed their strongholds.

These are not idle words. They are the expression of a sound conclusion inevitably forced by the official records, which show that the Railroad Administration in its last hours established a basis of division between the rail-and-water carriers of the joint rates promulgated in the tariffs and issued various rules governing these divisions which are as effective for robbery as the gun of the bandit.

One of these rules is as follows:

"If joint rates are established in connection with the water lines via junctions where divisions of the all-rail rates are effective, the rail carrier shall receive its proportion of the all-rail rates as arrived at by such divisions."

Another is:

"The rail lines shall receive beyond the nearest prorating point their established proportions of the all-rail rates."

Under these rules, as soon as the traffic began to move the railroads demanded their "local rates" as "the established proportion of the all-rail rates," thus setting at naught the published through tariffs and nullifying the mandate of Congress as expressed in the law of the land.

By this simple, shrewd, and devilish chicanery did the railroad interests cripple and hamstring the waterway traffic at its very inception, and thereby largely prevent the movement of through traffic by the barge lines, or when the barge lines get the business they are penalized and made to pay a premium for the privilege of hauling the tonnage.

Due to the fact that there were division points and more or less equitable division of rates existing at practically every crossing of the Mississippi, the application of these rules to the traffic carried by the Mississippi section has not been as blighting in its effect as on the traffic carried by the Warrior section, with the result that in spite of many handicaps the Mississippi section has built up its business to the point where it is now showing a small profit, but the Warrior section operation is hopeless unless it can secure relief from the iniquitous methods by which the railroads who are parties to its joint tariffs have eliminated even the possibility of success. There being no division points at Warrior crossings, "local rates" are demanded by the railroads on all traffic.

As an example of how completely the railroads are strangling the efforts of the people and Congress of the United States to revive a waterway commerce, the following tabulation is eloquent:

Rates on cotton in cents per 100 pounds.

Origin.	Destination.
Ardmore, Ala.	New Orleans.	$0.925	$0.79	$1.095	$0.275
Decatur, Ala.	do.	.875	.74	1.205	.465
Flint, Ala.	do.	.875	.74	.97	.23
Cullman, Ala.	do.	.85	.715	.875	.16
Montgomery, Ala.	do.	.75	.63	.97	.34

References: Mississippi-Warrior service tariffs, I. C. C. No. A-7; Louisville & Nashville, I. C. C. A-14602, A-14573, A-14843, A-14631, A-14294.

The few examples above quoted, while taken at random from the tariffs of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, are neither isolated nor extreme. On the contrary, the same conditions obtain in practically all tariffs of joint through rail and water rates applicable to the Warrior River section, and the same outrageous extortion is being practiced by every railroad which reaches a Warrior Barge Line terminal.

By the application of the rules of the Railroad Administration the rail carriers demand and so far are receiving on all cotton handled by the barge line a larger rate for handling the cotton a few miles to the point of interchange than they would receive if they carried the cotton all the way to its destination, while the barge line under the ruling and tariffs above not only gets nothing for hauling the cotton but pays the railroad up to $2.50 per bale for the privilege of hauling it. Is it any wonder that the barge lines are losing money? Is it any wonder that private interests hesitate to invest money in waterway transportation facilities, notwithstanding that our Government has expended millions of dollars to open our inland waterways to navigation?

And what is to be done about it? Is traffic again to be driven off our inland waterways because the Government of the United States is so impotent as to be unable to protect its own property and operations from being plundered by a gang of pirates? Are the millions which have been spent in improving the Warrior to be lost and the river revert to its abandoned condition because the rail interests have forged a modern weapon as effective for robbery as the jimmy of the burglar?

Should it be asked, Why does not the barge line get relief through the Interstate Commerce Commission, to which Congress has given power to fix rates and the division thereof, it can be answered that the petition of the barge lines has been before that tribunal for nearly two years without any indication that there is any relief in sight. On the contrary, the reports of the examiners so far rendered indicate such prorail influence as to compel the conclusion that there is a studied effort to wipe out the barge lines by foul means if inaction fails to do it.

These agencies of the Government are doomed unless the people and the Congress shall rise and demand a fair deal for the water carriers, so instead of criticizing the projects or the management thereof Congress should force a showdown and by an investigation should fix the real reason for the failure of the waterway carriers to earn a fair return and then enact drastic legislation which will insure that the water carriers shall be treated as fairly in all respects as a trunk line railroad occupying the same route would under the law have to be treated. When that is done waterway traffic will grow and prosper.

The matter is one of such wide public interest that it should command your attention and cooperation to the end that a fair deal may be had by our publicly owned water carriers, and that barge lines "of the people, for the people, and by the people" shall not perish off the water.

Yours for upbuilding,

THE WARRIOR RIVER DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE,
By CHARLES F. WOOD, Consulting Engineer.

JUNE 29, 1922.

Hon. W. B. OLIVER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. OLIVER: In compliance with my promise to furnish some data relating to the division between the water and rail carriers as recommended by the examiner in the suit now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, I am attaching hereto a statement showing the percentages or divisions which have been recommended for promulgation by the commission.

From a study of these percentages you will note that there is no possible principle for a basis of division which can be applied to all of them, and the more they are analyzed the more clearly they show that there is neither sense nor reason in the recommendations. On the contrary, they represent the determination of this minion of the railroads to "hog" the utmost share possible for the railroads and give the barge lines just as little as they can possibly be forced to take.

If such divisions as these are promulgated in the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission the barge lines might as well go out of business, for there is no possible hope of profitable operation if the barge lines must accept divisions which are wholly without principle and utterly disregard the law of due compensation for service performed.

The illustrations tabulated are not isolated, but seem to be typically true of virtually all the tariffs and divisions. The barge lines are the property of and operated by the United States Government, and if relief is denied by the Interstate Commerce Commission the service must be supported by public funds or the barge lines must withdraw when they should be extending their service.

I shall be glad to furnish any additional information you may desire.

Yours truly,

CHARLES F. WOOD,
Consulting Engineer.

REINSTATEMENT OF CERTAIN LAND OFFICES.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the motion of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] to lay on the table a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill S. 3425 was passed. The question is on laying the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the adjournment resolution was agreed to, and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to lay on the table a motion to reconsider the vote by which the adjournment resolution was agreed to.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ASWELL) there were—ayes 82, noes 1.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the resolution.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion to lay on the table a motion to reconsider the vote by which the adjournment resolution was agreed to.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 228, nays 51, answered "present" 1, not voting 150, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SWING. Members of the House, I would like to make an announcement that to-night at 8 o'clock in the caucus room of the House Office Building there will be a showing of moving pictures on the Colorado River and the recent floods there, and a showing of the development of the Imperial Valley along the line of presenting facts with respect to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior which is pending now before the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands regarding the plan of developing the Lower Colorado River. The picture is entitled "Putting the collar on the Colorado River." [Applause.]

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H. R. 9527.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9527) which proposes to amend section 5136 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to corporate powers of associations, and so forth.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9527) entitled "An act to amend section 5136, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to corporate powers of associations, so as to provide succession thereof until dissolved, and to apply said section as so amended to all national banking associations," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and the amendment of the title so as to read: "An act to amend section 5136, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to corporate powers of associations, so as to provide succession thereof for a period of ninety-nine years or until dissolved, and to apply said section as so amended to all national banking associations," and agree to the same.

L. T. MCFADDEN,
PORTER H. DALE,
Managers on the part of the House.
WILLIAM M. CALDER,
CARTER GLASS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9527) to amend section 5136, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to corporate powers of associations, so as to provide succession thereof until dissolved, and to apply said section as so amended to all national banking associations, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: This amendment strikes out the word "perpetual"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2: This amendment inserts the words "ninety-nine years from July 1, 1922, or from the date of its organization if organized after July 1, 1922, unless"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 3: This amendment inserts the word "sooner"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 4: This amendment inserts the word "or"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 5: This amendment strikes out the words "the provision of"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 6: This amendment strikes out the word "hereinafter" and inserts the word "hereafter."

Also the title is amended to read: "An act to amend section 5136, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to corporate powers of associations, so as to provide succession thereof for a period of 99 years or until dissolved, and to apply said section as so amended to all national banking associations"; and the House recedes.

LOUIS T. MCFADDEN,
PORTER H. DALE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, on May 23 the House considered this bill and provided by amendment that the charters of national banks should be in perpetuity. The bill went back to the Senate, and the Senate placed a limitation in the bill of 99 years, providing that when the third extension of charter expired that the charters which are renewed in the future shall be renewed for a period of 99 years. The conference Members of the House considered this matter very carefully and realizing the predicament they were in, the parliamentary situation being such in the Senate that we were forced to yield. I do not know that I care to discuss the bill further unless some Member of the House wants to ask some questions. That is practically the only proposition involved in this conference report, as the other amendments are slight and purely technical.

Mr. GARNER. As I understand, the House receded from its disagreement to all the Senate amendments?

Mr. McFADDEN. They were all minor perfecting amendments except the one in reference to the 99-year clause or perpetual charters.

Mr. GARNER. In other words, the House had no business disagreeing to the Senate amendments in the first place?

Mr. McFADDEN. Well——

Mr. GARNER. They receded from all, so I suppose there was no use disagreeing in the first place. You made a mistake, and the Senate pointed it out, and you receded.

Mr. McFADDEN. I think the House was perfectly right in what it did. The situation in the Senate was such that in order to get action on this bill now we have receded. Some charters of national banks begin to expire soon after July 1 next and unless this legislation is passed in some form these banks will have to liquidate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does it affect those banks which renewed their charter three times or more?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; none have, but at the next maturity they can renew for a period of 99 years.

Mr. MacGREGOR. In other words, the Senate has taken the virtue out of the bill?

Mr. McFADDEN. The present charter term is 20 years. There have been two renewals since the law was enacted in 1860. In my own judgment it would be much better to have had it in perpetuity—yes the real virtue is out of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The Senate has put a little virtue into the measure.

Mr. McFADDEN. I presume the gentleman from Massachusetts might consider it in that manner.

Mr. WALSH. Does this bill in any way affect the rights of the minority stockholders of banks which in the future desire to have their charters renewed under the provisions of this law? In other words, if these extensions were made the same as under previous extensions, the situation with reference to minority stockholders of banks seeking a renewal of charters will be the same only as to length of the term. Is that correct?

Mr. McFADDEN. That is the idea. There is a clause in the national bank act which provides for the protection of minority stockholders and the protection of all their rights.

Mr. WALSH. This does not in any way affect that other clause in the national bank act which protects the rights of the minority stockholders in the case of an extension of charter or renewal?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; it does not.

Mr. GARNER. It certainly does not because there is no such thing as extending a charter to perpetuity. There is no such thing as renewal of charter——

Mr. McFADDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This is a limitation which we are accepting on this bill. The House passed a bill providing for a charter in perpetuity and the Senate put on a limitation of 99 years. This proposition is to accept the limitation which the Senate proposes of 99 years.

Mr. GARNER. I understand at the end of the 99 years if the gentleman from Massachusetts owned 34 per cent of a national bank and they desired a renewal they would have to get his consent.

Mr. McFADDEN. It does not work that way, because he is the minority and the majority rule. He has the right of the protection of the law for 99 years.

Mr. GARNER. Suppose, however, that the gentleman from Massachusetts was president of the bank at the end of the 99 years and undertook to renew the charter, and he owns 34 per cent of the stock, they can not renew that charter without his permission.

Mr. McFADDEN. No; they can not; the law requires the consent of two-thirds of the amount of stock to renew.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's solicitude is very gratifying, but he need never fear that any such situation will arise, as far as this gentleman from Massachusetts is concerned.

Mr. HIMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. HIMES. As a matter of interest, will the gentleman give the idea of the Senate conferees in limiting this to 99 years and not making it in perpetuity? What was their argument?

Mr. McFADDEN. My understanding from the debate was that the Senate was loath to give a perpetual charter to any institution. In other words, they felt that they should continue to hold those rights and not give any rights away in perpetuity.

I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CONNOLLY].

Mr. CONNOLLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak to the House out of order in reference to having an article of my colleague from New York [Mr. RYAN] read into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNOLLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have read into the RECORD an article by my colleague, the Hon. THOMAS J. RYAN, of New York, and have it printed in 8-point type.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing in 8-point type an article, which the Clerk will report by title.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, what is it about?

Mr. CONNOLLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. RYAN has introduced a bill in reference to the Ku-Klux Klan, and has written an article in reference to that subject.

Mr. WINGO. What is it on?

Mr. CONNOLLY of Pennsylvania. On the Ku-Klux Klan.

Mr. WINGO. What is the gentleman's idea to include—the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. CONNOLLY of Pennsylvania. It is an article written by my colleague from New York [Mr. RYAN].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, we know that if we will permit the insertion of such articles the RECORD would be flooded from both sides. I feel I ought to object, even if gentlemen on the other side do not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas objects.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Arkansas desire some time?

Mr. WINGO. I would like 20 minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. And I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, my constituents are very much interested in the proposed tariff on sugar, and in that connection I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of tariff on sugar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, an Arabian proverb has it that—

Wisdom is made up of ten parts, nine of which are silence and the tenth brevity of speech.

I am not going to talk very much—it is a pity that it is necessary to talk at all about the duty on sugar. Sugar is not a luxury which will cast its burden of duty on the rich who will not feel it. The poor man's coffee requires sugar; the bread which feeds the family of the toiler is made with sugar; the modest pudding or pie which helps out so much the ordinary steady diet would not be fit to eat without sugar; the glass of cool, refreshing drink in the home or at the soda fountain would be worse than tasteless except for sugar; the ices of summer, the cake for the children's school lunch basket, the custards, and most of the delicate nourishments for the sick and infirm could not be produced without sugar; in every home, no matter how humble or destitute, sugar is a necessity; and yet the duty on sugar is being boosted to a hitherto unknown height, and in a way which will cost the American people around $100,000,000.

We consume 9,000,000,000 pounds of sugar a year. Every bit of duty is reflected in the retail price of sugar; so an increase of 1 cent a pound in the tariff on sugar means a charge on the American people of $90,000,000.

Under the Underwood tariff the duty, to be absolutely accurate, is 1.256 cents a pound; our reciprocal treaty with Cuba favors her with a 20 per cent tariff reduction, making a tariff on Cuban sugar by the Underwood tariff of 1.0048 cents a pound.

The Underwood tariff would have eventually put sugar on the free list, where it belongs.

The rate in the new bill is 2 cents a pound, or 1.60 cents on Cuban sugar, and the program is to wait until debate is closed in the Senate and then insert a duty of 2.625 cents a pound, or 2.1 cents on Cuban sugar.

If the majority can accomplish this, they will add to the price of sugar the difference between 1.0048 cents a pound and 2.1 cents a pound, or 1.0952 cents, which on the 9,000,000,000 pounds of sugar annually used by the people of this country amounts to $98,568,000.

And what do you suppose is the argument of the richly clad, plausible, and smiling gentlemen who do obeisance to the Sugar Trust and are camped around the Capitol of the United States? Why, that this tariff is necessary to save them from bankruptcy. Do you get that clearly? To save them from bankruptcy.

The American Sugar Refining Co. since 1891 has never paid a dividend of less than $6,075,000. In 1918 and 1920 its dividend was $7,650,000; this company has paid annual dividends of as much as $13,050,000.

The Great Western Sugar Co. has paid 7 per cent on $15,000,000 of preferred stock since its organization in 1905, and in addition to dividends of from 5 to 7 per cent on $15,000,000 more of common stock declared a 42 per cent stock dividend in 1916, increasing thereby its common stock to $21,300,000, and on this common stock paid a dividend of 30 per cent in 1917, 40 per cent in 1918, 40 per cent in 1919, and 40 per cent in 1920 (the 1921 figures are not accessible), so that on a capital of $15,000,000 the Great Western paid to its stockholders $7,440,000 in 1917, $9,570,000 in 1918, $9,570,000 in 1919, and $9,570,000 in 1920.

According to the report of the Federal Trade Commission in 1917, 98 per cent of the beet-sugar industry averaged 11 per cent net earnings on capitalization. The commission found also that many of these concerns were greatly overcapitalized.

And now, Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I am going to give you the names of a few notables among the sugar lobby, together with a few marks of identification, so that you will know them as they meet you outside of this Chamber when their labors on the Senate side are over and they attempt to operate on this body after the tariff bill goes to conference. C. C. Hamlin is the bell wether of the herd; he is the special delegate of the "United States Sugar Manufacturers' Association," its former name being the "United States Beet Sugar Industry Association." In 1913, during the Senate investigation of lobbying scandals, he was shown to be receiving a salary of $15,000 a year as a lobbyist for the above-mentioned "United States Beet Sugar Industry Association."

The Michigan Sugar Co. is a concern in which the American Sugar Refining Co. holds a large stock interest. H. R. Hathaway, of Detroit, secretary and treasurer of this company, is also camping on Capitol Hill now, and is among the number haled before the Senate committee in 1913.

We are also favored with the engaging presence of W. D. Lippitt, of Denver, Colo., vice president and general manager of the Great Western Sugar Co., in which company also the American Sugar Refining Co. has a large stock interest.

The American Sugar Refining Co. at one time owned a 34 per cent stock interest in the Menominee River Sugar Co., of Michigan, and the unctuous face of George W. McCormick, its treasurer and general manager, can be seen any day far from home in the American Capital.

A. E. Carlton, one of the sugar lobby, is president of the Holly Sugar Corporation, Colorado Springs, one of the largest beet-sugar producers. I find that James H. Post and T. A. Howell are two of the directors of this company and that, strange to say, they are also president and vice president, respectively, of the National Sugar Refining Co., of New Jersey, another corporation in which the American Sugar Refining Co. holds a large stock interest.

From far away Honolulu comes Royal D. Mead, whom we had with us also in 1913, an unwelcome visitor as a part of the Sugar Trust lobby.

In 1913 Henry T. Oxnard admitted before the Senate investigating committee dispensing nearly $1,000,000 in propaganda against free sugar; he admitted also being one of the authors of a pamphlet known as "Sugar at a glance," sent broadcast over the country under the franking privileges of Senators LODGE, SMOOT, and CURTIS.

"Sugar at a glance" led to charges being brought by the Post Office Department that the high senatorial privilege was being abused in behalf of private interests.

During the preparation of the sugar schedule for the pending tariff bill this same Henry T. Oxnard has been lobbying in Washington, representing the American Beet Sugar Co., in which the ever-present American Sugar Refining Co. holds a large stock interest.

Mr. Speaker, sugar is Cuba's one sustaining crop; we have been her best customer. This proposed tariff will make it impossible for Cuba to compete—the differential between the cost of production in Cuba and this country being only about 1 cent a pound—and will strike Cuba an almost mortal blow. Cuba has been our fifth best customer. In 1920 Cuba bought $500,000,000 of American farm products and other goods. If this tariff bill passes in its form as proposed, where will Cuba get the $500,000,000 to buy our products?

George Eliot once said of some one she heard speak: "I imagine it is his fortune, or rather his misfortune, to have talked too much and too early about the greatest things."

Mr. Speaker, if of these remarks, and those recently made by me upon the "cotton" schedules of the tariff bill, it is said by some that I have talked too much or too early about important legislation, it may be proper to suggest that I have given concrete facts, names, and figures; if I am accurate in statement, the "cotton" and "sugar" schedules in the pending tariff bill are an indefensible attempt to make hard and ever harder the lot of that great part of our people who are climbing the long, long hill of poverty and of need.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

Mr. WALSH. What is the gentleman going to speak on?

Mr. RAKER. In regard to pending legislation before the committee of which the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] is the chairman, and the "gentleman from California"—myself—is also a member, on immigration.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it a campaign speech?

Mr. RAKER. It is in regard to the question of immigration. Exceedingly important legislation in which the whole country is vitally interested.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have conference reports before the House that ought to be disposed of. There are a great many Members of the House who desire to address the House on subjects other than matters that are before the House, and such gentlemen have been told they must wait until the business of the House is disposed of. It does not seem to me fair at this stage of the game for the gentleman from California to ask to occupy the time of the House on matters that are not before the House at all.

Mr. RAKER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this. I have taken but little time of the House, and this is a matter of great importance.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to discussion of any matters not before the House.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may revise and extend by remarks on the bills introduced, one by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, H. R. 12169, and one by myself, H. R. 12193.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Now, what I wanted to say to the House was in regard to these two bills. On June 26, 1922, Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House, introduced H. R. 12169, "A bill to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States." On June 27, 1922, I introduced H. R. 12193, "A bill to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States."

I am a member of that committee and have been for over 10 years. H. R. 12193 limits the number of aliens admissible under the immigration laws in any fiscal year to 2 per cent of the number of foreign-born persons of any nationality resident in the United States, as determined by the United States Census of 1910.

One of the vital and important provisions of this bill (H. R. 12193) is that which relates to ineligible aliens, which reads as follows:

That no alien ineligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States shall be admitted to the United States.

The bill also provides for the elimination and abrogation of what is known as the "gentlemen's agreement."

When the joint resolution which was passed by both Houses and finally approved on May 11, 1922, was under consideration by the committee of the House, it was determined to pass over at that time the two important questions last above referred to.

The Johnson and Raker bills are not identical, but there is one provision that is vital and which will be disposed of by whichever bill the committee may finally act upon, and that is the question of prohibiting hereafter the admission of all aliens ineligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States and doing away with the "gentlemen's agreement."

I am justified in saying that pending the recess, and by the time Congress begins the regular session in December, the Committee on Immigration will have prepared and ready to present to the House a bill which will carry out, in addition to other matters, the two particularly important matters above referred to. I want to take this opportunity of saying that, having been a member of this committee for over 10 years, associated with the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], the committee's chairman, I can with safety and assurance say that the country has a safe representative in regard to immigration legislation in the person of our chairman, Mr. JOHNSON, and that he will do all in his power and, with the aid of the other members of the committee, will be able to present to the House early in December, for the House's consideration, an immigration bill carrying out the views now demanded by the American public, and which bill will carry a provision abrogating what is known as the "gentlemen's agreement," and a further provision that no alien ineligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States shall be admitted to the United States.

I am most happy to inform the House and the country of that fact, as this is what I have been standing for, laboring incessantly, in season and out of season, to bring about such legislation, and I confidently believe that before the close of the Sixty-seventh Congress we will see this most important piece of legislation enacted into law and placed upon our statute books.

One who has been in this contest for many years fully appreciates what this means to the West in particular and to the United States in general. It will settle once and for all a complicated and vexatious question in the right way, and one which should have been disposed of years ago. It will avoid any possible friction between America and foreign countries and the people of such foreign countries as may be affected by such legislation. The sooner that this is done the better. I hope in the near future to amplify the matter here briefly referred to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the desire of the gentlemen who are responsible for the conduct of business to expedite matters, and I shall not use all the time. Frankly, I am not interested in the controversy between the House and the Senate, which is the difference between a charter in perpetuity and one for 99 years. The Senate probably, in its wisdom, can make a distinction between 99 years and the perpetuity of a charter, and I do not complain of my colleagues on the conference committee who have yielded to that fine distinction of the Senate. I declined to sign the conference report because I am against it for another reason. The pending bill, which is covered by the conference report, is one that changes the policy of the Government with reference to charters of national banks. In 1864 the original act included a provision which is known as second in section 5736 of the statute. That is the provision that is amended by this bill. As originally passed, that paragraph of the section referring to charters of national banks reads as follows:

To have succession for a period of 20 years from its organization unless it is sooner dissolved according to the provision of its articles of association, or the act of its shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock, or unless its franchise became forfeited by reason of a violation of the law.

While the original bank act contained a provision reserving to Congress the right to alter, amend, or repeal the general law, there was no specific limitation with reference to a charter. Once granted, and vested rights having grown up under that, it was contended by some gentlemen during that first 20 years, when there was an effort made by those who opposed national banks to curtail their terms, that Congress had reserved only the general right to amend the law and granted a vested charter term of 20 years.

Mr. WALSH. But was not the act subsequently amended in the customary clause relating to altering, amending, or repealing, near the end of the act?

Mr. WINGO. I was going to come to that in sketching the history of the legislation on this subject covered by three acts. My object is to get a consecutive statement of the history of this in the RECORD, because it may become a question in the future if Congress seeks to cut down the term from 99 years to a shorter term.

In 1882, when the first 20 years was about to expire, Congress passed what was known as the extension of the corporate existence of the national bank act, which provided for a further extension of 20 years; but owing to controversies that had arisen Congress sought in the act of 1882 to settle the controverted questions.

I shall not take the time to read all of that, but I will insert it in my remarks, and I will read only that part to which I wish to direct specific attention and about which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has just inquired. After putting on certain limitations and restrictions, it winds up with this—understand it is referring to corporate charters, not to general acts and general organization of banks:

That the succession shall continue—

That is, the succession of the charter, not the national bank act—shall continue unless sooner dissolved according to the provisions of articles of association, or the act of its shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock, or unless its franchise became forfeited by reason of a violation of the law.

That was the old act, and then they added these words to meet the contention that had arisen:

Or unless hereafter modified or repealed.

What was to be modified or repealed? The charter, not the general banking law governing national banks. We reserved the specific right to modify the vested charter life of each bank if Congress saw fit.

Now, when the next 20-year period was about to expire again, in 1902——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is there not a further provision in that very act, at the very end of it, with reference to the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act?

Mr. WINGO. No. That act simply covered the question of extension, and it carried in the conclusion of it the language which I have read; and it was contended then that that was not necessary, because the general law carried the right to alter or amend the general statute, and this had solely to do with the charter life of the banks, and that Congress having reserved specifically the right to modify or repeal its charter or succession, that was sufficient.

Now, in 1902, when the 20-year period was about to expire, Congress passed another act for 20 years, and that act specifically stated—and I shall set it out in my remarks—that they should continue to possess that same right for 20 years under the limitations of the act of 1882.

Now that 20 years is about to expire again and this bill was introduced for the purpose of giving a further extension of charters to national banks. As to the question of the right of a bank to have its charter for 99 years after this act is passed, without the right of Congress to cut it down, of course, Congress could, after the passage of this act in its present language, amend the law so as to apply to a succession granted afterwards, or new banks chartered afterwards. But it is contended by reputable attorneys that the bank whose succession is extended for 99 years after the act is passed has a charter irrevocable for 99 years, except in the manner provided in the extending statute, and that extending statute, according to the provisions of this bill, does not contain the right specifically to alter, modify, or amend. You may revoke it entirely by destroying it, in the specific case of each specific charter, or by an omnibus bill you might name 50 different banks; but this bill has to do with the charter of banks under the general law governing national banks, and the question would arise on each and every specific charter of every bank extended under this act. By carefully reading this bill you will see that it carries the customary provision as to two-thirds of the stockholders, and as to the forfeiture by reason of the violation of the law, or that its charter shall be terminated hereafter by act of Congress.

Now that contention is met with this argument: That the right to terminate it and take away from it its charter entirely carries with it the right to amend the charter in subsequent legislation, if Congress should see fit to legislate otherwise hereafter. This question was specifically raised by me both in the House and in conference, and the conferees and those who are opposed to my viewpoint, some of them, frankly admit that they do want to put the charter life of the national banks beyond the control of Congress for 99 years in the case of each particular bank. They say it is necessary in order for them to act in a particular fiduciary capacity. I say it is not. I say if Congress, 20 years from now, wants to amend by general statute the charter existence of national banks, it should reserve to itself the right to restore the old 20-year bank charters; and even if it had granted a succession for 99 years, its charter life should expire in 20 years, or 50 years, or in whatever period might be fixed by the act of a subsequent Congress. That is the reason why I was opposed to signing the conference report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the gentleman's contention that if the Sixty-ninth or Seventieth Congress should see fit to repeal the national banking act, this law, if it becomes a law, and all other legislation pertaining to national banks and their charters, these banks could continue then to do business under their charters for 99 years?

Mr. WINGO. No, I do not, because you reserve the right to terminate them. But the gentleman knows as a practical proposition we are not going to abolish the national banking system, and the only policy that will be retained by Congress in the future with reference to them is their regulation and the life of their charters. Those will be the two things. This Congress refuses to reserve the right to modify the charter existence, and says that the sole right we reserve on that question is the right to take the charter away entirely by a specific act.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to my friend from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does this in any way change the authority of the Comptroller of the Currency to close up a bank and revoke its charter for cause?

Mr. WINGO. Oh, no. It carries the customary provision with reference to minority stockholders and with reference to forfeiture by reason of violation of law. But I suspect that the gentleman from Michigan, good banker as he is, has the same erroneous idea that a great many others have, that the Comptroller of the Currency can easily close up a national bank and put it out of business.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I know that he has a good deal of authority.

Mr. WINGO. When this matter was up before, I called attention to the fact that a former Comptroller of the Currency, it was charged by a Member on this floor, was persecuting him and trying to close up his bank. You remember the controversy on the floor here. Yet that Comptroller of the Currency, with all the power he had, was not able even to have a receiver appointed for that Member's bank, and he had to give him a renewal of his charter, because the attorney for that comptroller advised him that he could not arbitrarily refuse to grant an extension of the charter, but that he had to have good reasons for doing so, as the Congress had fixed the general policy.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am in harmony with some of the gentleman's views. I do not think that it injures a bank to be examined, and I see no reason why 20 or 30 years is not a pretty long time for the charter to run.

Mr. WINGO. There is only one reason for this. That is the movement on foot to destroy State banking systems in the United States and to turn the national banking system into a branch bank system and to give charters in perpetuity. Then, as the charters of country national banks expire, the Comptroller of the Currency can say, "No; I will not renew your charter, because across the street is the branch of a powerful bank only 50 miles away in a great center. That powerful bank," the comptroller would say, carrying out the announced argument of those who advocate that system, "will be more able to take care of your community than your local bank." This, as I pointed out once before, is but one step in that movement which is being steadily made to establish branch banking in the United States. I do not believe that they will be able to put it over without a very vicious fight. Your present comptroller denies that he has made any ruling, but as a matter of fact he has permitted the Riggs National Bank, in the city of Washington, to establish branches in this city. He has permitted a bank in St. Louis to establish branches in that city; and if he has authority to grant permission to have branches inside the corporate limits of a city, he has authority to grant permission to have branches within the county limits in which a bank is operating. Congress heretofore has refused upon more than one occasion to pass a bill that was recommended by the Committee on Banking and Currency to authorize what the comptroller is now permitting the Riggs National Bank and the bank in St. Louis to do. I do not refer to these banks in any way that reflects upon them. I do not blame them. If I were they, I would do what they are doing; but it is the duty of Congress in the very beginning of that movement to check it and to say that independent banking in this Nation shall not be destroyed; that the best banking system is that which is made up of local directors and stockholders, and that this system of branch banking is vicious; that it is nothing but legalized chain banking, which every honest, sincere banker is trying to drive out of the United States. The only reason why I entered my protest the other day on this matter, and the only reason I call attention to it now, is to keep up the fight against the movement to establish branch banking. I suggested to the conferees, "While you may exceed your authority, if no point of order is made on it, why not make it certain by putting in the words 'alter, amend, or repeal'?" They went off and spent a week or two consulting and consulting, and finally they came back. I do not know what they did in their last session. I was not present. For some reason they refused to put in explicit language their admitted intent. I warned them the language meant otherwise, and that gentlemen wanted it to mean otherwise, and so told me in trying to meet my objections to it. Of course, you will vote for the conference report. I am going to keep my record straight and vote against it. I am going to oppose every step that is taken in the movement to set up branch banks in this country. You may not agree to-day, but there are men on this side who now smile and say there is nothing to it who in their lives as Members of this Congress will see that I am right. You would realize it if you had the literature that I have and the addresses of bankers in this country that I have in my files who frankly admit they are advocating this very system. Go and read the testimony of the Comptroller of the Currency and my examination of him before the committee.

Go read the testimony of Eugene Meyer and my cross-examination of him. No movement can be laughed at that is supported sincerely and sincerely believed by men like the present comptroller and Eugene Meyer and other great bankers I can name who have talked with me and say that I am wrong. The experience of branch banking shows that they absorb the resources of small communities.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is not there also a tendency for the larger banks to buy the smaller banks and make them into branch banks?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly, and I do not blame them. If I were a banker I would recognize the selfish interest, the selfish profits that can be made by having my bank reach out and get every bank it can. It is no reflection on the banker, but it is a reflection on Congress that it sits by and permits, step by step, this program to be carried out.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman criticizes the conferees for inserting matters not in controversy in the bill. The question that is raised is purely technical. The conferees went into it carefully, and we had advice from competent authority that we were not taking from the law any of their rights. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, there are numerous inquiries about the bill (H. R. 12) to establish a code of laws for the United States. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing a brief statement concerning it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, what is the subject of the gentleman's remarks?

Mr. LITTLE. I say there are some inquiries about the bill (H. R. 12) to establish a code of laws for the United States, and I wish to print a brief statement concerning it.

Mr. WINGO. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House have made considerable inquiry as to House bill 12, the bill to make a code of the laws of the United States, and before adjournment I am saying a few words with regard to it. That bill passed the House by unanimous vote on May 16, 1921. Some weeks later the Departments of Agriculture and the Navy offered suggestions of amendments. As soon as I learned of it I took the matter up with the legal department of the Department of Agriculture, and that department and the committee agreed on 15 perfecting amendments of minor importance, and all the others were withdrawn.

After considerable difficulty the committee got in touch with the Department of the Navy and with its attorneys went over the suggestions made by that department. Most of their suggestions were canceled, the committee agreed to some of them as being perfecting amendments, and the others are now practically disposed of by further agreement.

The House Committee on Revision of the Laws has forwarded these suggestions of amendment to the Senate Committee on Revision of the Laws. Having made the original code, we offered these suggestions as proper for amending the bill.

We have suggested to the Senate committee that a subcommittee will be glad to appear before that committee and present the reasons for the suggestions, if it is so desired, or that our committee will be glad to meet in joint committee with them and run over the few propositions that are open, which could be disposed of at any time in a few days.

Professor Wigmore, author of Wigmore on Evidence, has said of the bill that since this bill is completed there is no longer any reason why the United States laws should be continued at all in their present confused condition, and has given the bill his high approval, and many great lawyers have united in its support.

In the records of the last National Bar Association the statement is made that their committee on such matters had a hearing and presented some suggestions to the Senate committee. I have a letter from ex-Senator Wolcott, of Delaware, who was on the Revision of Laws Committee of the Senate in the Sixty-sixth Congress, in which he states that the committee had no hearing in the Sixty-sixth Congress. I have a letter from the chairman of the present Senate committee, written since the National Bar Association met, in which he states that that committee has had no hearings. So far as I am able to learn, the committee of the National Bar Association has never made one single, solitary challenge of any section of the book. There is no reason why the bill can not be passed to-morrow, so far as I have heard.

In the Sixty-sixth Congress, in addition to the usual fund, the House was good enough to authorize the committee to spend $9,000 to complete the work. I found that that amount was not needed and returned to the House contingent fund about one-third of it, amounting to about $3,500. In the present Congress some work has been done examining the bill, looking over possible mistakes, as well as going over every suggestion that has been made concerning it that could be reached, but I thought best to await the action of the Senate committee before going extensively into the work again.

If I had known that the delay would have lasted for a year and some months, I should have proceeded with the Code for the District of Columbia, as the committee did in 1874, and have had it done by this time, and we would be where we were in 1874 when all the laws of the United States were available to all its people for the only time in its history.

Herewith I present a letter from the Clerk of the House giving a statement of our funds that the House may know some of the economies practiced. The Committee on Revision of the Laws has been the most economical committee in the history of this Congress:

MAY 18, 1922.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
Chairman Committee on Revision of the Laws,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL LITTLE: Replying to your verbal inquiry I am pleased to inform you that the records of this office show that in the exercise of your authority under the law to place one or two clerks on the roll within the clerk hire allowance appropriated for by Congress, since July 1, 1919, you have not availed of the lawful privilege of making designations which would have absorbed $850 (representing the so-called bonus). In other words, that much money—$850—has not been paid out but has been saved by reason of the manner in which you have used your clerk-hire allowance.

I beg to further inform you as follows concerning expenditures of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, of which you are chairman: Pursuant to resolutions adopted by the House authorizing that committee to incur expenses within certain limits in the Sixty-sixth Congress your committee was authorized to expend $9,000. Of this amount $5,793.82 was expended, leaving an unexpended balance of $3,206.18. In the Sixty-seventh Congress, that is the present Congress, your committee was authorized to expend $5,000, of which amount $595 only has been expended, leaving an unexpended balance of $4,405, or a grand total of unexpended balances for the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses of $7,611.18. This, together with the $850 saving of the bonus, aggregates $8,461.18, which you in your individual capacity and as chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws have saved in the three years last past.

Very truly yours,

WM. TYLER PAGE,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

A very great addition to the force of the committee was my own secretary who, in addition to doing my personal work, gave many days and nights to the work of the code without charge. That lady has been my secretary for a quarter of a century, and I should fail to do justice to an industrious worker if I did not call your attention to the Review of Reviews for March, 1921, which said of her:

The chairman drafted his wife into the service, and together they began the task of preparing copy. * * * For a year and a half Colonel and Mrs. Little worked steadily with the 10 revisers who were scattered over the country. * * * There seldom was an evening when the lights of Room 109 did not stream out across New Jersey Avenue until near midnight.

Without her experienced, constant, and invaluable aid, I could not have completed that work in one Congress.

In addition to the care with which the funds assigned to the chairman of this committee have been handled, he has been able to effect great savings in other directions incidental to the work of preparing the code. If you will turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for April 10, 1920, in the speech of Congressman SLEMP, presenting to the House the fortification bill, you will find the following:

Mr. LITTLE. Every year for 32 years there has been an appropriation for a Board of Ordnance and Fortification. Some time ago, as chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, while engaged in that work I discovered that there never had been any authorization for that appropriation. I called the attention of the Secretary of War to that fact, and after careful consideration he informed me that they would manage to get along without the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, and that he would not ask for any appropriation for that purpose. May I ask the gentleman what has been the result of that?

Mr. SLEMP. I will say in reply to the gentleman that the War Department withdrew the estimate of $58,500 for that board for the coming fiscal year and will return to the Treasury Department the unexpended balance in that fund of $230,000, or a total of $288,500, so that the gentleman is responsible for saving to the Treasury $288,500.

Mr. MONDELL. That is worth while.

Mr. William H. Webb, who soldiered in France, is the excellent and industrious clerk of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, and Marion Hiser is his useful assistant. The reviser in the committee's employ is a young lawyer, a graduate of the University of Kansas and of the Yale Law School, Capt. Wint Smith, of Kansas, who held that office in the Forty-seventh Regulars in France, fighting at the Marne, the Aisne, the Vesle, and the Argonne, wounded twice in action. At close quarters in the Argonne an enemy machine-gun man shot Captain Smith through the left arm as he grasped the other's gun, and Smith drove his bayonet through the man, being recommended for the distinguished service cross. He is very well equipped for the work he is now doing.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared some remarks upon how the next war must be financed, taking two paragraphs out of the President's inaugural address as my text, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on that subject in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I carefully reread, paragraph by paragraph, President Harding's inaugural address and his first message to Congress. In those two remarkable addresses the President outlined with some detail his policies—both foreign and domestic. Other Members on the floor of this House have ably reviewed the achievements of this administration. At this time I shall not address myself to such a review. The record speaks for itself and meets with the generous approval of fair-minded men and women everywhere.

TWO PARAGRAPHS OVERLOOKED.

With the exception of two paragraphs contained in the inaugural address, every candid reader of the two addresses to which I referred will arrive at the conclusion that the policies and suggestions for legislation outlined in those addresses have been carried out by the President and Congress or efforts are now being made to carry them out. The paragraphs that I have in mind as constituting an exception read as follows, to wit:

If, despite this attitude, war is again forced upon us, I earnestly hope a way may be found which will unify our individual and collective strength and consecrate all America, materially and spiritually, body and soul, to national defense. I can vision the ideal republic, where every man and woman is called under the flag for assignment to duty, for whatever service, military or civil, the individual is best fitted; where we may call to universal service every plant, agency, or facility, all in the sublime sacrifice for country, and not one penny of war profit shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination; but all above the normal shall flow into the defense chest of the Nation. There is something inherently wrong, something out of accord with the ideals of representative democracy, when one portion of our citizenship turns its activities to private gain amid defensive war while another is fighting, sacrificing, or dying for national preservation.

Out of such universal service will come a new unity of spirit and purpose, a new confidence and consecration, which would make our defense impregnable, our triumph assured. Then we should have little or no disorganization of our economic, industrial, and commercial systems at home, no staggering war debts, no swollen fortunes to flout the sacrifices of our soldiers, no excuse for sedition, no pitiable slackerism, no outrage of treason. Envy and jealousy would have no soil for their menacing development and revolution would be without the passion which engenders it.

The President has written in these two paragraphs the strongest indictment of our unscientific, unjust, and inequitable system of financing the war operations during the World War that has ever been called to my attention. The President says in substance that "if * * * war is again forced upon us," he wants—and the Nation should have—a system of financing the war, so that "not one penny of war profit shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination." It is evident that the President is against war profits in any shape or form—not even "one penny of war profit shall inure to the benefit" of anybody. Is it possible and practical to conduct war without war profits and war profiteers? The President is both practical and honest, and if in his judgment it were not practical and possible to so conduct war he would never have suggested that war should be conducted without war profits.

CONSCRIPTION OF BOTH MEN AND PROPERTY SUGGESTED.

I quote again the President's language. Remember, Mr. Harding is not a dreamer nor a theorist. Only things possible and practical are by him presented to Congress for consideration. He says:

I can vision the ideal republic, where every man and woman is called under the flag for assignment to duty for whatever service, military or civil, the individual is best fitted.

That is the selective draft. In event of another war we will go to conscription of men and possibly women also without a quibble. The policy of conscription of men was definitely settled as a national policy during the World War. In the next war that policy will be adopted and accepted by the people without question.

During the late war a few of us believed and advocated that the policy of conscription should apply to property as well as to men. The voice of those advocating the conscription of property and the elimination of war profits was as a voice crying in the wilderness. It fell upon the deaf ears of those who had charge of framing revenue legislation. Little did I think at the time that so soon there would come "one mightier than I after me," take up the cause, and from the exalted position of President of the United States, submit the selfsame policy to the serious consideration of the Congress and the country. In proof whereof I quote from the inaugural address. In the second clause of the sentence, of which I just quoted the first clause suggesting selective conscription be applied to men and women, the President continues on property as follows: "Where we may call to universal service every plant, agency, or facility, all in the sublime sacrifice for country" without "one penny of war profit." Call this conscription of property or commandeering property or the Government taking over and supervising the property of the Nation for war purposes—call it whatever you may, it is a radical departure from our attitude toward property during the war. It means that the Government will require property to be placed at the disposal of the Government by its owners without hope of war profits, just as men are drafted into the service without hope of financial reward. Who will dare to rise in his place and say that that is not as it should be?

WAR PROFITS INDEFENSIBLE.

During the late war there was a great deal of suppressed discontent because of the feeling and knowledge that something was inherently wrong—I use the President's language—"when one portion of our citizenship turns its activities to private gain amid defensive war while another is fighting, sacrificing, or dying for national preservation." That something is inherently wrong with such a situation requires no demonstration. Upon the authority of a United States Senator during the war under the last administration, 23,000 new millionaires were made. Upon the authority of another United States Senator—a Democratic Senator who was very close to the last administration, and therefore ought to know—the Government claims against war grafters amount to billions of dollars. I can not vouch for the accuracy of these senatorial statements. Undoubtedly they contain much truth.

If the late war had been conducted without "one penny of war profit," as a few of us then advocated and as the President now advocates for the next war, there would not now be any necessity for the Woodruff-Johnson resolution. We would not now have on our hands all that stench, that smells to high heaven, about war graft and war grafters that flourished during the late war.

LIFE OF THE REPUBLIC THREATENED.

What are the results of the reckless, unjust, and inequitable systems of war finance such as were in force in this and other countries during the late war? For answer I cite you to the second of the two paragraphs I have quoted from the inaugural address. Because we did not have a system of war finance during the late war which the President advocates for the next war we did not have at all times that "new unity of spirit and purpose" which the President visions for the next war. Following the war we had and still have "disorganization of our economic, industrial, and commercial systems." We have "staggering war debts." Our national debt was increased from $1,000,000,000 to $26,000,000,000. The national debts of the world increased from $43,000,000,000 in 1913 to $400,000,000,000 in 1921. We have "swollen fortunes to flout the sacrifices of our soldiers." Ask any soldier for his thoughts on the men who profiteered while he was fighting in the trenches. We have had "sedition," "slackerism," and "treason," and the passions of revolution were engendered in many countries.

War grafters and war profiteers by their acts during the late war did more to shake the foundations of popular government and the institution of private property than long-haired radicals, socialists, and Bolsheviki had done by their talk for a hundred years. How will the ordinary man feel or think toward his Government when his legislators do not prohibit or his executives overlook or condone the acts of those who take undue advantage of the necessities of the Nation during the stress of war? Men must learn to realize that property as well as men must serve the Nation at war. Heretofore the greed of men had made a distinction to the advantage of owners of property. Good citizens are alarmed, and rightly so, at the growth of radical thought. Much of such thought thrives on injustice. The enactment into law of the President's suggestions to finance wars will overcome more radical thought than all repressive legislation enacted or proposed to be enacted. The people will not endure injustices. There is a limit to the people's patience. They will strike back in this country with the ballot. Every time the Oil Trust boosts the price of gasoline a cent it adds to or multiplies the votes of the most radical candidate in the field.

You know the President's recommendations for financing the next war. If you don't, read the paragraphs to which I called your attention and inform yourselves. That policy is absolutely sound. You also know the old adage, "In time of peace prepare for war." The time to act is now. Unless we enact in time of peace legislation for financing the next war on the basis of no war profits, it will not be done when the excitement of the next war is on.

LEGISLATION PROPOSED.

I am deeply interested and profoundly concerned in the preservation of modern civilization and existing institutions of government, under which we have enjoyed the greatest measure of liberty and opportunity. Modern civilization and existing Government institutions will never survive another great war financed as the late war was, with its resulting scandal, graft, profiteering, and favoritism to the wealthy classes.

In order that it may not be said that the President's suggestions relative to financing of the next war have gone by the boards unnoticed by any Member of Congress, I introduced, on May 18, House Resolution 349, providing that a special committee of the House be created, to consist of 15 Members to be appointed by the Speaker. This committee shall investigate and report to the House the best and most practical methods for financing future wars, so that no public debts shall be incurred and no war profit shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination to carry on war activities, and shall recommend legislation which in its opinion will carry out such purpose and secure the benefits and advantages and avoid the evils referred to in the inaugural address of President Harding. Furthermore, I urge the adoption of this resolution and the enactment of legislation to carry out the purpose of the two paragraphs in the inaugural address as a means to direct the world in the paths of peace. General Wood has repeatedly stated that nine out of ten wars are based on commercial and trade rivalries. Every student of history knows that to be a fact. In such wars there are always certain classes that benefit financially by the war, while the great mass of the people sacrifice life or property, and often both.

Recently this country led the principal countries of the world in a great forward movement for peace in the Disarmament Conference held in the city of Washington. The eyes of the world are upon us. We profess unselfishness, but other countries actuated by selfishness regard us not without suspicion. We are the wealthiest nation on earth. We have the gold supply of the world. We have strong combinations of wealth which seek advantages and concessions in the four corners of the world.

If we had on our statute books a law which would compel the wealth of the Nation to carry the financial burdens of future war without "one penny of war profit," it would mark the greatest forward step for universal peace in the history of mankind. It would assure the world that our professions of unselfishness are genuine. Other nations would follow our example, and in the future the nine out of every ten wars based on trade and commercial rivalries would be avoided.

In view of the financial and economic chaos of the world as a result of the late war and the President's recommendations for the conduct of future wars, it is squarely up to this Republican Congress to consider my resolution, or a similar resolution, appoint a committee to give it special study, and enact legislation suggested therein for the preservation and perpetuity of the Republic and for the welfare of ourselves and our posterity.

I close by again quoting from the inaugural address. The President said:

> I earnestly hope a way may be found which will unify our individual and collective strength and consecrate all America, materially and spiritually, body and soul, to national defense.

To find "a way" to realize that "hope," I submit my resolution for consideration to the House.

Mr. Speaker, further in support of my argument for legislation to conduct future wars without war profits, I submit for printing in the RECORD the following statements and documents:

1. House Resolution No. 349.
2. A letter of indorsement from an ex-service man.
3. Memorial of American economists to Congress regarding war finance.
4. A proposed plank for party platform.
5. National debts of the world.

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 349.

1. This resolution reads as follows:

House Resolution 349.

Whereas in the conduct of war, to promote national concord and unity and to avoid economic disorganization, swollen fortunes, and staggering war debts, property should be conscripted for war purposes as well as men—conscription should apply to both men and property;

Whereas, according to the leading economists of our country, it is possible and practical to support war on a cash basis by an equitable system of taxation requiring the men who stay at home to contribute their just share of the money cost of war without expectation of repayment; and that such a system of taxation would keep down the costs of war, increase the efficiency of the Nation in war, bind the people together in a new unity of spirit and purpose, and entail no financial liability on posterity;

Whereas the policy of paying for war by bond issues gives property a precedence over life, deals unjustly as between citizen and citizen, and places an unjust tax burden on posterity;

Whereas the late World War was chiefly financed by bond issues, the national debt of the United States was thereby increased from $1,000,000,000 to $26,000,000,000, and the national debts of the world from $43,000,000,000 in 1913 to $400,000,000,000 in 1921;

Whereas President Harding in his inaugural address, in outlining the policy of his administration for the conduct of war, if war is again forced upon us, said:

"If, despite this attitude, war is again forced upon us, I earnestly hope a way may be found which will unify our individual and collective strength and consecrate all America, materially and spiritually, body and soul, to national defense. I can vision the ideal Republic, where every man and woman is called under the flag, for assignment to duty, for whatever service, military or civil, the individual is best fitted; where we may call to universal service every plant, agency, or facility, all in the sublime sacrifice for country, and not one penny of war profit shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination, but all above the normal shall flow into the defense chest of the Nation. There is something inherently wrong, something out of accord with the ideals of representative democracy, when one portion of our citizenship turns its activities to private gain amid defensive war while another is fighting, sacrificing, or dying for national preservation.

"Out of such universal service will come a new unity of spirit and purpose, a new confidence and consecration which would make our defense impregnable, our triumph assured. Then we should have little or no disorganization of our economic, industrial, and commercial systems at home, no staggering war debts, no swollen fortunes to flout the sacrifices of our soldiers, no excuse for sedition, no pitiable slackerism, no outrage of treason. Envy and jealousy would have no soil for their menacing development and revolution would be without the passion which engenders it"; and

Whereas the President's policy is based on right, justice, and sound economic principles, the enactment of legislation to put such policy automatically into effect upon a declaration of war by Congress would have a tendency to avert war, would reassure foreign nations of our unselfishness in international affairs, and, in case war became unavoidable, would guarantee a united and victorious America: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a special committee is hereby created, to be known as the War Finance Committee, which shall consist of 15 Members of the House to be appointed by the Speaker.

Said committee shall investigate and report, within one year after its appointment, to the House the best and most practical methods for financing future wars so that no public debts shall be incurred and no war profit shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination, and shall recommend legislation which in its opinion will carry out such purpose and which will secure the benefits and advantages and avoid the evils referred to in the inaugural address of President Harding.

Said committee shall elect its chairman, and vacancies occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled by the Speaker.

Said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of the House, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such personal services and incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution, and the expenditures shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers authorized by said committee and signed by the chairman thereof.

A STRONG LETTER OF INDORSEMENT FROM AN EX-SERVICE MAN.

2. The following letter presents very ably and concisely some arguments in support of the legislation proposed in House Resolution 349:

ARGONNE POST, No. 60, AMERICAN LEGION,
OFFICE OF COMMANDER, 1215 HIPPEE BUILDING,
Des Moines, Iowa, May 27, 1922.

Congressman C. W. RAMSEYER,
House of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: This morning's Register carries the inclosed dispatch from Washington. I am more than delighted to see that you have introduced a bill which will provide for the financing of future wars.

As commander of Argonne Post, No. 60, American Legion, I have been making a number of speeches throughout the State, and all my talks have advocated the placing, at once, upon our Federal statute books a law which will, on the declaration of war, immediately and automatically draft for service every man, woman, and child, regardless of their physical or financial condition or standing, together with all property, industries, and, in fact, all business. The speeches above referred to have been made in each case to the American Legion, together with the prominent business people of the cities and towns, and this suggestion seems to take very well with the audience.

I believe that we should never again allow ourselves to be placed in the same position as we were prior to the last war. The Government then selected certain men for duty in the Army and Navy, and allowed all other men to select the kind of employment that was most suited to their fancy. They were permitted to take jobs regardless of whether they were suited or skilled in that particular kind of work, and were allowed to select their own wage or salary for work rendered. Both capital and labor were permitted to charge exorbitant prices. One man was taken to face the hardships and rigors and dangers of war and his neighbor was permitted to select his own service, or slack, as the case may be. The soldier was forced to accept the sum of $30 a month, and all other men were allowed to charge anything they pleased. The Government paid $8, $10, and $14 a day for driving nails at Camp Dodge. There must never be any more inequalities as existed in the last war.

A system of classification can be arranged, placing in each branch of service those best fitted for that particular service. No one should escape. Men of military age and fitness should shoulder rifles, and those not of military age and fitness should be compelled to do the many other things necessary to back an army in the field. Of course, we must realize that all the industries must be continued, and to continue them means that they must be run by brains and manual labor, which must be furnished by men, women, and children who are unable and unfit for actual field service.

No one should be allowed to shirk, and no one should be allowed to make money off of the Government in time of war, and all should be paid the same wage; for instance, the factories should be taken over, and the officials and workers receive the same pay and the owners receive nothing for their investment during war time. It has been said that such a scheme is very uneconomic. Now, at best, war is an uneconomic condition. Your plan of drafting all property means simply this—that during actual hostilities no one would receive any profits from an unfortunate country at war, and that at the signing of an armistice or peace terms the war would be paid for in full, and the people would, except the soldier, be placed in status quo. As I said before, the war would be paid for at the end of it, and business and all other industries would commence at that point to run as they did before the war.

I am very glad that you have taken this matter up and hope that you will be able to push it through to a final conclusion. I know that this will be one of the most popular pieces of legislation with the soldiers, for they feel very strongly on this subject.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

H. H. POLK,
Commander Argonne Post.

MEMORIAL OF AMERICAN ECONOMISTS TO CONGRESS REGARDING WAR FINANCE.

3. At the time of our entrance into the World War American economists memorialized Congress to adopt the policy of taxation rather than that of bond issues as the principal means of financing the expenditures of our own country in the war on which it had embarked. I regard this memorial the ablest document on war finance that was presented to Congress during the late war. It should be reread by every student of finance. Our experiences in the war confirm every principle and every warning in the memorial. The memorial, with some of the signers, follows:

We, the undersigned, teachers of political economy, public finance, and political science in American universities and colleges, respectfully urge upon Congress to adopt the policy of taxation rather than that of bond issues as the principal means of financing the expenditures of our own country in the war on which it has embarked.

The taxation policy is practicable. It will prevent the price inflation which must result from large bond issues. It is demanded by social justice. It will increase the efficiency of the Nation in the conduct of the war.

The argument in support of these statements is briefly as follows:

THE TAXATION PLAN IS PRACTICABLE.

The taxation policy is practicable because the current income of the people in any case must pay the war expenditures. The choice between bond issues and taxation is merely a choice whether the Government shall take income with a promise to repay those who furnish it or take income without such promise. The actual arms, munitions, and other equipment and supplies for use in the war, except to the small extent that they have been stored up in the past, must be produced now, during the war itself, not after the war; and, moreover, must be produced by our own people. The policy of borrowing within the country itself does not shift any part of the Nation's burden of war expenditures from the present to the future. All it does is to make possible a different distribution of the burden among individuals and social classes, to permit repayment to certain persons who have contributed income during the war by other persons after the war. If the people can support the war at all, they can do it on a cash basis. Borrowing creates nothing. Except by borrowing abroad, which we can not do, we can get nothing which we do not ourselves produce.

It may be necessary for a month or two at the outset to issue a limited amount of bonds pending the collection of increased taxes, but beyond these, which might well be made repayable within a year, no necessity for bonds exists.

TAXATION PREVENTS PRICE INFLATION.

The taxation policy and no other will enable the country to escape the enormous evils of further inflation. The present high level of prices in Europe and America is primarily due to the war bonds and the paper money issued abroad. If the United States joins on a huge scale in this policy of borrowing, prices are bound to become far higher still.

Price inflation is harmful even in times of peace. During a war it is disastrous. It increases the cost of conducting the war. It postpones victory and thus adds to the war's toll of lives as well as to its money expenditures. By every bond issue the Government enhances the prices it must pay, and thus creates the need of more bonds. The policy works against itself.

Moreover, inflation of prices works injustice between different classes of society. The burden rests chiefly upon wage earners and salary receivers, whose pay never rises as fast as prices, and upon those who receive fixed or contractual incomes. The hardship which millions of our people are already suffering from the increased cost of living will be made many fold greater if the Government issues billions of dollars of bonds to finance the war.

The manner in which bond issues inflate prices may be briefly explained. The bond policy increases the amount of bank credit, which is equivalent in effect to an increase in the currency.

For example, if the Government takes $1,000 from a man in taxes, his credit or purchasing power is lessened to the same extent as the Government's is increased. On the other hand, if the Government borrows $1,000 from him, the quantity of purchasing power in existence is greatly increased. He now has a bond worth $1,000 on which he can and very often will borrow at the bank. Say he borrows $800; to lend him $800 the bank does not have to give up 800 actual dollars. Instead, it gives him a deposit account of $800 and, inasmuch as most of those who present checks do not ask for actual cash, but have their checks credited to their deposit accounts, the bank can keep this $800 in checks floating by setting aside, say, only $200 of actual cash. In other words, this bond issue transaction has resulted in increasing the Government's credit by $1,000, in decreasing the man's credit by only $200, and in decreasing the bank's money by only $200; that is, there has been a net increase of credit currency (checking deposit accounts) of $600, in contrast with no net increase if taxes had been adopted instead of bonds.

If the man had given up his money in taxes, he would have ceased to compete with the Government and other buyers of commodities and labor, to the extent of $1,000; but when the Government gives him a bond for his payment, he is still enabled to compete to the extent of $800. The purchasing power of society as a whole has increased by $600. This inevitably forces up prices.

The above illustrates the result of a bond issue that is taken by the public. As a matter of fact, if bonds are issued a large part of them will be taken by banks. It is likely that the Federal reserve banks will buy these bonds wholesale by giving the Government checking accounts to the extent of the bonds. This causes immediate inflation to the full amount of the checking accounts thus created; that is, inflation to 100 per cent instead of to 60 per cent of the bond issue, as outlined in the illustration above.

As the Government draws checks on these bank accounts to meet its requirements, the banks will try to recoup themselves by retailing the bonds to the public. To the extent that they succeed, the bonds get into the hands of the ultimate investor, with the resulting inflation already described. In so far as the banks are unsuccessful in this distribution, they are almost certain to issue bank notes on the basis of bonds left in their hands, and these notes will cause inflation even worse than that due to the checking accounts of the public based on bond collateral.

JUSTICE DEMANDS THE TAX POLICY.

The policy of taxation for war expenditures is demanded by justice. Apart from the injustice arising from price inflation, the policy of paying for the war by bond issues gives property a preference over life; it deals unjustly as between citizen and citizen. The question of taxation versus bonds is not merely one of economics; it is one of morals, of right against wrong.

This war is a great social enterprise. The American people have undertaken it as a people. The future welfare of the country as a whole is involved; the future welfare of every citizen is involved. It is the duty, therefore, of every citizen to share in war's burdens to his utmost. For some the duty is to fight; for others to furnish money. For all the duty is without limit of amount. The citizen who contributes even his entire income, beyond what is necessary to subsistence itself, does less than the citizen who contributes himself to the Nation.

The man who goes to the front can not be paid back the life or the limb he may lose. The man who stays at home should contribute his just share of the money cost without expectation of repayment. That the soldier or sailor who gives himself to his country should, if he be so fortunate as to return, be taxed to pay interest and repay principal to him who has contributed the lessser thing—money—is a crying injustice. If conscription of men is just and right, conscription of income is the more so; conscription of both is just and right when the Nation's life and honor are at stake.

TAXATION WILL INCREASE WAR EFFICIENCY.

The policy of taxation for war expenditures will increase the efficiency of the Nation in the war. Its effect in keeping down the cost of the war has already been pointed out. Its effect on the spirit of the people is still more important. The general recognition of the justice of requiring everyone, according to his ability, to share the burdens of war will bind the people together; the sense of injustice in the policy of borrowing will tend to drive them apart, to array class against class. Our soldiers and sailors will fight loyally in any case, but their spirit will be the more indomitable if they feel that every man who stays at home is serving the country to the utmost with his substance. An America in which every citizen, without discrimination, is called upon to do and to give all that he can, all that his powers permit, will be a united America, and a united America is bound to be victorious.

SUGGESTED FORMS OF TAXATION.

Without entering into details, concerning which opinions may differ, we recommend that among the tax measures to be adopted for the war period the following should be included:

(1) A tax which will take substantially all of special war profits.

(2) A material lowering of the present income-tax exemption.

(3) A drastic increase in the rates of the income tax, with a sharper progression in rates as incomes become larger.

(4) High consumption taxes on luxuries.

A PROPOSED PLANK FOR PARTY PLATFORM.

4. If "not one penny of war profit shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination" in the next war, those who believe in the soundness of the President's utterance should give support by indorsement in party platforms and otherwise. The following is a proposed plank for party platform:

The late war left the nations engaged in that conflict with staggering war debts, which were contracted on highly inflated values and will have to be paid with money very much deflated, thus adding greatly to the burdens of the peoples of nations heavily in debt. As the World War was financed chiefly by bond issues, the national debt of the United States was increased from $1,000,000,000 to $26,000,000,000, and the national debts of the world were increased from $43,000,000,000 in 1913 to $400,000,000,000 in 1921. The policy of paying for war by bond issues gives property a precedence over life, deals unjustly as between citizen and citizen, and places an unjust tax burden on posterity. In time of war property as well as men should be conscripted for war purposes. We urge Congress to enact legislation to finance future wars so that no public debts will be incurred and no war profits shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination.

NATIONAL DEBTS OF THE WORLD.

5. In conclusion, I shall submit for your study and reflection two tables prepared by Mr. O. P. Austin, now statistician of the National City Bank of New York and regarded as the leading authority on national debts. These tables show the stupendous growth of the national debts of the world. It is a well-known fact, and these tables give proof thereof, that nations did not acquire the debt habit until in very recent times. Formerly nations did not spend except out of current receipts. Raising money to defray national expenditures by bond issues for future generations to pay is a strictly modern evil.

It appears from the first table that in 1688 Great Britain was the only nation that had acquired the debt habit. That year her national debt was $3,232,636. By 1783 her national debt had increased to $1,126,515,090. That year the following nations had no national debts: Austria, France, Germany, Italy, Netherlands, Turkey, Russia, and the United States. Here are the aggregate national debts of the world for various dates:

1793	$2,433,250,000
1820	7,299,750,000
1850	9,000,000,000
1874	22,500,000,000
1900	31,201,759,000
1913	43,362,300,000
1918	205,396,000,000
1919	295,070,000,000
1921	400,000,000,000

The year prior to the World War the national debts of the world were, in round numbers, $43,000,000,000. The war was chiefly financed by borrowing. "Pay as you go" found little favor with war statesmen. The second table shows that the total national debts of the world, or, rather, the 100 principal nations and colonies of the world, were $205,000,000,000 in 1918 and in 1919, $295,000,000,000. The national debts of the world at the end of the year 1921, by a later estimate, were a little over $400,000,000,000.

The aggregate national debts at the end of 1921 were about ten times what they were before the war and about double what they were at the time of the armistice. The United States is the only nation that was in the war that has reduced her national debt in the last two years. Last year Great Britain was the only European nation actively engaged in the war whose expenditures did not exceed the receipts.

The wealth of Great Britain in 1865 was $30,000,000,000, and in 1914, $80,000,000,000; that of France in 1865 was $25,000,000,000, and in 1914, $70,000,000,000; that of the United States in 1860, $16,000,000,000, and in 1914, $250,000,000,000.

With these figures before us, it will be observed that our national debt is less than 10 per cent of our pre-war wealth; that of Great Britain a little less than 50 per cent of her pre-war wealth; and that of France, 73 per cent of her pre-war wealth. Among the defeated powers of Austria, Hungary, and Germany, each has a national debt in excess of her national wealth. Poland came into existence as a nation since the armistice, but she in some way has piled up a national debt of $69,000,000,000, a sum far in excess of her national wealth.

The increase in the national debts of the world from $43,000,000,000 in 1913 to $400,000,000,000 in 1921 is the direct result of the reckless and short-sighted methods of financing the war, and represents almost a total economic loss. Furthermore, the debts were contracted on highly inflated values, and will be paid in the future—unless repudiation or bankruptcy intervenes—with money very much deflated, thus greatly adding to the burdens of the nations heavily in debt.

Mr. Austin prepared the first table in 1900, showing the debts of the principal nations from 1688 to 1900. The second table was prepared by him in November, 1921:

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further remarks to make on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. McFADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

AMENDING PARAGRAPH 10, SECTION 9, FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 831, insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 831, insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, is that the bill the gentleman spoke to me about where there is some question about the language?

Mr. McFADDEN. That is the one that I spoke to the gentleman about yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. McFADDEN, Mr. DALE, and Mr. WINGO.

ISSUANCE OF CHECKS, DRAFTS, ETC., IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 1033.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill S. 1033 having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

B. K. FOCHT,
F. N. ZIHLMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.
L. HEISLER BALL,
W. L. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The conference report was agreed to.

PRINTING REPORT OF JOINT COMMISSION OF AGRICULTURAL INQUIRY.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Concurrent Resolution 61.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington calls up the House concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 61.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 50,000 additional copies of parts 1 and 2 of House Document No. 408, being the report of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, in four parts, of which 10,000 shall be for the Senate, 30,000 for the House, 1,000 for the Senate document room, 2,000 for the House document room, and 7,000 for the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry; and that there be printed 100,000 copies of parts 3 and 4 of House Document No. 408, being the report of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, of which 20,000 shall be for the Senate, 60,000 for the House, 2,000 shall be for the Senate document room, 4,000 for the House document room, and 14,000 for the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 2, after the word "thousand," strike out lines 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and in the line 10 down to the word "of" where it first occurs.

In line 10, strike out the word "Document" and insert the word "Report."

In line 12, strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "eight."

In line 13, page 1, strike out the word "sixty" and insert "twenty-five."

Page 2, line 1, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one."

Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "for" and insert the word "two."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, do I understand this is offered as a privileged resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think a resolution from the Committee on Printing is privileged.

Mr. WALSH. Unless it requires an appropriation. There is no provision here that the cost shall come out of the contingent fund of either House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. As I understand it, the method of doing the printing is under a fund provided by an appropriation from Congress for congressional printing, and this is to come out of that fund.

Mr. WALSH. There is nothing in the resolution to that effect.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How are they to be distributed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is provided for in the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not make a point of order. I only rose to make sure that the printing will be done. If we send it down with no reference as to what fund it shall come from, whether the contingent fund or some other fund, the point may be raised, and it will require a separate appropriation before the printing can be done.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think the recent appropriation for the operation of the Government Printing Office changed that method and gave us the general operating fund. In reference to the resolution, the Committee on Printing would have liked to have given the full amount asked for in the resolution, so as to provide for more than 50,000 copies of the two additional volumes of the report of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, but the cost was considerable, owing to the fact that the third volume has in it a large number of insert folders, large tables, and therefore the committee reduced the number, as will be seen by the amendments. The distribution as to the House and Senate is as shown in the report. That distribution will give each Member of the House from 20 to 24 copies of each of the two additional volumes of the report of the commission. The cost of the printing will be about $30,000. The Committee on Printing thought it unwise to authorize a reprint of volumes 1 and 2, for which there is considerable demand. In my opinion the report represents a great deal of hard work upon the part of the members of this joint commission, of which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is the chairman, and while a great deal of valuable matter has been produced, it would be impracticable for the House at this time to attempt to supply the general demand for copies of the four volumes which comprise the report.

Mr. GARNER. Could the gentleman not add to that statement by saying that the result of that labor is very beneficial to the farming element as well as the entire country?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am sure of it. The inquiry has headed up solid discussion of four or five great problems, all of which vitally affect the welfare of the people of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that this report and inquiry is the first one made under Government auspices which has collated and analyzed and brought together to a definite status a lot of valuable information which is of use and value not only to the agricultural interests but to other great interests of the country interested in transportation and banking and the movement of various products as well as the production of foodstuffs?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There can be no question as to the value of the work. As I said in the beginning, the Printing Committee would have been glad to authorize the printing of a large number, but we decided it would be out of the question to attempt to supply the bulk of requests from many prominent concerns and organizations which are asking for these volumes in large lots. The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce wants several hundred. Then some great concern in Minneapolis wants several hundred. The Farm Federation wants a large number.

Mr. WALSH. How many does the farm bloc ask for?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have not heard of any requests from them, but members of that bloc will get their 24 copies of each volume, just as will other Members. The National Wholesale Grocers' Association wants to place one in the hands of each member of its association, and if it can not get them in bulk will ask each member of the association to write to his Congressman for one, so gentlemen should be a bit careful about giving their copies away prematurely. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

IMPROVEMENT OF ST. LAWRENCE RIVER.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I submit another privileged resolution, Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 24, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 24.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed 5,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 179, Sixty-seventh Congress, entitled "Report of the United States and Canadian Government engineers on the improvement of the St. Lawrence River from Montreal to Lake Ontario," of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 2,000 for the House document room.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 1, strike out "five" and insert "three," and in line 7, strike out "three" and insert "one."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate concurrent resolution, and as originally sent to the House called for the printing of 5,000 copies of this report, which would have cost in excess of $500. The House Committee on Printing thought it best to reduce the number to 3,000, which makes the cost less than $500, and inasmuch as the resolution was before the committee we thought that the House might act upon it rather than cause Senate action on a new Senate resolution, nonconcurrent.

Mr. WALSH. Is this to be charged up against the congressional printing fund?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; in the same method.

Mr. WALSH. How many were printed of the first edition?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am unable to say. It was not a large number, but was distributed to all Members by the usual method. The demand is quite heavy for this. The report cuts the request to 3,000 copies. I am told that another Government has requested 1,000 copies, which are to be paid for. This is a Senate resolution and I think we should not object.

I move the previous question on the resolution and amendments.

The previous question was ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 391 (Rept. No. 1162).

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11212) entitled "A bill to amend an act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided between those for and against the bill, it shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of such consideration the committee shall report the bill back to the House and the previous question shall be considered ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage, without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this rule, if adopted, makes provision for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11212, which is intended to amend the act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, which was approved May 22, 1920. It has been necessary to present this at this time to take care of an emergency arising out of the summary dismissal of employees due to the reduction in the service, but none of these people have been dismissed on their own volition or on account of their own acts, and it is for the purpose of covering men who were intended to be covered when the original retirement act was passed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. How much will the expense of this be, if the gentleman has that information?

Mr. SNELL. The information that came before the committee was that there would be somewhere about 400 people affected by this law, and it would cost the first year probably $108,000 to $138,000, and it runs down to about $6,000 at the end of several years.

Mr. WALSH. I notice there seems to be a tendency in the committee reports of special rules that as the expense to the Government increases the time for general debate is lessened. We had an $80,000 bill up here yesterday with two hours of debate allowed. Here is a $108,000 bill with only one hour of debate allowed. I hope the gentleman is not going to pull out of his sleeve some other special rules——

Mr. SNELL. We have several others. I do not see any of the minority who want to be recognized, and I move the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF RETIREMENT LAW.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11212.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11212, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11212, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11212) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Chair to notify me when I have used 10 minutes. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] in presenting the rule, this legislation is of an emergency character. The retirement bill, which became a law on the 22d of May, 1920, provided, among other things, that a man having served for 15 years and having reached the age of 70 in the miscellaneous service, 65 in the mechanic, and 62 in the Railway Mail Service would be eligible to an annuity. By the passage of that law the Congress of the United States accepted the principle of the annuity system, employees paying 2½ per cent of the funds which were needed, or estimated to be needed, the Government paying 1.06, based upon the salary which was drawn by the employee. But it is very gratifying to know that as a result of the operation of law that the receipts have been considerable in excess of the demands upon the Treasury. No appropriation has yet been necessary; we are informed that in all probability it will be a decade before any appropriation will be necessary. Personally I think it is an unwise course to pursue. I think it is unwise, and possibly dishonest, for any man to advocate upon the floor of this House a measure which he knows ultimately will cost the Government money and attempt to leave the impression that the Government will not have to pay anything. Permit me to say that the occasion for the drafting of this bill grew out of a series of hearings upon another bill, and in that series of hearings it was revealed that there were some men at least, and we did not know at that time how many, who served the Government for a period of from 15, 20, 25, and 30 years, who have not yet reached the retirement age. A drastic cut in the Navy Department suddenly dropped these men from the rolls, and having accepted the principle and in harmony with the spirit of the law that Congress adopted, and moved, I confess, by humanitarian ideas, the committee began to investigate the problem and an inquiry into the various departments, most of which is in the report, revealed that there were not over 300 men who would be affected.

These men, many of them, had a right to believe, having served so long in the Government, that they had a career and that they would not be broken off perpetually at the very period of their life when their energies were lessened, when change was impossible.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman upon what theory the 50 years was stricken out and 60 inserted?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Well, it was the judgment of the committee that 50 was too low an age for the basis of annuity.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Fifteen years is required as much for a man of 50 years as it was for a man of 60 years?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. That is true.

Mr. LINTHICUM. A man who has a career in the Government service reaching the age of 50 years and serves 15 years is hardly equipped to make a living on the outside, is he?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Well, that was a matter—of course, the original bill was for 50 years, but the committee saw fit to strike it out on the ground that they did not believe that a man of 50 who had his faculties was necessarily in such a situation that he could not seek and obtain profitable employment elsewhere.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not the Government feel that a man over 45 years is not equipped for Government service? After he reaches the age of 45 years he can not take the civil-service examination or enter the employment of the Government.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I think that is true.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Why should you say that at 50 he was equipped to enter some other business and yet he is not equipped to enter the Government service?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I do not yield any further.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for one question in that connection?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I do.

Mr. RAKER. I was going to ask the same question as the gentleman from Maryland which has been covered. Between 50 and 60 there are 10 years. If a man has given 15 years' service and he becomes incapacitated before 60, say, at 52, he would not get the benefit of this law, would he? If he served 15 years and between 50 and 60 he became incapacitated, is there a valid reason why he should not be given this benefit?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Well, I introduced the bill, and, of course, I am standing to-day with the committee and talking of the position the committee took.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I would like to answer the gentleman. The retirement law as it stands to-day provides for retirement on an annuity in the case of disability, no matter what the age of the employee, if he has a minimum of 15 years' service. Consequently the case the gentleman cites, where a man is incapacitated and has to quit work between 50 and 60 years of age, is provided for.

Mr. RAKER. What is the reason for making it 50 instead of 60 years, then? There must be some motive, and the gentleman, being the author of the bill, no matter what the committee has done, should give us his judgment and experience on that matter.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, pending that, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. RAKER. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is no quorum present, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 11212, finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 267 Members had answered to their names, and that he therewith handed in a list of the absentees for printing in the Journal and RECORD.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The provisions of this bill are very simple, Mr. Chairman. There are practically two of them. The first is, that a man having reached the age of 60 and having served 15 years and having been removed from the service through no delinquency of his own, shall be entitled to a certificate which will entitle him to the annuity when he has reached the age prescribed in the general law, provided that whatever he has paid in shall remain in the Treasury. And another provision is, that those who have withdrawn within recent months and who are not counted or who did not count themselves as being eligible to an annuity, and who had no prospect of getting any annuity, if they shall return what they have withdrawn and permit it to remain in the Treasury, shall have the privilege the same as the others.

Permit me to say that the data we have collected shows that not more than 300 all told, in all of the departments, have been separated who have had 15 years' service and are above 55 years of age. The greatest number is in the Navy Department that reports 196. They took the trouble to extend their investigations throughout all of the places where any of the people working in the Navy were situated, and they report 196.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Just a short question. Do any of those employees of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing who are ousted come under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Not that I know.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman know?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I have not examined it. By the way, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing reported but nine all told who would come under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. LONDON. That is on a basis of 60?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. No. That is on a basis of 55. I gathered the data for 55, or rather, my bill was drawn at 50, but I made the inquiry for 55, thinking that perhaps it would be modified, so that the data in the report, and which comprehends around close to 300 men, covers those who had reached the age of 55 years and had had 15 years of experience with the Government.

There is just one department that did not report, and that is the War Department. Of course, the World War civilian employees were very few in that department. The number enlarged enormously, but of course none of those taken in could possibly come under the provisions of this bill. But they have dismissed some 62,000, distributed all over the world, and Secretary Weeks, in replying to an inquiry, said that it would be manifestly impossible in any reasonable time for anyone to check up on the ages and the length of service of 62,000 men who have been dismissed. However, he did volunteer the statement that in his judgment there were very few people who would come under the terms of this bill. It is perhaps difficult at any time for a general law to be passed that will completely cover emergencies that might arise or to completely and specifically state in terms what the spirit and manifest purpose of the law are. I have no doubt when the Congress passed the original law that its spirit and purpose were intended to cover conditions such as we have found to exist in recent months. Therefore, I think perhaps the committee will find that the number is so limited, the obligation so real, that without much hesitation the terms of the bill will meet your approval.

I want to say another thing before I take my seat, and that is that we asked the Government actuary—and we have the figures here, I think—to make a careful analysis of the cost, and for the 300 the cost will be less than $80,000 a year. Of course, there will be costs afterwards, because the law will apply in after years. And I asked the actuary to make an estimate on the experiences of the department and from the mortality tables as to about how many would probably come under the provisions of this act, and of course that had to be an estimate. He reports but 20 the first year, and, following the mortality table, gives us what from year to year will be the increased cost in order to take care of this provision of the law.

It is well for us to remember that after 10 months there was on hand in the fund $9,000,000, on the 30th of June which closed the fiscal year of 1921, and that at the close of this fiscal year there was on hand $15,000,000. There has been a movement on the part of those who have been retired to say that money is theirs. Not a bit of it, men. That money is in the Treasury, obligated to the men who have stayed in, so that ultimately the Government will have to pay the initial obligations of whatever number is comprehended in this bill, plus the additional that may be added by virtue of those who in future years shall drop out.

Now, that is a frank, honest, fair statement. On the other hand, it is true that this bill will require no immediate appropriation. It is true that in all probability the accumulation of the fund will be sufficient to take care of retirement for a decade. It is true that the provisions of this bill will not so materially increase the cost, but that it will only reduce the time by a few months.

And now, gentlemen, it would not only be inequitable, but it would be heartless for men having the right to think that they had a vocation that would be permanent and who had come in sight of the promised land, and who find their fellows all taken care of, to ascertain that they must face the future years without any such protection as the Government should have given a quarter of a century ago. It is only because this is initial. It is because we are starting this thing. After 20 years, no matter how many men may be taken care of this way, there will be no additional cost to the Government. So I would urge that you frankly support the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HOGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. HOGAN. Does this affect those who were laid off last year and discharged; not furloughed, but discharged? For instance, I have in mind a man who served 32 years, and then he was laid off.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. It goes back retroactively to the time of the enactment of the first bill, May 22, 1920.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 20 minutes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, not desiring to discuss the pending bill, I thank the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] for yielding me a little time for some remarks on agriculture.

More or less criticism of a purely partisan nature has been leveled at the present administration by way of charges that Congress and the President have neglected the interests of the farmer. No one who keeps posted on what is going on in Washington will be deceived by this false and insidious propaganda. Some people, however, who may not have closely followed all we have done here, and who might be misled by this palpable effort to discredit the majority party through political misrepresentation, will be interested in a brief review of the more important agricultural measures considered on this floor within recent months.

Hon. Henry C. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, said in a recent address:

> Never in the same length of time did Congress give more serious attention to farm needs. All of the legislation is of a constructive character and will be more helpful than is now realized.

Being the Missouri member of the Committee on Agriculture, the words of the Secretary were particularly pleasing to me. Every true Missourian must feel a profound interest in the great basic business of agriculture. Ours is one of the leading States of the Union in the quantity and value of farm production. And, with pardonable pride, I can truly assert that the district I have the honor to represent is not surpassed by any congressional district in the United States in its splendid variety of soil output. Cotton, rice, sunflowers, tobacco, alfalfa, wheat, corn, oats, potatoes, vegetables, watermelons, cantaloupes, sorghum, fruits, berries, and poultry all thrive in richest abundance. One of our newspapers carries as its suggestive motto the phrase, "The land of the big red apple and the home of the helpful hen." Our blooded cattle, hogs, horses, and sheep divide honors with the famous Missouri mule. Coming from such a region, I considered it a rare privilege to be selected for membership on the House Committee on Agriculture, and I do not know of any more agreeable committee assignment. Rarely, indeed, does any partisanship assert itself there, because our members have industriously devoted themselves to the study of big welfare problems rather than to the narrower questions of party politics. For weeks and months we have patiently heard testimony from witnesses representing every section of the country on farm problems, and those hearings spread over thousands of printed pages. Hard and continuous as this work has been, we have felt ourselves amply repaid in the consciousness of having accomplished good results.

Mr. MONDELL, the majority leader of the House, said to our committee on February 27 last:

> No committee has done as much as this committee or inaugurated so much legislation in the interest of farmers as this committee, and I have been for it all.

Aside from the legislation originating in our committee, we have given hearty cooperation in considering measures from other sources calculated to better the status of agriculture. On May 27, 1921, this Congress passed the emergency tariff act and thereby stopped the influx of agricultural imports and saved the American market to our own producers.

We passed a law of the highest importance dealing with the live-stock industry. The stockyards and the packing plants were put under the supervisory and regulatory authority of the Secretary of Agriculture. The marketing, packing, and distribution of meat animals and meat products are so controlled under that law as to prevent discriminatory and deceptive practices and to insure a square deal for the producer and the consumer.

The Voigt filled milk bill is now a law. It protects the milk producer and the milk consumer from sham imitations. The practice was becoming widespread of extracting the butter fat from milk and then rebuilding the milk with coconut oil or other vegetable oils. We were told by the best scientists that this substitute lacked the nutritive qualities so essential to child growth and body development. Unscrupulous dealers, particularly in the larger cities, imposed upon the foreign population and illiterate people by selling them this canned compound and representing it as pure whole milk. By this law we have prevented the transportation and sale of filled milk in interstate commerce.

The future trading act, which recently passed the House, is designed to prevent market gambling in wheat and other grains. The inevitable result of price manipulation on the grain exchanges has been to depress the values at the season when the farmer usually sold his wheat and to raise the values after the wheat had found its way into the hands of the speculator.

The packer act, future trading act, and an amendment to the food control act have combined to encourage farmers in broadening the system of cooperative selling. In the manufacturing business and in every other class of output the voice of the producer, based on his knowledge of cost, has been largely effective in determining the selling price of his product. But the farmer, through all the years, has carried the handicap of having other people fix the price paid to him and the price paid by him for the things he has been compelled to sell and buy. When he drove to his local market with a load of produce he was compelled to accept from the buyer a price fixed in the big central markets; and when he spent the money so received he paid the price determined where his shoes or his hat or his clothes or machinery were manufactured. We believe that these recent enactments are moving in the direction of letting farm production values be determined by the men whose investment of toil and energy have created them.

Congress has under way an elaborate scheme of financial credit for agriculture. Some of it we have already put in the statutes by legislative enactment, and hearings are being held on other bills. As to the wisdom of the revision of the general scheme of credits, let me quote from a recent address by Eugene Meyer, managing director the War Finance Corporation, delivered at Milwaukee:

> In spite of the all-important position of agriculture in the American economic structure our financial system has been developed around banking practices imported from countries which are chiefly commercial and industrial rather than agricultural. And many of our troubles have been caused by forcing agriculture to adjust itself to these banking practices instead of adapting our banking to the needs of our basic industry and synchronizing the financing of agriculture with the natural processes of production and consumption. It has been the practice to put the bulk of our crops on the market immediately after the harvest. So long as the returns were sufficient to keep the farmer in business and the hope of enhanced land values encouraged him to carry on, so long as the market had the capacity to absorb a year's supply of a farm commodity in from three to six months, the weakness of such a system was not so apparent. But the moment there was a serious disturbance in the market, with the consequent failure to distribute the carrying of the commodity all along the line from the producer to the consumer, there was put upon the farmers and the country banks that finance them a burden they were unable to carry.

We have amended the Federal reserve act so as to require that at least one member of the board shall be an actual farmer. The War Finance Corporation has been revived and extended by a recent law, so that an enormous revolving fund is available for exclusive use in making loans to live-stock and agricultural interests. We passed a law to increase the rate of interest on the bonds of Federal farm loan banks so as to make them more readily salable and without any increase of interest on the loans to the farm borrower. We passed another law transferring $25,000,000 from the Federal Treasury to the capital fund of the farm loan banks.

Other bills dealing with farm credits are pending, but none of them perhaps is of greater importance than the one relating to warehouses. It is proposed that agricultural paper up to nine months' maturity, secured by products stored in public warehouses, may be discounted with Federal reserve banks. It is proposed that nine months' paper secured by live stock in the process of fattening for market shall be accorded the same privilege. It is proposed that the paper of cooperative marketing associations evidencing advances for agricultural purposes shall be entitled to all the rediscount privileges of agricultural paper.

I have not undertaken to enumerate all that the present Congress has done for agricultural welfare, but what I have shown is sufficient to indicate the wholesome purpose and the trend of thought of the administration now charged with solving the great national problems of economic reconstruction. From the time this administration went into office until the present hour every agency, directly and indirectly, has addressed its best efforts to aiding the farmer by removing obstacles that have long been permitted to block his progress.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I feel that the gentleman from Ohio is entitled to a good hearing. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present. The Clerk will call the roll.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11212) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 243 Members, a quorum, answered to their names, and he presented a list of absentees for printing in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, may I yield one minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] without losing the floor?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio yields one minute to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, a new controversy has arisen over an old issue. It seems that the Legislature of Massachusetts under provisions of its law submitted to the attorney general of that State the question of the constitutionality of the law passed by this Congress and approved November 23, 1921, entitled "An act for the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy," usually referred to as the Sheppard-Towner Act. Subsidiary questions were also submitted as to whether Massachusetts has the right as a State to question the constitutionality of the act; whether by accepting the act the State would waive its right to contest the validity of the act; and, if the act be considered unconstitutional, what procedure should be instituted to test its constitutionality?

In an elaborate opinion filed in answer to these questions the attorney general advises that the act is unconstitutional, that the State may raise the question, that by accepting the State would probably waive its right to contest the validity of the act, and that the most direct, if not the only, method of testing the constitutionality of the act is by "proceedings in equity against those officials of the Federal Government who are acting or preparing to act to carry its provisions into effect."

It is further stated in the press that acting on this advice the Legislature of Massachusetts has directed its attorney general to institute proceedings to test the constitutionality of the law.

THE CONSTITUTION AND THE LAW.

The question thus raised is whether there is constitutional sanction for the maternity law. It is claimed by the contestants that the Constitution of the United States does not grant power to Congress to tax the people "for the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy."

It is true, as stated by the attorney general, that the National Government has only limited and enumerated powers; that such enumerated powers are stated in Article I, section 8, of the Constitution; and that all powers not thus enumerated, or those necessary for carrying into effect the powers thus granted, are reserved to the States or the people. It is the contention of the proponents of this legislation that it is clearly and fully authorized by the first paragraph of Article I, section 8, of the Constitution. Said paragraph is as follows:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imports, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

Congress by the passage of the act in question, and the President by his approval, have declared that the legislation will promote the "general welfare of the United States." If so the act is directly under the authority of a specifically stated and enumerated power granted by the Constitution to Congress.

CONSTRUCTION.

To ascertain the meaning of constitutional provisions, rules of construction based on reason and experience have been approved by the courts and should be applied when controversies arise. One of these rules is that "the aim and object as well as the causes of a provision are essential in construing it." Under this rule of construction we should have no difficulty. The principal objects and purposes of the Constitution are explicitly stated in the preamble. It is as follows:

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

To promote the general welfare is thus specifically stated as one of the declared objects to be obtained by the adoption of the Constitution. It is true the preamble contains no grant of power, but that comes later when Congress in express terms is granted power to levy taxes to "provide for the * * * general welfare of the United States."

The statement in the preamble that one of the purposes for which the Constitution was ordained was to "promote the general welfare" has been sometimes disparaged. It is not claimed that a statement of purpose in the preamble is of itself authority for congressional action, but it is of great value in the interpretation of a disputed clause in the body of the Constitution.

Mr. Justice Story, in his great work on the Constitution, referring to the preamble, sections 459, 460, says:

The importance of examining the preamble for the purpose of expounding the language of a statute has been long felt and universally conceded in all juridicial discussions. * * *

There does not seem any reason why, in a fundamental law or constitution of government, an equal attention should not be given to the intention of the framers, as stated in the preamble. And accordingly we find that it has been constantly referred to by statesmen and jurists to aid them in the exposition of its provisions.

In this case we find that one of the purposes stated in the preamble is to promote the general welfare, and that statement of purpose is followed in the body of the Constitution by an express grant of power to Congress to tax and appropriate for the general welfare. It would appear unnecessary under these conditions to argue that Congress has such power.

Another rule of constitutional construction is that preceding ordinances of Government and the debates and proceedings of the convention which framed the Constitution should be considered in determining the meaning of provisions finally adopted. If this rule be applied, we shall find that in the first effort to unite the Colonies in a central government and in all the deliberations of the Constitutional Convention the predominant purpose avowed was to provide for the general welfare of the people.

In the Articles of Confederation which preceded the Constitution and which was the first association of the Colonies for governmental purposes the third article provided:

The said States hereby severally enter into a firm league of friendship with each other for their common defense, the security of their liberties, and their mutual and general welfare.

From the first, the "general welfare" was in the minds of the makers of the Constitution, which followed the Articles of Confederation. The first resolution of the Virginia plan submitted as a basis for consideration, was as follows:

Resolved, That the Articles of Confederation ought to be so corrected and enlarged as to accomplish the objects proposed by their institution, namely, common defense, security of liberty, and general welfare.

On Gouverneur Morris's suggestion, Randolph moved a substitute, the first division of which was as follows:

1. That a union of the States merely federal will not accomplish the objects proposed * * * namely, common defense, security of liberty, and general welfare.

At a subsequent period during their deliberations a resolution was adopted stating that Congress should have power "to legislate in all cases for the general interests of the Union."

When the first draft of the Constitution was prepared the clause respecting taxation stood thus: "The Legislature of the United States shall have the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imports, and excises," without any qualification or limitation whatever. Subsequently, the limitation "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," was added by the unanimous action of the convention.

In the draft prepared and submitted by Charles Pinckney power was conferred on Congress to levy such imports and duties for the use of the United States as Congress should think necessary and expedient. But this on consideration was changed to a declaration of purpose that taxes might be levied and appropriations made for three great general purposes, namely, "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," and that, as we have seen, was the language finally adopted.

Thus it is apparent that from the first the framers of our fundamental law had in mind that one of the essential objects to be obtained by its creation was to provide for and promote the general welfare of the people.

THE DOCTRINE OF STRICT CONSTRUCTION.

The purpose to create a government that should have power to promote the general welfare is shown both by the preamble and by the resolutions and debates of the Constitutional Convention, and this purpose is confirmed by the express grant of the power to Congress to tax and appropriate for the general welfare as stated in the body of the Constitution. It would appear then, that there is not much ground for the contention that Congress has no such power. In years long past, however, a school of strict constructionists arose whose advocates ably and earnestly strove to interpret the Constitution so as to limit the powers of the general Government to the narrowest possible bounds. The State rights advocates, as they were known, did not at first advance the contention that the grant of power to tax and appropriate for the general welfare was limited to enumerated purposes, but Mr. Madison early realized that unless the power of Congress was limited to the afterwards enumerated powers, and was not in itself considered a grant of power, the doctrine of strict construction would have little chance of final adoption.

Thus, a controversy arose as to the meaning of the first paragraph of the eighth section. Three views were advanced. It was argued by some that the power granted to Congress in this paragraph was a two-fold power, first to lay and collect taxes, and second to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare, and that the second was a separate and distinct grant not dependent on the first. This view has now very little support.

A second claim was that the grant to lay taxes and make appropriations for the general welfare was limited to the specific objects afterwards enumerated, to establish post offices, to coin money, to regulate commerce, and so forth. This view was contended for by the strict constructionists.

A third, and the view best supported and now generally adopted, is that the paragraph is a distinct grant of power to levy taxes for the purpose of, or in order to "pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

Mr. Madison advocated that the expression that appropriations might be made for the "general welfare" was limited by the enumeration of powers contained in the same section but in separate and distinct paragraphs. He said: "But what color can the objection have, when a specification of the objects alluded to by these general terms immediately follows, and is not even separated by a longer pause than a semicolon."

Mr. Madison in this comment in the Federalist is answering objections made to the Constitution that unlimited power to tax is granted by that provision. It requires only an inspection of the entire section to see that each of the provisions separated by a semicolon are separate and distinct grants of power, by no means dependent or modified by other sections. The first is the power to lay and collect taxes for specific and stated purposes; the second grants Congress power to borrow money; the third to regulate commerce, and so forth.

Against the interpretation given by Mr. Madison may well be placed that stated by Mr. Jefferson in his opinion on the Bank of the United States, given in 1791. Mr. Jefferson said:

To lay taxes to provide for the general welfare of the United States is to lay taxes for the purpose of providing for the general welfare. For the laying of the taxes is the power, and the general welfare the purpose for which the power is to be exercised. Congress are not to lay taxes ad libitum for any purpose they please, but only to pay the debts or provide for the welfare of the Union. In like manner they are not to do anything they please to provide for the general welfare, but only to lay taxes for that purpose.

No stronger statement in this regard has been made than by Mr. Hamilton in 1791 in his remarkable report as Secretary of the Treasury on manufactures. In this report he states the three limitations on the taxing power of Congress, viz, that all duties, imports, and excises must be uniform; that no capitation or other direct tax shall be laid except in proportion to population; and that no State shall levy an export tax or duty, and then proceeds:

These three qualifications excepted, the power to raise money is plenary and indefinite. And the objects to which it may be appropriated are no less comprehensive than the payment of the public debts and the providing for the common defense and general welfare. The terms "general welfare" were doubtless intended to signify more than was expressed in those which preceded, otherwise numerous exigencies incident to the affairs of the Nation would have been left without a provision. The phrase is as comprehensive as any that could have been used, because it was not fit that the constitutional authority of the Union to appropriate its revenues should have been restricted within narrower limits than the general welfare, and because this necessarily embraces a vast variety of particulars which are susceptible neither of specification nor of definition. It is, therefore, of necessity left to the discretion of the National Legislature to pronounce upon the objects which concern the general welfare, and for which, under that description, an appropriation of money is requisite and proper. And there seems no room for a doubt that whatever concerns the general interests of learning, of agriculture, of manufactures, and of commerce are within the sphere of the national councils so far as regards an application of money.

Mr. Justice Story, in his work on the Constitution, sections 907 and 908, discusses the question whether the power of taxation granted in section 8 was an absolute and unlimited power or whether it was limited by the stated declaration of purposes for which taxation might be imposed. He arrives at the latter conclusion, and states that the section should be interpreted to read that taxes might be imposed in order—to pay the debts and to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

In this sense—

He adds—

Congress has not an unlimited power of taxation; but it is limited to specific objects—the payment of the public debts and providing for the common defense and general welfare. A tax, therefore, laid by Congress for neither of these objects would be unconstitutional, as an excess of its legislative authority.

Mr. Story distinctly refuses to approve the claim that the power to tax in order to provide for the common defense and general welfare was limited to subsequent provisions of section 8 of the Constitution. Regarding this contention he says:

An attempt has been sometimes made to treat this clause as distinct and independent, and yet as having no real significance per se, but (if it may be so said) as a mere prelude to the succeeding enumerated powers. * * * No person has a right to assume that any part of the Constitution is useless or is without a meaning, and a fortiori no person has a right to rob any part of a meaning, natural and appropriate to the language in the connection in which it stands.

Referring to Mr. Madison's statement that the common-defense and general-welfare clause contained only "general terms, explained and limited by the subjoined specifications," Mr. Story says:

It is assuming the very point in controversy to assert that the clause is connected with any subsequent specifications. It is not said "to provide for the common defense and general welfare in manner following, viz," which would be the natural expression to indicate such an intention. But it stands entirely disconnected from every subsequent clause, both in sense and punctuation, and is no more a part of them than they are of the power to lay taxes.

Mr. Pomeroy, in his work on Constitutional Law, sections 273, 274, 275, sanctions such interpretation of the section and says:

Thus the Congress does not possess an absolutely unlimited power of taxation. It can only resort to this high attribute for one or more of three purposes—payment of debts, the common defense, the general welfare. The defense must be common and the welfare general. But, after all, this leaves a sufficiently wide field for legislative operations. Money may be raised to pay any debts however contracted, whether now existing or to become due at a future time. Common defense and general welfare are terms of the broadest generality, and within them can be included all the objects for which governments may legitimately provide.

What measures, what expenditures will promote the common defense or the general welfare Congress can alone decide, and its decision is final. It is certainly not necessary that any particular expenditure should be spread over the whole country, to bring it within the meaning of a defense which shall be general. All the disbursements of the Government must be met by revenue of some kind and must finally be paid by some species of taxation, except that small portion which may be provided for by the sale of public property. Congress spends vast sums of money in the erection and adornment of a capital, in furnishing a scientific institution; but it is not claimed that these disbursements are not made for the general welfare. A fort in New York is for the common, not local, defense. In short, the legislature is not trammeled by these provisions; it has ample scope and verge in which to indulge its proclivities to raise and expend money.

The marvelous wisdom and prescience of the makers of our Constitution is shown by the fact that, although the supreme purpose of its creation was to promote and secure the general welfare of the people, power was not granted Congress to legislate directly for such purpose. But power was granted Congress to appropriate money for the general welfare and thus to carry out its expressed purpose without infringing upon the rights of the States, and in this way to cooperate with and aid them in promoting the general welfare of those who are at once citizens of the State and of the Nation. As Mr. Hamilton well said:

The phrase "general welfare" is as comprehensive as any that could have been used, because it was not fit that the constitutional authority of the Union to appropriate its revenues should have been restricted within narrower limits than the general welfare, and because this necessarily embraces a vast variety of particulars which are susceptible neither of specification nor of definition.

This is a Nation, and Congress is its lawmaking body. The United States of America is a general government for millions of people, and its Constitution is designed to provide for them an adequate system of government, sufficient in power and scope to meet all needs and answer all demands. Is it imagined that when the creators of our fundamental law, with that marvelous wisdom which characterized the formation of that document, admitted to be the "most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man," did not know what they intended or what they did when they committed such power to Congress? Is it thought they did not mean what they said when they declared Congress should have the power to tax and appropriate for the general welfare? How else could they have made a National Government that could meet the demands of future ages? "Otherwise," to repeat Mr. Hamilton's words, "numerous exigencies incident to the affairs of the Nation would have been left without a provision." And to those who now contest that power think that the Supreme Court, after all these years of continual and uncontested exercise of such power, will interpret that provision of the Constitution which grants the power so as to make it senseless and absolutely ineffective? It would seem that such position is not only unreasonable but reactionary in extreme degree, and that any hope or expectation of a successful result is without reasonable prospect of fulfillment.

THE ACCEPTED INTERPRETATION.

The view as stated by Hamilton, Story, and Pomeroy has been the accepted view of America's greatest jurists and statesmen. It has been the accepted interpretation of Congress from the first. Literally hundreds of acts have been passed by Congress which have no express nor implied constitutional sanction, except that they were justified under the general-welfare clause; and from the first every President of the United States has approved such acts. No veto has ever been rendered by any President based on the grounds now urged. No suit has ever been brought contesting the right of Congress to pass appropriations for the purpose stated, and no decision of any court can be cited as authority for the position now taken against this legislation.

These facts should be given great weight, for another rule of construction approved by jurists is that the interpretation of a constitutional provision adopted and followed by the lawmaking bodies if in numerous instances and covering long periods of time is among the strongest indications of the true intent and purpose. From 1789 to 1922 there has been an unbroken line of congressional acts passed under the authority and interpretation which supports this legislation.

Mr. Justice Story, in referring to this fact, says:

In regard to the practice of the Government, it has been in conformity to the principles here laid down. Appropriations have never been limited by Congress to cases falling within the specific powers enumerated in the Constitution, whether those powers be construed in their broad or their narrow sense. And in an especial manner appropriations have been made to aid internal improvements of various sorts, in our roads, our navigation, our streams, and other objects of a national character and importance. In some cases, not silently but upon discussion, Congress has gone the length of making appropriations to aid destitute foreigners and cities laboring under severe calamities; as in the relief of the St. Domingo refugees in 1794, and the citizens of Venezuela, who suffered from an earthquake in 1812.

Many other instances could be given from our earlier period, and they multiply greatly with the years. As our growth in population has increased, as the diversification and extent of our industrial and commercial activities have extended, as our progress in scientific knowledge has enlarged our mental horizon, and especially as humanitarian and moral standards have been elevated, "public welfare" has attained an enlarged and nobler significance.

Indeed, most, in number at least, of the laws carrying appropriations which are now made must find justification for their enactment in the power granted to Congress to appropriate for the public welfare. If appropriations are not justified in the present instance, many of the present activities of the General Government would have to be discontinued.

In the Treasury Department we have established the Federal Farm Loan Board, which is making loans to farmers all over the United States. This is without any constitutional warrant, under the attorney general's opinion.

The entire Public Health Service of the Government would likewise fall under the ban. Scientific investigation and studies of diseases, the mental and industrial hygiene of children, rural sanitation, public health administration, etc.—all these activities, requiring many millions from the National Treasury, are now carried on by the General Government. If the Legislature of Massachusetts is eager to protect the taxpayers of that State, one wonders why during all these years something has not been done to stop what they now seem to consider unconstitutional exactions. Is it possible that what is constitutional under the Public Health Service is unconstitutional under the Children's Bureau? It is a somewhat remarkable thing that no serious protest has been raised against the Public Health Service, which for years has been doing the same class of work in the same way that is given the Children's Bureau in the law which is now declared unconstitutional.

Then there is the Bureau of Education; the Reclamation Service; the Bureau of Mines, and indeed, the whole Department of Agriculture and the Department of Labor; none of these has any constitutional sanction under the contention now urged against this law.

In the Department of Agriculture tens of millions are spent on such matters as farm management and farm economics; on forecasting the weather; on the care and development of live stock; on studies of plant life; on studies of insects; on crop estimates; and the distribution and marketing of farm products. The General Government also has and maintain a Bureau of Fisheries and furnishes fish to stock private streams and ponds.

In the Department of Labor the Children's Bureau is found, which has regard for the welfare of children and child life and especially questions of infant mortality, the birth rate and diseases of children, and so forth. The same department has also a Woman's Bureau which formulates standards and policies to promote the welfare of wage-earning women, to improve their working conditions, increase their efficiency, and advance their opportunity for profitable employment. The department also maintains the United States Employment Service to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States.

The Government also supports the Smithsonian Institution, for the "increase and diffusion of knowledge among men." The United States National Museum and the National Gallery of Art are also supported from the National Treasury.

Then there is the Federal Trade Commission, charged with the supervision of private corporations; the United States Shipping Board, which is the largest shipping concern in the world engaged in the business of ocean transportation; and the War Finance Corporation, which is now furnishing funds from the National Treasury to finance the export of farm products and is lending money to farmers to enable them to profitably market their products, with a Government-furnished capital of $1,000,000,000.

In making appropriations Congress has gone far beyond these instances. When earthquakes occur, when floods come, when almost any calamity of magnitude occurs at home or abroad, we make contributions from the National Treasury in their aid. We appropriate not only for world's fairs at home but we also take money from the National Treasury to make exhibits in Brazil and elsewhere. We send seed wheat to our own drought-stricken farmers, and do not hesitate to appropriate $20,000,000 for the relief of the Russian peasants. It should be remembered that we have made appropriations for the celebration in Massachusetts of the landing of the Pilgrims, and the people of that Commonwealth have gladly received money from the National Treasury to help eradicate the chestnut blight from their forests and their parks. They have received and used national appropriations to aid their schools and to help build their roads. It is difficult to understand why all these and hundreds of other appropriations are allowed to pass with acceptance or tacit approval and all the powers of the Commonwealth are launched to defeat the beneficent operation of the maternity act.

The instances given by no means exhaust the subjects for which Congress makes appropriations, none of which has constitutional sanction other than that they are considered for the general welfare. When the attorney general brings his suit he might well consider the inclusion of these governmental activities, all of which in his view must be unconstitutional. He could as well justify himself in attempting to stop those expenditures as to attempt to stop expenditures authorized by the maternity act. By so doing he could, if successful, save hundreds of millions annually, to the great relief of the tax-burdened people of Massachusetts, so many of whom have such large incomes that they are compelled to pay the disproportionate exaction of 5.66 per cent of the total paid into the National Treasury. The immunity, if secured, from the exactions imposed by the maternity act, which carries only a little over a million dollars, would be insignificant compared with the relief that might come to the income-paying citizens of Massachusetts from the continued annual imposition of hundreds of millions equally unjustified, according to the opinion of the attorney general.

INVASION OF POLICE POWER.

Every extension of governmental activity to cure abuses or to relieve untoward conditions has been met with the same objection urged in this case, that it is an invasion of the police powers and the reserved rights of the States. But Congress has used its judgment in most cases with careful observance of constitutional limitations, and in nearly all cases the legislation has been sustained by the Supreme Court. If the objection now urged against legislation of this character were sustained and acts of a similar nature were stricken from the statutes, a great volume of beneficent law would be lost. A brief review of some of the cases of this character may be of value as indicating the nature and trend of the decisions of the Supreme Court on such legislation when attacked as an invasion of the rights of the States.

In Champion v. Ames (188 U. S. 321), the so-called Lottery case, it was held that Congress had power to prohibit the transportation of lottery tickets. In Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States (202 U. S.) the power of Congress was sustained under the pure food and drugs act to prohibit the introduction into the States of impure foods and drugs. In Hoke v. United States (227 U. S. 308) the constitutionality of the so-called "white slave traffic act" was sustained, in which the transportation from State to State of women for the purpose of prostitution was forbidden. In that case the Supreme Court said:

> If the facility of interstate transportation can be taken away from the demoralization of lotteries, the debasements of obscene literature, the contagion of diseased cattle or persons, the impurity of food and drugs, the like facility can be taken away from the systematic enticement to and the enslavement in prostitution and debauchery of women, and, more insistently, of girls.

In Caminetti v. United States (242 U. S. 470) the Supreme Court held the act prohibiting the transportation of women from State to State for purposes of illicit intercourse was valid. In Clark Distilling Co. v. Railway Co. (242 U. S. 311) the "prohibition act" was sustained prohibiting the transportation of intoxicating liquors. In McCray v. United States (195 U. S. 27) a law laying a tax on oleomargarine when colored to resemble butter was sustained. More than 50 years ago a tax on the circulation of State banks was sustained in the case of Veazie Bank v. Fenno (8 Wall, 533). In Standard Oil Co. v. United States (221 U. S. 1, 68) the Supreme Court held the Sherman Act designed to break up combinations in restraint of trade and monopolies was valid. The rule laid down in these cases has been followed in many others, and in all of these the argument was strenuously but vainly urged that the General Government had no power to invade the reserved and police power of the States. In the decision of the White Slave case the Supreme Court held that if convenient to the exercise of its power the legislation might have the character of a police regulation.

These cases are important because they are ample and conclusive authority for the proposition that Congress may exercise a power constitutionally conferred even when it directly affects the police powers of a State. The fact should be remembered that the people of the United States are under a dual citizenship. The United States has no citizens that are not citizens of some State. The General Government in the exercise of powers conferred upon it can not legislate without affecting the citizens of a State. Once the power is granted its exercise can not be restrained because the law enacted may not be pleasing to some citizens of some State. Its judgment as to how it can best promote the general welfare of its citizens can not be nullified by the objection of a State or even of many States.

CONDITIONAL GRANTS.

The objection is urged that a grant made contingent upon acceptance with conditions constitutes an invasion of the reserved police powers of the States.

For more than half a century appropriations have been made by the General Government for purposes promoting the general welfare, and they have been made contingent upon acceptance by the States and upon conditions required by the General Government.

In 1857 Justin S. Morrill, representative in Congress from Vermont, introduced a bill providing for grants of the public lands to each State for the establishment, endowment, and maintenance of an agricultural and mechanical college. It was finally passed in 1859, and was vetoed by President Buchanan on the same grounds now urged by the attorney general against the maternity act. The bill was reintroduced, however, passed by Congress, and approved by President Lincoln in 1862. Under this act the States received either Government lands or scrip in varying ratios, provided that every State accepting the grant should maintain a technical college with certain prescribed features. Compulsory military-training work and teaching in agriculture and the mechanic arts was also required.

Under this act 10,400,000 acres of land were given the States. Massachusetts received 360,000 acres, and in 1867 complied with the conditions and established her college.

In 1887 the Hatch Act established an "experiment station" for each of these colleges, and an annual payment from the National Treasury of $15,000 was given each college which complied with certain specified conditions.

In 1890, $25,000 for the "more complete endowment and maintenance" of each of these colleges was provided, and this was increased later to $50,000. Every State in the Union has accepted, has complied with the conditions, and is receiving annual appropriations from the National Treasury.

In 1914 the Smith-Lever Act was passed, under which annual appropriations are made to the States for instruction and practical demonstration in agriculture and home economics. The annual appropriations, now at their maximum, amount to $4,580,000 each year. No State can receive its quota of these appropriations unless it appropriates an equal amount for the same purpose and complies with the conditions specified in the act.

The Smith-Hughes Act was passed in 1917. This act grants to the States amounts from the National Treasury for vocational education. The maximum annual appropriation is $7,000,000, and the allotments to the States are conditioned on a like appropriation and compliance with conditions to be met by each State.

In 1912 Congress made an appropriation of $500,000 to aid the several States in highway construction. The money was apportioned among the States, and in order to receive its allotment each State was required to contribute twice as much as it received from the Government.

In 1916 the Federal aid road law was passed. It provided for a maximum appropriation of $25,000,000 by the General Government. A State must appropriate an amount equal to its allotment and comply with the conditions specified in the act in order to receive its share. An act has just been passed by Congress appropriating $50,000,000 for the coming year, $65,000,000 for the next year, and $75,000,000 for the year following for road purposes, provided the States appropriate a like amount and comply with the conditions specified.

If the maternity act is unconstitutional then these acts are unconstitutional. None of them are unconstitutional, and neither is the maternity act unconstitutional. There can be no distinction drawn in principle between these acts and the maternity act. If they are for the general welfare, so is the materternity act. If the saving of human life is not for the general welfare, then nothing named above and nothing that can be named is for the general welfare.

PROVISIONS OF THE ACT.

In fact, most of the acts referred to are much more exacting in their requirements than is the maternity act. A brief review of its provisions will show how slight are the conditions required of the States to entitle them to share in its benefits and help to an understanding of its general scope and purpose.

The act provides for an appropriation from the National Treasury to the States for the purpose of cooperating with them in promoting the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy. An authorization is made for an appropriation annually of $1,240,000, such fund to be available to such States as shall accept the provisions of the act in the proportion which the population of a State bears to the total population of the United States, provided a State shall appropriate an equal amount for the same purpose. A board is created consisting of the Chief of the Children's Bureau, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education. The Children's Bureau is charged with the administration of the act, and is directed "to make or cause to be made such studies, investigations, and reports as will promote the efficient administration of the act."

In order to receive the benefits of the appropriations authorized, the legislature of a State is required to—

1. Accept the provisions of the act.

2. Designate or authorize a State agency to cooperate with the Children's Bureau in the administration of the act.

3. Submit plans for administration to the Children's Bureau, subject to the approval of the board.

4. It is provided that no plan shall be approved unless it provides that no official, or agent, or representative in carrying out the provisions of this act shall enter any home or take charge of any child over the objection of the parents, or either of them, or the person standing in loco parentis or having custody of such child. If the plans be in conformity with the act, and reasonably appropriate and adequate to carry out its purposes, they shall be approved.

5. No allotment shall be withheld from a State without the approval of the board, and when withheld the State agency may appeal to the President.

In the recital of the provisions of the act given by the attorney general in his opinion he omits to state that the act further provides that "If these plans shall be in conformity with the provisions of the act and reasonably appropriate and adequate to carry out its purpose they shall be approved by the board." Without such a provision the attorney general's statement would lead to the conclusion that the board could impose any conditions they saw fit to demand. The act particularly states that plans only reasonably appropriate and adequate shall be required. The opinion of the attorney general also omitted to give the constitution of the board; a very important matter when considering the objections which he urges.

The statement of the attorney general that the nature of the plans to be approved "are wholly undetermined except that they must have some relation to the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy" is not justified. The nature of the plans are not "wholly undetermined," they are specifically required to be "reasonably appropriate and adequate" to carry out the provisions of the act, only that and nothing more.

The attorney general further states that control over the conduct of the State agencies is vested in the Children's Bureau and the board by exercise of the right to withhold funds. The act provides that when an appropriation made has not been expended by a State "for the purposes and in accordance with the provisions of this act," further apportionment shall not be made until the State arranges to apply the funds which it has received for such purpose. Such action can not be taken, however, except by the order of the board, with the right to the State of appeal to the President. Could the rights of a State be more carefully guarded? Or would the attorney general approve provisions allowing the State to receive appropriations granted by the General Government for a particular purpose without provision to guard against its misuse?

The attorney general appears exceedingly anxious to make it appear that the act gives to the General Government control within the States of the administration of the law. In fairness in that connection he should have stated the concluding section of the act which provides—

> This act shall be construed as intending to secure to the various States control of the administration of this act within their respective States, subject only to the provisions and purposes of this act.

There has never been at any time a purpose on the part of the proponents of this legislation to control the States in carrying out its objects. Everything that would carry such an inference even has been excluded from the provisions of the act. Only such requirements as are absolutely necessary to protect the General Government from a misuse of the funds have been retained. It is not to control the States but to aid and encourage them and to stimulate them to activity that this legislation is designed.

ORIGIN AND JUSTIFICATION OF THE ACT.

It is difficult to understand why this legislation has been and is so persistently and bitterly attacked. Its origin is briefly this: The Children's Bureau began making investigations, as it was required to do, regarding the mortality of children arising from maternity causes. This necessarily included consideration of the maternal mortality of women. The bureau found a terrible, a disgraceful condition existing in the United States both as to mothers and children. It was found that between 200,000 and 250,000 children died each year before they had lived 12 months. It was found that between 20,000 and 25,000 mothers died in childbirth each year. It was found that this maternal mortality rate was the highest of 17 countries of the world, and that our infant mortality rate was seventh among the nations. It was found that while in the United States we had reduced the mortality rate in typhoid cases one-half, we had reduced the rate in diphtheria cases more than one-half, and were rapidly reducing the rate in tuberculosis, there had been but slight decrease, if any, in the percentage of maternal deaths, and no decrease in the percentage of infant deaths.

It was found that more women between the ages of 15 and 45 years die from causes incident to child bearing than from any other cause except tuberculosis.

These conditions being shown, the Children's Bureau undertook a searching inquiry as to causes and as to possible means for helping conditions. It was found that the principal causes were ignorance and poverty, resulting in neglect and lack of trained help when needed. Other causes contributed, but these seemed to be the principal causes. The bureau found in seeking remedies that wherever in the United States or elsewhere systematic work and trained aid was secured, principally of an instructive, helpful, and nursing character, the mortality of both mothers and children was reduced almost immediately one-half. It was found that the lower mortality rates existing in most European countries was largely the result of Government stimulus and aid. It was found that every European nation had made some provision for the protection of maternity and infancy, and that those which had done the most had secured the best results. It was found that Great Britain had adopted a system such as this act provides of appropriations from the national treasury, contingent on like appropriations from local communities to which was committed the administration of plans approved by the central authority. Their appropriation in 1914 was £11,000, in 1918 it was increased to £200,000, and in 1921 it was £526,000, or about $2,600,000. As a result of this work they reduced their maternal mortality rate to 4.4 per 1,000 cases, while ours stands at 7.4. The chief medical officer of the Ministry of Health of Great Britain in his annual report said:

> The health of the mother and child is obviously the primary step in the health of the community. For here is the source of a nation.
> The results (of their work) have been very remarkable. The decline in the death rate of infants from 150 per 1,000 to 89 must be attributed in large measure to the action taken. It is one of the two or three most significant triumphs of preventive medicine in the present century. It is far-reaching, first because of the lives saved, secondly because of the invalidity escaped by the surviving children, and thirdly because it is a movement springing in large degree from the people themselves and resulting in a new social conscience in respect of the physical well-being of mothers and children. These are immense and permanent gains to a nation.

In the United States it was found that wherever this systematic work and trained aid was secured remarkable results followed. In New York City they have a bureau of child hygiene, which for several years has carried on in that city exactly the work which is contemplated in this act. Since the work was inaugurated it has reduced the death rate of infants due to maternity causes from 144 to less than 70 per 1,000. Dr. Josephine Baker, director of the work in New York, testified before the committee that in her opinion upon a reasonable estimate the lives of 15,000 women and 100,000 babies could be saved each year by carrying out the provisions of this law. Dr. Ellen C. Potter, of the division of child health in the State of Pennsylvania, stated before the committee that with a very limited corps of workers they reduced the rate of infant mortality 10 per cent in that State in the first year of the service. She believes that under the full operation of the maternity act the maternal mortality of mothers and children can be reduced more than one-half.

The necessity for some action was so apparent and the remedy appeared so effective when applied that the women who had charge of the child-welfare work in Washington, with help and encouragement from other child-welfare workers throughout the United States, proposed this legislation. This was the situation as it was presented to Congress, and so the bill was favorably reported from the committee by a unanimous vote. It passed the House by a vote of 279 to 39, and the Senate by a vote of 63 to 7.

This is the legislation and this the law which the Legislature of Massachusetts, on the advice of the attorney general, attacks. It is a singular incident of our current history. Most of the people of the United States will regret that such opposition has developed in a State to which we used to look for leadership in humanitarian movements.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] is recognized.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the consideration of this bill, which is an amendment to the retirement act, it seems to me that attention for just a minute ought to be given to the fundamental principle upon which the retirement act was founded. It would strike me that the retirement act is founded on one of two basic principles, either on the basis of a pension, where the beneficiary under the act acquires certain financial rights after a certain number of years' service and pays the premium therefor or it must be on the basis of a gratuity. It must be founded either on the principle that it is a bought-and-paid-for guaranty for a certain amount of income after a certain number of years or else it must be founded on the other principle, that it is a governmental gratuity paid to the beneficiary in lieu of and in recognition of a stipulated number of years' service. I do not believe there is a man in the House or out of it knowing anything about the retirement act who would make the claim that it is founded on the first basis, namely, that the beneficiary under the act acquires certain financial rights after a certain number of years and is in consequence granted an annuity. Hence if that is true it must be founded on the principle that the Government recognizes that the Government employee earns a certain gratuity for a stipulated number of years of service. It is with that view that I undertake to discuss this bill.

Now they have agreed to the bill and I believe that the House has accepted the principle of retirement so that no discussion is required on the retirement question. Whether it is right or wrong, or whether it should be or should not be, it is. The only thing to decide upon this proposition as I see it is what is the basis on which we started. As I said above, it is on a basis of gratuity in view of a stipulated number of years of the employee's service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How do you make it a gratuity owing to somebody?

Mr. BEGG. I make it on this reasoning surely, because I can see no excuse for it save one of the excuses or reasons I have given.

Mr. LONDON. Call it a deferred payment.

Mr. BEGG. All right; I will call it anything you want.

It must be a contribution, or a payment, or whatever it is, to the employee, as a recognition for faithful service performed for a stipulated number of years. Now that principle has been accepted by this Congress and by the employee. That being true, we have arbitrarily set the number of years as 30 years of service for the benefits to begin to accrue. I maintain that by every reasoning of old-age pensions, old-age insurance, or other commercial pensions the only reasoning that can be applied to that scheme of legislation is that if you are going to recognize the obligation at the end of 30 years' service, when a man has given fifteen or twenty years' service he has earned a percentage part of the gratuity that would have been earned at the end of the 30 years' service. If I am correct in that reasoning then I ought to make another statement, which seems to me to be almost a fact, that in order to avoid doing gross injustice, regardless of the bill or the amendment, the only basis on which you can calculate the responsibility of the Government to the individual is not on a basis of years of age, but rather on the basis of years of service rendered. The same argument that can be offered for the introduction of this bill cutting the age limit from whatever it is, 72, 70, 65 or 62, every single argument that can be used for cutting it from what it now is to 60 years of age can be used in favor of cutting it from 60 down to 50; and I am going to offer an amendment to do that very thing on the ground of justice, if you are going to cut it from 62 and 65 and 70 down to 60. Why? Let us see what we are doing to-day if we adopt this amendment at 60. Supposing A is 60 years and 2 months of age and has served the Government 16 years and we pass this amendment. A having served 16 years is entitled to an annuity for life from the Government.

Now, suppose B is 59 years and 11 months old. That is not an absolute monstrosity by any means. He is 59 years and 11 months old and instead of serving the Government 16 years as A has done, he has put in 27 years of faithful service. If you pass this bill to-day in this form, you cut him out. He does not get an annuity for a single hour. A gets an annuity for life, having served 16 years, and B, having served 27 or 28 or 29 years, gets nothing. A may have served the Government only 15 years and 1 month, and yet you are willing to come in and grant him a gratuity for being fortunate enough to have been born one month sooner than B. Men, we do not legislate like that. We most certainly can not afford to go into the unexplored field of granting annuities to people after they have been retired from the service on any such haphazard basis as that.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I had rather not yield yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BEGG. If I had my way on this proposition, after having accepted the annuity proposition which we have and which is not debatable in this bill, I would do one of two things. I would let the law stand where it is——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to have one minute more to complete my statement.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I have no more time.

Mr. BEGG. I ask unanimous consent that I may have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman for that purpose. Gentlemen opposed to the measure are entitled to 30 minutes. The Chair will recognize anybody who is opposed to the measure.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] for 30 minutes.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield a little of that time to me?

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield the gentleman five minutes, if he will answer a question.

Mr. BEGG. All right.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he can give any reason why a man who is employed by the Government at good wages, who has sought the job, should be pensioned by the Government any more than the farmer who makes the food that you eat or the carpenter who builds your house? Can the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. BEGG. Yes; I can answer that without any trouble.

Mr. THOMAS. The gentleman can not do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEGG. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky who so kindly yielded me some extra time that that question was answered by the Congress when they adopted the retirement-pay proposition. So far as I am personally concerned, I do not believe in favoring one class of people in the country on a retirement basis any more than I do any other class.

Mr. THOMAS. You are doing it when you pass this bill.

Mr. BEGG. I grant that; but that does not enter into this question, else I would be willing to debate it with the gentleman and might be on the other side. I do not know. I should like to conclude the statement I started to make. Having accepted the retirement scheme as a fact, if I had my way in passing any amendment I would do one of two things. I would let the law stand as it is to-day, which might do an injustice to some few men, or else, if I attempted to amend it, I would so amend it that a man who had given 15 years of service and then had been separated from Government employment without any fault of his own should be entitled to a fractional part of the total annuity, such as the number of years of service bears to the total number of years required to receive the total annuity. That would avoid doing injustice to men of less age.

Mr. THOMAS. I will give the gentleman five minutes more if he will answer my question.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Except as a purely arbitrary matter, how does the gentleman differentiate between a man who served 15 years and 1 day and a man who served 14 years and 364 days?

Mr. BEGG. I will say in reply that there is no equity in the proposition, and if we want it to be absolutely equitable we would put it on the same basis that life insurance companies put it on, that after three years it has a cash value.

Mr. MANN. That is not the scheme we have; when we fix an arbitrary thing, it is arbitrary. The gentleman is arguing for another arbitrary matter.

Mr. BEGG. I beg the gentleman's pardon, the gentleman did not get what I said.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I got it.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman missed fire once. When the time comes I shall offer an amendment keeping the age at 50 years.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. The gentleman admits that this is class legislation at the expense of all other citizens, and he admits that it is an arbitrary and inequitable matter. I want to know whether he is in favor of putting through such legislation as this?

Mr. BEGG. I am for the provision that will do the least injustice.

Mr. THOMAS. I think every individual ought to stand on his own bottom.

Mr. BEGG. I am willing to stand on mine.

Mr. THOMAS. Why do you not cut out these pensions?

Mr. BEGG. Did the gentleman ever introduce a bill to repeal this retirement act?

Mr. THOMAS. No; you have 165 majority; what good would it do?

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman would have the satisfaction of knowing that he tried as hard as he could and did his best.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has 23 minutes remaining.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS].

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, we already have a retirement act and I am only going to take up the time of the committee in order that I may see if I have construed that act correctly, for if I have not I will offer an amendment. As I construe the act that we now have—and I would like the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey and the gentleman from Indiana, for both of them have given this matter close study—a man who is physically unable to perform the duties of his position and who has been in that service for, say, 30 years, is entitled to retirement. I have in mind a case where a man has worked for the Government in one branch of the service for 30 years. He is not familiar with any other branch of the service. He started as a young man. For the last two or three years he has worked against the advice of his family physician, and recently on the advice of his family physician he put in his application for retirement. Every physician who has examined him says that he is absolutely unfit to go on with the work he has been doing, and that if he does so, he is risking his life. Yet, certain agents of the Government hold that because he might perform the duties of a janitor somewhere, if he could find such a position as a janitor, he is not entitled to retirement.

My construction of the law is that if this man has given the Government 30 years' service, the best of his life, 30 years of faithful and efficient service, he is entitled to retirement and to receive the pay, because from his salary, which has not been large, the Government has taken the required amount by law from that salary. I would like to ask my colleague, Mr. LEHLBACH, and my colleague, Mr. FAIRFIELD, both of whom have studied this question, if in their opinion a civilian's opinion should be taken where he has made only a superficial examination, and especially where physicians representing the Government show the man to be physically unfit to perform the duties required of him, and also if the present law does not give the man a retirement status if he is found to be totally disabled to perform the services in that branch of that service of the Government in which he is serving? If it does not, then your laws are a farce and a man is simply at the mercy of some enemy or the whim of some examiner.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The retirement law provides that after a man has been employed 15 years and has become totally incapacitated he is entitled to retire with an annuity just as if he had reached the retirement age. The term "totally incapacitated" is an administrative function and is to be construed by the authorities of the Department of the Interior that have to administer the law, taking such advice from the law department as they require. Consequently, a construction by me or by the gentleman from Florida would have nothing but an academic value. I will say in answer to the question of the gentleman, and it is my personal opinion and has no binding force, that the term "totally incapacitated" should be taken in relation to the employment of the individual under consideration. If he is a railway mail clerk and totally incapacitated for performing the work of a railway mail clerk, he comes within the term of the law, and it is a strained and unreasonable construction to say that if he is capable of performing some other and hypothetical employment of which he knows nothing he would not then come under the provisions of the law. I think that would be a strained and unreasonable construction. I think the term "totally incapacitated" relates to the employment which the man has under the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to thank my colleague; he and I are in accord. I am also glad to note my colleague from Ohio indicates he is in accord with the above statement. No Member of Congress has given more thought and study to this question than these gentlemen. I will say I have found the Department of the Interior perfectly fair in all these matters, but sometimes for some reason, perhaps hoping to make a record, some clerk interprets laws that Congress has passed in a way that Congress did not intend.

Let me call attention to a fact that may be of some assistance to my colleagues. During my recent campaign Members of the House were severely criticized because of the execution of the laws rather than for their passage, because those who passed rules and regulations and those who enforced said laws did not carry out what we had endeavored to do and did not seem to grasp what we had in mind. It was for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to these matters that I rose, and I assure you it was with no desire upon my part to criticize any department, because, I repeat, I have found the departments absolutely frank and fair and desirous of doing absolute justice in all cases. As the gentlemen from New Jersey and Indiana indicate, they are in complete accord with my interpretation of the law, and, as no Member has dissented, I will not offer any amendment to the present bill, for I believe I shall receive full justice for my constituents and that you will also receive justice for yours. This can only be the result if the law is construed as we intended it should be.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate consent to an adjournment of the House of Representatives until Tuesday, August 15, 1922, in accordance with the request contained in House Resolution 390.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following House concurrent resolution:

House Concurrent Resolution 61.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 50,000 copies of parts 3 and 4 of House Report No. 408, being the report of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, of which 8,000 shall be for the Senate, 25,000 for the House, 1,000 shall be for the Senate document room, 2,000 for the House document room, and 14,000 for the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry.

AMENDMENT OF RETIREMENT LAW.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, is hereby amended as follows:

That any employee 50 years of age or over to whom the act of May 22, 1920, applies who shall have served for a total period of not less than 15 years and who, before reaching the retirement age as fixed in section 1 of said act shall become involuntarily separated from the service shall be granted an annuity certificate by the Commissioner of Pensions which will entitle said employee, upon reaching retirement age, to an annuity as provided in section 2 of said act: Provided, That the deductions made under the provisions of section 8 of said act of May 22, 1920, from such employee's salary, pay, or compensation prior to separation from the service shall remain in the civil service retirement and disability fund subject to the provisions of section 11 of said act governing the return of deductions in the case of a deceased annuitant or employee.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "employee," strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "sixty."

Page 2, line 2, after the word "service," insert the words "through no delinquency on his part."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill, but I am opposed to the committee amendment striking out "fifty" and inserting "sixty." It seems to me that if a man is in the employ of the Government for 15 years or more, necessarily starting in at the age of 34 or 35 years, serving until he is 50, he ought to be entitled to this annuity, just as much as is the man who is 60 years of age. He has paid the same amount into the fund and is separated without any fault of his. Under the civil-service regulations a man over 45 years of age can not take the civil-service examinations and enter the Government service. If, therefore, the Government contends that a man over 45 years of age is too old to enter its service, why should the Government say to a man when he is 50 years of age or over that he is not too old to enter the service of others under new régime and a new work and capable of taking care of himself on the outside? That does not seem proper, especially when you read the lines at the top of page 2:

Shall become involuntarily separated from the service through no delinquency on his part * * * shall be granted an annuity certificate by the Commissioner of Pensions—

And so forth.

He is involuntarily separated from the service and through no delinquency on his part. He has served the Government for 15 years. We ought not to strike out the word "fifty" and compel the man to be 60 years of age. I am not a follower of Doctor Osler, but I do know that when a man is 50 years of age and endeavors to enter a new employment, to take up a new line of endeavor, it is very difficult for him to procure employment. We recognize the fact that a great many men have been separated from the service recently, involuntarily on their part, largely because of the conference which was held here. Several thousand of them have been dropped from the service. Then there have been other separations, such as those in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, where they were dismissed, though under civil service, through no fault of theirs, but purely to make room for others. If the committee wants to do justice, if it wants to be fair in this matter, if it is, as alleged, an emergency measure, it ought to adhere to what the bill originally was and say that at 50 years of age, if a man be separated from the service involuntarily, without delinquency on his part, he is entitled to this annuity. I sincerely hope the committee will look at the matter in that light. To make it 60 years of age, as amended, is making it too high entirely and ought not to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the only thing I want to say at this time is to call attention to the fact that if the committee amendment be adopted it will cut the retirement from 70, 65, and 62 years down to 60 years of age. If the committee amendment be defeated, then the word "fifty" will be in the bill, and that will be the age at which these men who have been let out of the Government will begin to draw annuities. The reason for the passage of this bill, as I tried to say, is to correct some apparent injustices to men who served the Government 15 years or more. The lower you make the age the less the injustice will be. In other words, if there is any argument for cutting it down to 60, the same argument lies for cutting it down to 50. Let me repeat the illustration I gave a few moments ago. Here are two men in the Government service. A is 60 years of age and 1 month. He works for the Government 15 years. If this amendment should pass, he will get an annuity for life. B is under 60 years of age—58 or 59. He has worked for the Government, we will say, 16 years or 25 or 28 years. If the bill is passed making the retirement age 60, B, with the longer service, will get nothing, while A gets a life annuity. I believe the committee wants to be fair. If we are going to change it, let us change it so as to do the least possible injustice.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman gives an arbitrary illustration. Could not the gentleman give the same illustration of 50 years and 1 month and 49 years and 11 months?

Mr. BEGG. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. Then what is the sense of saying 50 years?

Mr. BEGG. It is not so likely to happen; you are not liable to find 1 of that kind where you find 10 of the other.

Mr. MANN. That is a mere guess.

Mr. BEGG. No; it is not; it is knowledge of a fact in the Government service.

Mr. MANN. From my knowledge of the service, I would say that the gentleman is mistaken as to the facts.

Mr. BEGG. I would say that the men whom I have met, who have been retired under this arbitrary retirement, are all older than the gentleman's illustration, according to their statement to me. The youngest, it seems to me, in the group was around 49 years of age.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I do not doubt the statement of the gentleman about those who came to see him, but I do not assume that all have been seeking the gentleman's aid.

Mr. BEGG. No; certainly not; but common sense tells us there will be fewer under 49 than under 60.

Mr. MANN. All who have been to me have been under different circumstances.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that anyone will insist that the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service is inimical to the retirement system and hostile to its reasonable and proper extension in given circumstances. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] elaborated an argument, after having laid down as the premise of his argument something that was absolutely not so at all. The gentleman says that the retirement is not a premium system where the insurance is bought and paid for and the insurance represents the value of the premiums paid. Consequently, he said, it is a gratuity, based on length of service to the Government, by the Government to the employee.

And arguing from that basis he said that the age of the person had nothing to do with the annuity he should receive, and that for whatever service, no matter how short, the employee performed for the Government he should get a proportionate part of the annuity fixed for the limit of 30 years. As a matter of fact, the theory that underlies the retirement system is this: That it is every man's duty as he goes through life during the years in which he has an earning capacity to exercise a reasonable prudence and foresight in order to accumulate, as far as his ability and circumstances will permit, a competence that will sustain him when he reaches the period when his earning capacity is gone, and that is the fundamental principle written in the retirement law itself. For that reason every employee of the Government who comes within its provisions is compelled to deposit with the Government 2½ per cent of every pay that he draws. The Government puts that in a fund, invests it, and keeps it for him so that when he reaches that age which experience best shows is the age when his earning capacity has become so impaired that he is no longer able to earn a living, that saving thus taken from his pay and thus safeguarded by the Government will provide for his old age. Now, the 2½ per cent which was fixed as a sum which reasonably and without burden could be thus subtracted from the pay of the Government employees in a majority of instances will not supply an adequate annuity to preserve from hardship the person who becomes retired, and it is for this reason that the Government obligates itself to contribute whatever sum may be necessary in each instance to make up the difference between the contributions of the employee to the annuity fixed in his case. The greater the salary of the employee and the larger the amount of his contribution the less the Government contribution, and the less the man is able to contribute by the 2½ per cent from his small pay the greater the Government contribution. So it is not simply a gratuity based on the length of service to the Government on the part of the employee, nor is it an insurance bought and paid for, but a combination of the two systems.

Now, consequently, that being the theory and that being the intent of the Government in enacting the law, there is no reason for retiring a person, no matter how long his service to the Government, who has not actually reached those years when it is deemed that his services are no longer efficient and valuable to the Government, and when in an economical administration of the Government he would be ordinarily dismissed. Therefore the argument that, if it is justice to give a proportionate retirement at 60 years we should give him a similar retirement annuity when he reaches the age of 50 or 45, has no validity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask that I may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Now, if the employees at the present time and those who have retired had been paying their proportionate part of the contribution through all the years of their service from the time they entered, there might be some reason in further liberalizing this emergency act than what the committee reported and there might be some reason for fixing 55 or 57 instead of 60 years. But until all those who were in the Government service previous to the enactment of the retirement law have been retired, the Government bears a much greater proportion of the expense of retirement than the normal proportion which the Government will pay after the retirement system has continued so long that each employee from the time he entered the service will have been making the 2½ per cent contribution. Any extension of this system at the present time increases not only the normal cost to the Government, but increases very largely what is known as the accrued cost to the Government, as the Government has to make up that which in the past the employees have not contributed, and for that reason at the present time the liberalizing of the retirement law is doubly and trebly expensive to the Government. It is for that reason that this committee, which is friendly to the system and which initiated the system and passed it in this House, has reported this bill fixing the age at 60, and the reason for fixing that age is this: This bill is an emergency measure to take care principally of those two or three hundred employees who recently have been discharged from the navy yards through a reduction in force. These men have not contributed appreciably to any retirement annuity, because they only started to contribute on August 20, 1920, and these people are mechanics. Mechanics are entitled to retire at the age of 65. Now, when a man has been 15, 20, 25, or 30 years in the Government service and has actually reached 60, 61, or 62 years of age and is within sight of the 65-year limit, it is deemed that it is just and reasonable and fair, in view of the unusual circumstances that caused this unexpected reduction of force of mechanics in the navy yards and possibly arsenals, that this bill be reported and that exception in their behalf be made and allow them a proportion of their annuity which they would receive had they continued in the service until they were 65, scaled down annually in proportion to the number of years they lack of 65 years of age.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEHLBACH. In just a moment. In that way the cost of the annuity to the Government will not be greater than the annuity would have been had they continued in the service and reached the retirement age.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman if the man who reaches the age of 50 years, receiving the same salary as the man who reaches the age of 60 years, paid the same proportion of money into the fund in these two cases?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Certainly he has paid the same amount of money into the Government, but, inasmuch as the amount of the annuity the Government contributes to him when he reaches the retirement age is not proportional with his contribution, that argument has no force. They pay these people whatever is necessary to make up retirement annuity, because they have reached the age where they can no longer labor. If you say the same reason applies to a bill which says that if a man is within two or three years of the age at which there is a presumption he is no longer able to labor he should be given consideration as to a bill that considers a man who is still capable of 15 years of labor, I can not follow the gentleman's argument.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That depends on his health.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Can the gentleman answer a question in that time?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then I ask that the gentleman be given three minutes so that he can answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New Jersey be extended three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask a question for information. You said there would be two or three hundred who would come under this 60-year age limit. How many would come under the 50-year age limit?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not know; but undoubtedly a very increased number, and it would be a very material increase not only as to the number of employees but as to the years throughout which you would have to pay them the annuity. To a man of 65 years of age you might have to pay the annuity for 10 or 15 years and to a man of 50 for 25 or 30 years, and you would have two or three times the number to pay it to. You do not know what you are doing when you are opposing the amendment which the committee is presenting here to-day. People think that because there happens to be a few million dollars of surplus in the retirement fund it must be spent immediately. Every penny of that belongs to an employee, who gets it in refund or in annuity; and every penny the Government is using out of that fund the Government has to put back with 4 per cent compound interest. The ordinary normal cost of retirement would be $4,000,000 a year. But the accrued cost increases that $10,000,000, and you are increasing that by liberalizing the law by this bill, which, however, is a proper step and a fair measure to take care of an emergency.

Mr. BURKE. What is the reason for asking for it?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not know, except that the money is in the Treasury.

Mr. BURKE. Is it not on account of the fact that a great number of them that are being let out of the service have reached the age of 50 years?

Mr. LEHLBACH. But we have reached those who have been let out of the service and have reached the age of 60 years.

Mr. BURKE. In what way?

Mr. LEHLBACH. By the lowering of the age limit in such cases to 60 years.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER to the committee amendment: Page 1, line 7, after the word "employee," strike out the word "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "fifty-five."

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey, the chairman of this committee, has stated that an emergency required the passage of this bill. I think that he covered the ground very fully, but the trouble with the committee amendment, striking out the word "fifty" in the original bill and inserting in place thereof the word "sixty," is that it will take care of comparatively few cases. The 300 cases to which he refers, and in regard to which data was given to the committee, are based on the number of employees who would be affected by this bill who are 55 years of age and over. Now, personally, I believe in the bill as it stands, and am opposed to the committee amendment; but if any amendment is to be made, if the bill is to have any effect at all and meet the emergency of these 300 men that are spoken of, and that the chairman of the committee says he wants to take care of, then the age limit should be made "fifty-five," according to my amendment, instead of "sixty."

Now, this emergency, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, is this: A lot of these old employees of the Government have been discharged unexpectedly because of the disarmament program, and as the bill provides, through no fault of their own; and a good many of them have been discharged just before they would have reached the retirement age. Some of them have been in the service of the Government 25 or 30 years, and it has not been a humane thing for the Government of the United States to do, and it is not a thing that any enlightened private corporation in this day and generation would do.

In closing, I want simply to repeat that if the committee amendment is adopted it will take care of a very few cases, but the 300 cases that have been referred to will only be taken care of by the amendment to the amendment which I have offered, and which I trust will be adopted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the bill seems to be based upon the idea that if the Government reduces its force any place it must grant to the persons discharged an annuity for life. Well, for instance, here is the Shipping Board, which directly or indirectly has a very large force of employees. We hope—at least I do—that their services with the Government will be ended before many years go by. I do not understand that we are under any obligation, because one of them has worked for the Government, to provide to pay him a compensation or salary for every month as long as he lives. The Government takes on men and it discharges them, and it is a novel idea to me that because the Government reduces its force it has got to assume that a man discharged is incompetent to earn a living, and therefore the Government should take care of him the rest of his life. If such a proposition as that had been presented to the House when the original retirement bill was passed, I doubt whether it would have received much encouragement.

Now, I can appreciate the fact that the Government may be lenient to those who have almost reached the age of retirement after years of service. But gentlemen want to run it back; and if they want it back from 60 years to 50 years of age they might as well say 40 years or 30 years, and set down the established principle that if a man once gets in the employ of the Government for a few days and is fired because they do not need his services, he has a right to receive pay from the Government as long as he lives. Now, that might be very popular in the House if it could be applied to the House itself [laughter], but nobody proposes to try it here. I do not see why we should establish the principle that the Government is bound to maintain a man for life because he once got into the Government service.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. DALLINGER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks for a division.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, what was the vote on?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that it was upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] to the committee amendment.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER to the committee amendment: On page 1, line 7, strike out the word "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 54.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "employee," strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 20.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "service," insert "through no delinquency on his part."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That any employee coming within the provisions of section 1 of this act shall have the right to apply for an immediate annuity in lieu of deferred annuity at the age of retirement and, if otherwise entitled, such immediate annuity shall be granted under the following conditions:

If the employee is included in class A of section 2 of the act of May 22, 1920, the immediate annuity in the case of those eligible for retirement at 70 years of age shall equal the annuity payable upon reaching retirement age less seven two-hundred-and-fortieths of such annuity for each year such employee is under the retirement age; in the case of those eligible for retirement at 65 years of age the amount to be deducted shall be seven one-hundred-and-eightieths of such annuity for each year; in the case of those eligible for retirement at 62 years of age the amount to be deducted shall be seven one-hundred-and-forty-fourths of such annuity for each year.

If the employee is included in class B, the amount to be deducted for each year shall be nineteen six-hundred-and-forty-eighths, nineteen four-hundred-and-eighty-sixths, or ninety-five one-thousand-nine-hundred-and-forty-fourths, respectively, of the full annuity.

If the employee is included in class C, the amount to be deducted for each year shall be seventeen five-hundred-and-seventy-sixths, seventeen four-hundred-and-thirty-seconds, or eighty-five one-thousand-seven-hundred-and-twenty-eighths, respectively, of the full annuity.

If the employee is included in class D, the amount to be deducted for each year shall be five one-hundred-and-sixty-eighths, five one-hundred-and-twenty-sixths, or twenty-five five-hundred-and-fourths, respectively, of the full annuity.

If the employee is included in class E, the amount to be deducted for each year shall be thirteen four-hundred-and-thirty-seconds, thirteen three-hundred-and-twenty-fourths, or sixty-five one-thousand-two-hundred-and-ninety-sixths, respectively, of the full annuity.

If the employee is included in class F, the amount to be deducted for each year shall be eleven three-hundred-and-sixtieths, eleven two-hundred-and-seventieths, or eleven two-hundred-and-sixteenths, respectively, of the full annuity.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment to perfect the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. FAIRFIELD: Strike out, on page 2, lines 18 to 25; on page 3, lines 1 to 25; and on page 4, lines 1 and 2, and insert the following:

"The immediate annuity for the miscellaneous employee shall be the annuity that would be granted him were he 70 years old, multiplied by the decimal 0.951945 raised to a power the exponent of which is the number of years which his age then is less than 70.

"For mechanics, letter carriers, etc., it shall be the annuity that would be granted him were he of full retirement age less seven-ninetieths of such annuity for each year between his age and 65 years.

"For railway mail clerks it shall be the annuity that would be granted him were he of full retirement age less seven thirty-sixths of such annuity for each year between his age and 62 years.

"For the purpose of computing annuities as provided in this section fractional parts of a year in respect to the age of the applicant shall be disregarded."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That this act shall include former employees coming within the provisions of the act of May 22, 1920, who have been separated from the service subsequent to August 21, 1920, under the conditions defined in section 1 hereof: Provided, That in the case of an employee who has withdrawn from the "civil service retirement and disability fund" his deductions under the provisions of section 11 of the act of May 22, 1920, such employee shall be required to return the amount so withdrawn with interest compounded at the rate of 4 per cent per annum before he shall be entitled to the benefits of this act.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, there is a committee amendment to section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 6, strike out the figures "21" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "20."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11212) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was ordered by the rule. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the committee amendment to section 1, line 7, striking out "50" and inserting "60."

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, those amendments will be considered in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "employee," strike out "50" and insert "60."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 22.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on the vote just had that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is apparent that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the amendment will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 186, nays 66, answered "present" 1, not voting 177, as follows:

YEAS—186.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. Cramton with Mr. Carter.

Mr. Knutson with Mr. Goldsborough.

Mr. Watson with Mr. Sears.

Mr. Mondell with Mr. Lee of Georgia.

Mr. Bland of Indiana with Mr. Pou.

Mr. Longworth with Mr. Mansfield.

Mr. Edmonds with Mr. Jacoway.

Mr. Classon with Mr. Wingo.

Mr. Dunn with Mr. Park of Georgia.

Mr. Kelley of Michigan with Mr. O'Brien.

Mr. Kinkaid with Mr. Larsen of Georgia.

Mr. Patterson of Missouri with Mr. Martin.

Mr. Slemp with Mr. Johnson of Kentucky.

Mr. Tilson with Mr. Taylor of Colorado.

Mr. Ward of New York with Mr. Harrison.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea," but have a general pair with the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. CARTER, and desire to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The amendment is agreed to. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and seventeen Members present, a quorum. The bill is passed.

On motion of Mr. FAIRFIELD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FISCAL AFFAIRS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. A day or two ago the Chair appointed the members of a commission to investigate the fiscal affairs of the District. It seems that the President had not then signed the bill, so the Chair reappoints the members of that commission—Mr. EVANS, Mr. HARDY of Colorado, and Mr. WRIGHT.

AMENDMENT TO INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 394; Report No. 1164.

Resolved, That it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 848) entitled "An act to amend section 22 of the act entitled an act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, equally divided between those for and against, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of such consideration the bill shall be reported to the House and the previous question considered as ordered on the bill and any amendments thereto to final disposition without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution, if adopted, provides for the consideration of S. 848, which is known as the interchangeable mileage bill. It is thought that the rights of the railroads are fully protected by the provisions of the bill. There is a general demand all over the country for the consideration of this bill at the present time, and therefore we have presented the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee 10 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And I yield that time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, again "the bunk Congress" unlimbers. Again a "bunk" bill. Again a pretense of doing something and yet doing nothing. Again, for cheap partisan purposes, a concession to a group demand.

The commercial travelers, like everybody else who has any sense, know that railroad passenger fares are entirely too high and that we ought to have a reduction; that the fares are even too high for the interests of the railroads themselves, as well as the people and business of the country. They felt that it would be impossible to get a reduction of fares for everybody and therefore conceived the idea that they would go out and get cheaper fares for themselves. They organized their propaganda and began activities along that line. They demanded a universal interchangeable mileage book at a price of 2½ cents per mile, or whatever other rate they could get, just so that it was a substantial reduction below what we are now required to pay, the minimum of which is 3.6 cents per mile, and from that ranges up to 10 cents per mile.

The bill to meet the demands of this militant group of commercial travelers was introduced in the Senate and was there passed, after the Senate had materially changed it and cut the heart of it. Then the bill came to the House and our Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce proceeded to emasculate it and remove its vital organs. But, having changed the bill so that it came to mean nothing whatever under the sun, the committee reported the bill. It was regarded as good party politics for the committee to report the bill, and so we have a bill here designed to make the commercial travelers believe that they are going to get lower fares, but which has no such real purpose and can have no such effect. The only result which this bill can possibly have is to turn a few additional votes into the Republican end of the ballot box, provided the commercial travelers do not find before the next election what has been done to them. If they do find them out in time, it will turn some votes to the other end of the ballot box, because the drummers of this country are honest, and they despise pretense, sham, and hypocrisy.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Excuse me for a moment. This bill was intended by the commercial travelers to secure for themselves and for others who may desire to do a good deal of traveling and who have the money to put up a definite reduction in fares. They intended it to secure such reduction by means of a universal interchangeable mileage book.

I suppose the committee thought the commercial travelers were easy to fool, for they amended the bill by inserting the language "or scrip coupon tickets" after the mileage-book phrase. This was a complete change in the purpose of the bill, for a scrip coupon ticket is as much like a mileage book as a Kentucky saddle horse is like a spotted bull. They have no relation to each other. The mileage book is composed of units each of which is good for a mile travel. A scrip coupon ticket is composed of units to be used in place of money to purchase tickets.

Note, now, that there is no requirement that this coupon ticket shall be sold at a discount. The requirement is merely that it shall be issued "at a just and reasonable price." This language would lead uninformed people to think that it was intended to sell the coupon ticket at a discount; that a just and reasonable price for a coupon book would be less than the regular price for a ticket. But the fact is, and members of the committee know it—whether they will tell you so or not it is true, and I challenge them to deny it—that the only evidence offered before our committee showed that these coupon tickets produced no economy or saving to the railroads and can not be sold at any discount.

Therefore, if the Interstate Commerce Commission does exactly what this bill instructs them to do they will issue the coupon tickets at an increased price over the regular tickets. Instead of the commercial travelers being able to buy a coupon ticket at a discount, they will have to give a premium, because such tickets work certain losses to the railroads and they can not afford to put them out at the same price. This was all the evidence before the committee. Now, let any member of the committee deny that if he dare.

They asked for bread and we have given a stone. We have brought forth a bill pretending we are going to give the commercial travelers lower fares, and yet if they go ahead and buy a coupon ticket instead of traveling at regular fare they will have to pay a premium.

Now, that is not all that the committee put in. The amended bill provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission may, in its discretion, exempt from the provisions of this bill any carrier "where the particular circumstances shown to the commission shall justify such exemption to be made." They may exempt any carrier they want to. That means that the very purpose that the drummers had in mind, which was that they could get a book or a ticket which would be good on any railroad, is wholly defeated. It means that whenever you get into a class of railroads that charge above 3.6 cents a mile the books will be of no value, because that road has been exempted.

Now, this bill is brought forward on the pretense and under the guise that it will make a reduction in fares to people who are able to buy transportation at wholesale. If it meant any such thing, if it really meant that, no honest man could afford to vote for it, because no honest man can afford to vote to give commercial travelers or anybody else something at the expense of the general public.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has decided that railroad fares are as low as they can be made so as to yield the lawful return. If you give any group the benefit of lower fares, you have got to make up the loss out of the general public. In the dearly beloved Esch-Cummins bill we have adopted the principle that the Government will see to it that the railroads are allowed to charge such rates and fares as will cover the cost of the service they render and to provide a 5½ per cent profit on top of that. We have established that as the policy of this country. Out of whom are they going to get this cost of service and the profit—this Esch-Cummins return? They have to get it out of somebody. If Congress gives to any group a lower rate than will yield that, then the deficit has got to be made up by overcharging the general public.

I ask the committee whether it is their genuine purpose to give commercial travelers fares which are less than they reasonably and rightfully ought to pay, with the intent to make up what the railroads may lose on carrying commercial travelers out of the general public of this country?

I am in a funny quandary. If this bill meant what its sponsors want it to mean and what the committee are pretending that it means—that is, that purchasers of mileage books and coupon tickets shall ride the trains at the expense of the general public—of course I could not vote for it. On the other hand, if it means that all such persons are to pay their own way, which, if the evidence before the committee is to be believed, will be as much or more than the general public will pay, there can be no objection to passing the bill. The thing that sticks me is I do not like to be a party to perpetrating a fraud on the commercial travelers or anybody else.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, before the authority was given to the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate rates, there had been issued by some roads an interchangeable mileage book with limitations. That has always been regarded not only a great convenience to the public but a possible business advantage. After the authority was given to this commission the railroads discontinued the practice upon the claim, in defense against the wish or demand for a continuance of such issuance, that they had not the authority to do it.

I do not see any class legislation in this bill. Of course, it is limited to the people who travel; it is not extended to the people who do not travel. That does not make it class legislation. It is not limited to any particular class who travel. Anyone who has the price to travel may have the advantage of this provision of law. Therefore I can not understand the charge that it is class legislation.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I can not yield. Second, it does not undertake to say what the rates shall be. This proposed law does not put them up or put them down, but it leaves the power of fixing a reasonable rate with the commission, which now has that power. All there is in this measure is that it gives a convenience to the traveling public upon a business basis. It is a great inconvenience to one to have to stand before a window and wait his turn to buy a ticket when he is going from one train to another. If he could have that ticket purchased at wholesale without that inconvenience it would be a great advantage, and anyone who travels must know that.

I do not understand the source of the objection to serving the public in making possible this convenience, because it does no harm either to the public or to the patrons or to the railroads. I understand that the law is so drafted as to protect the railroads. I do not see how the railroads are interfered with in their property rights, since there is no decree, but simply permission to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I do not see the basis of the charge that there is particular advantage to anyone or to any particular class over another. The rights of the public, which are primary in legislation, are conserved, the convenience of the traveling public is respected, and the rights of the railroads are regarded. For these reasons I voted for the rule to make this a special order, and I shall vote for the bill, not as a new venture, but rather an expansion of a practice years ago.

Mr. Speaker, every Member of this body recalls the time when the issuance of mileage books for the convenience of the traveling public was a practice pursued by most of the railroads before the Government inaugurated its policy of Government regulation. It was found to be of great service to the traveler and no loss to the company issuing it and the practice met with wide approval.

An interchangeable book was issued limited to specified roads. While this plan was designed to favor the traveling public, its restrictions for the protection of the issuing company proved somewhat burdensome. During the war the Government adopted a form of interchangeable ticket, common terminals, and consolidated ticket offices. This effort to operate the various roads as a complete system, so far as the traveler was concerned, had some distinctive advantages.

There has always been a genuine demand for an interchangeable mileage privilege. Past practices prove it is workable, and there can be no doubt of its great convenience to the man whose chief activity is on the road. Railroad management has generally considered the convenience of the traveling public and its good will as valuable assets in transportation. Much thought and effort have been exerted along these lines. The mileage book avoids the necessity of the congested ticket-office window and the loss of time waiting in line to purchase the ticket. When made interchangeable its convenience is multiplied.

The charge that it is favoritism in legislation is without force. It is a principle of business universally followed by all responsible concerns to give advantages to induce the larger sales for cash payments.

This recognition is due the commercial traveler. Here is a class of our business life which much of the time live away from home, constantly en route, whose chief outlay is to the transportation companies. His success is not confined to his home, but it represents in a most substantial way the income of the transportation lines, since the goods for which his contracts stand are transported over the railroads. His success will be reflected in the receipts of the road, not only in the actual outlay for his mileage but in freight shipped in accordance with the contracts secured. Here is an army of business boosters on the go. Taken as a whole they cover the entire Nation, if not a good portion of the world, touching every center, big or small, where business is carried on.

As purveyors of good cheer in business they can not be surpassed if conditions will permit at all, since no pessimist will either make a sale or be kept on the road by any responsible business firm. As promoters of better business morals the traveling salesman of to-day is perhaps the most influential agency for more conscience in trade than any other group of citizens connected with it.

As was said by President Harding recently, "If the commerce of America were always conscientious, there never would be a single excuse for government in American business." He was here commenting on the general complaint with which we all have great sympathy of too much government interference in business.

No one can doubt the tremendous advance in business ethics in our own country. No one will deny the constantly growing human element in all business, especially as viewed in some great enterprises like the National Cash Register, of Dayton, the Proctor & Gamble enterprise in Cincinnati, and so forth.

No one can overlook the increasingly high grade of business representatives on the road—the commercial traveler. The time was long ago that this man was commonly called a bum, because of his methods of business. Long ago the smart or sharp methods were abandoned. With better methods came a better type of representative. To-day the commercial traveler stands out as not only a good business representative, but a well-informed citizen and a genuine influence for wholesomeness within the circle in which he moves. All these have long ago been recognized as valuable items in business success.

While this proposal is a convenience to a class of business representatives, it will be in the interest of the public, and, as I see it, not detrimental to the railroads; it will be more helpful than hurtful to enterprise in the end and will prove a business asset. I see no legitimate reason from any standpoint to oppose this measure. I gladly support this rule making it in order for consideration and will as freely vote for its final passage.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 848) to amend section 22 of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the rule general debate is limited to one hour, and it is to be divided equally between those for and those against the bill. No one having appeared against the bill who desires to control any time, would it be in order now to make an agreement in respect to a division of time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be in order.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, the duty of taking charge of the bill has automatically fallen to me, and I am pleased that it has. The arrangement which I supposed would be made is that if anyone opposing the bill wants time under the rule that time would be accorded, and the balance of the time would be given to those in favor of the bill. No one has appeared, so far as I know, opposed to the bill demanding time, and by arrangement which I thought I had with my colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I had intended after we get into the Committee of the Whole to yield one-half of my time to him.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 848.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 848, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 22 of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting "(1)" after the section number at the beginning of such section and by adding to the section two new paragraphs, as follows, to wit:

"(2) The commission is directed to require, after notice and hearing, each carrier by rail, subject to this act, to issue at such offices as may be prescribed by the commission joint interchangeable mileage tickets at a just and reasonable rate per mile, good for interstate passenger carriage upon the passenger trains of any and all other carriers by rail subject to this act. Such tickets may be required to be issued for any distance not exceeding 5,000 miles nor less than 1,000 miles. Before making any order requiring the issuance of any such tickets the commission shall make and publish such reasonable rules and regulations for their issuance and use as in its judgment the public interest demands; and especially it shall prescribe whether such tickets are transferable or nontransferable, and if the latter, what identification may be required; and especially also to what baggage privileges the lawful holders of such tickets are entitled.

"(3) Any carrier which, through the act of any agent or employee, willfully refuses to issue or accept any such ticket demanded or presented under the lawful requirements of this act, or willfully refuses to conform to the rules and regulations lawfully made and published by the commission hereunder, or any person who shall willfully offer for carriage any such ticket contrary to the said rules and regulations shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not to exceed $1,000."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, after the figures "22," strike out the words "of the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887," and insert the words "of the interstate commerce act."

Page 1, line 5, after the word "is," strike out the word "hereby."

Page 1, line 7, after the word "paragraphs," strike out the comma and insert the words "to read."

Page 1, line 8, after the word "follows," strike out the comma and words "to wit."

Page 2, line 2, after the word "commission," strike out the word "joint," and after the word "mileage" insert the words "or scrip coupon."

Page 2, line 3, after the word "at," strike out the article "a," and after the word "reasonable" strike out the words "rate per mile" and insert the word "rates."

Page 2, line 4, at the beginning of the line, strike out the word "interstate."

Page 2, line 5, at the beginning of the line, strike out the words "any and," and after the word "all" strike out the word "other." After the word "act" insert the words "the commission may, in its discretion, exempt from the provisions of this amendatory act, either in whole or in part, any carrier where the particular circumstances shown to the commission shall justify such exemption to be made."

Page 2, line 10, after the word "issued," strike out the words "for any distance not exceeding 5,000 miles nor less than 1,000 miles" and insert the words "in such denominations as the commission may prescribe."

Page 3, line 2, at the beginning of the line, insert the words "sale or."

Amend the title.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes of my time to my colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], to follow my own use of time. To those Members present who heard my committee associate [Mr. HUDDLESTON] speak a few moments ago, I desire to say that I shall not undertake to reply to his inquiries or his statements seriatim. We are a happy family in our committee and so I do not wish to say anything that would suggest anything to the contrary. Consequently, I shall not say anything more about his talk, but shall proceed to give the real history of this bill and undertake to tell you what it is all about. If you remember anything that has been said before, you will be able to make a comparison, and if you do not remember, I hope you will pay particular attention to what I have to say.

Those who represent a large portion of the great traveling public known as the commercial travelers are undoubtedly the sponsors for this bill. They took their measure to the Senate of the United States and a bill was introduced and passed in that body. That bill came to us in the form indicated in this draft, Union Calendar 406, which is printed in ordinary type, and which is amended as indicated by the italics. Anyone can readily see in just what form it came to our committee.

We had hearings during a number of days, very interesting hearings. A great many representatives of the travelers' organizations came and stated their case. We at that time were in the midst of hearings on broader propositions affecting the transportation act, 1920. It duly occurred to the committee that we had better develop the general problem a little further with a view of gaining more information that might bear on this particular mileage book bill and so be able, maybe, to arrive at a better final judgment. We therefore postponed further hearings on this bill for a while and later on took them up again and completed them. The bill which came to us from the Senate was merely a bill to direct the Interstate Commerce Commission after a careful inquiry, after notice and hearing, to require each rail carrier coming under the interstate commerce act to issue mileage books under such regulations and conditions as the commission might see fit to establish. That is all there was to the bill.

The Senate never intended to express any opinion on the mile price of mileage or on what might have been the original base cost of mileage or to do anything other than to give direction to the Interstate Commerce Commission to issue mileage books under regulations, and so forth. That is all any proponent of the bill asked the Senate to do. The Senate did it promptly and sent the bill to us, and after hearings we came to the conclusion that the bill in its intent might have been all right, but in its form was not sufficiently comprehensive to give the traveling public, whether commercial travelers buying transportation by wholesale or others, a likely chance to buy a mileage book, so called, or a scrip book. We cast about to see what we could do for commercial travelers and those who might buy these books. The bill gives the Interstate Commerce Commission all the authority that the Senate provided be given. It gives them more also in two particulars. If you chance to have a copy of the report on this bill you will find a statement is made that the principal changes are twofold. One of the two provisions is made for the issuance of a scrip coupon book. The second is a provision for the exemption of certain rail carriers in case the Interstate Commerce Commission shall see fit to authorize the issuance of a mileage more or less in general but not universal, as applied to rail carriers. So our attention naturally and automatically came to the consideration of those two forms of books, the mileage so called on the one hand——

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. WINSLOW. I would like to finish the analysis.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I would like to ask if the general public could not buy these books?

Mr. WINSLOW. Anybody. I would like to finish my analysis of this bill, and then I will yield——

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state there is a misapprehension on this side that it was confined to a certain class of travelers.

Mr. WINSLOW. It is not; the gentleman is quite right in pressing his inquiry. While this point is up let me repeat clearly what the traveling man understands. This is not a bill for a class, any class at all, but it is a bill for anybody who has the price and the desire to buy tickets at wholesale in such quantities as may be properly determined after notice and hearing by the Interstate Commerce Commission, in behalf of the buyers of wholesale transportation. Does that clear the matter? [Applause.]

Mr. HUDSPETH. It does.

Mr. WINSLOW. I want to say for the commercial travelers that they never held out that we should pass legislation which ultimately might favor them in preference to anybody else, but on the contrary they were very positive in their statements at the outset that the provision should be general for all who might desire to buy a mileage book. Now, bear in mind, gentlemen, that there are two things to consider particularly. One is the scrip coupon which in the art of transportation is a book with a lot of little pieces of scrip detachable in book form, each one of the scrip representing a definite money value without any connection with mileage whatever, just money value. Say we had 100 on a page, each one worth 5 cents, there would be $5 worth of coupons, transportation coupons in one form or another as the commission might determine regulations. The other one is in a mileage book. That is like the book of scrip except each little coupon, whether for use either on the train or for exchange at the ticket window, is good for a mile of travel; whether that mile shall cost 1 or 20 cents.

The scrip coupon is good only for the value of each particular scrip. It is important to get the differentiation in your mind to understand this bill, and once you have that, you have the whole thing.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, represented by our friend of a year or two ago, the Hon. John J. Esch, stated to the committee that they had misgivings as to their rights to order the issue of mileage book as provided by the Senate bill. That created a doubt in our minds. Various members of our committee entertained like opinions in respect of that and other legal considerations. Moreover, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has told you, the fares which are allowed to be charged by railroads by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has the right to establish fares, run, usually speaking, from 3.6 cents a mile up to 6 cents.

The committee realized right away that it was impossible to issue a mileage book in justice to all the rail carriers of the country, with any definite value or charge for a mileage coupon. For instance, I take one end and go onto a road where the fare is 3.6 cents. If I had bought that coupon book on the base cost of 3.6, I could use it there, good for a mile, but if I took the same book and went on a connecting line, where the fare was 4½ cents, what would it mean? It would mean that every conductor would have to have a bookkeeper, an auditor, and a cashier, perhaps, in order to figure up what those fares would be from place to place. It would not be workable or reasonable. So what did we do to meet that situation and still give the commercial traveler every opportunity he has under the Senate bill? We made the provision that the Interstate Commerce Commission should have authority to direct the issue of a mileage book which would be usable equitably on a vast majority of the railroads which might be charging a definite and uniform mileage; but we provided for allowing the Interstate Commerce Commission to exempt a minority of the roads whose fares would be different, the idea being if they saw fit, in their wisdom, after notice and hearing, to direct the issue of a mileage book, they would see this book is good on all the railroads, each coupon for a mile, except on those eliminated. In that case you would not get a universal, interchangeable mileage book; but we have left the bill in such form that the commission, in its wisdom and in accordance with the conditions at the time they may legislate, can give the authority to direct the issue of generally interchangeable, universal mileage books and can exempt certain roads but make the coupons good on the balance of the roads of the country. So much for that.

The other one is this: Failing to find a way in which wisely to bring about the issue of a mileage book, we have provided for the issuance of a scrip book, if the commission wants to direct the issue of such in the interest and convenience of travel. In other words, the coupon has a definite value, and the commission is given authority to make rules and regulations. Under this bill the commission may establish a definite rate per mile or it may establish a definite value for scrip, or it may indicate a discount from one or the other if they choose and think it a wise thing to do.

There has been but one objection to scrip, however, and that is the scalper, and in order to forestall that sort of thing, which was a great nuisance in the old days of the joint mileage books, so called, on certain railroads, we provided an amendment in addition to the provisions of the Senate bill, which amendment provided a fine not to exceed $1,000 for anyone who shall willfully offer for sale or carriage any such coupon contrary to the commission's rules and regulations. In that way we can swoop down on the scalper if he offers any ticket for sale which he might get at a discount and then turn them for single tickets.

I believe I have covered the subject pretty generally. If not, my willing and qualified associates will take the matter up later on.

Mr. LAYTON. In accordance with the courtesy which the gentleman has said he would extend to me, I have two or three questions I would like to have answered for information.

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes, indeed.

Mr. LAYTON. I am very much in favor personally of this bill, as any traveler would be, but the question I want to ask is as follows: Were the railroads themselves consulted in the preparation of this bill?

Mr. WINSLOW. Those representing the class A railroads were present and also representatives of the so-called short lines.

Mr. LAYTON. It pretty nearly covered all I wanted to ask, but I will ask another question. The rates are fixed by law?

Mr. WINSLOW. By the Interstate Commerce Commission; that is the reason for putting the determination as to this subject in the hands of this rate-making power.

Mr. LAYTON. I understand that. Now, did the railroad attorneys or the railroads of the country agree to this, taking into consideration the absolute cost of administration?

Mr. WINSLOW. No; the railroad companies did not feel that they ought to attempt to put mileage out at a discount or the scrip out at a discount. But they were not very insistent and did not offer any final objection, and so far as I remember were willing to have the matter referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission in view of the fact that there would be notice and hearing.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman recognizes, of course, in the administration of this bill, if it is passed and becomes a law, that it will involve an additional administrative expense upon the railroads?

Mr. WINSLOW. That is quite so, but the objection, on the other hand, is that the increased amount of sales may offset that as they generally offset a wholesale proposition in any other line of commercial transaction.

Mr. CURRY. I notice on page 2, line 4, of the original bill you strike out the word "interstate" by a committee amendment. What authority has Congress to legislate for intrastate rates and why was the word "interstate" stricken out?

Mr. WINSLOW. For the reason that this bill covers only such railroads as are under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CURRY. Under the reading of this bill it does cover other lines.

Mr. WINSLOW. No; it covers only those which come under the transportation act, 1920.

Mr. CURRY. Straight mileage or scrip coupon books at just and reasonable rates could have passenger rates granted upon passenger trains?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. CURRY. Now you strike out "interstate," and of course the intrastate rates are subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission in interstate traffic, but in the State of New York or in the State of California or the State of Pennsylvania what authority has the Congress to legislate or give authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission to make local rates and compel them to take within the State this mileage book?

Mr. WINSLOW. I do not understand that that comes under this provision of the bill. The gentleman is talking about an interstate carrier?

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. They have the privilege of establishing the rates at which they will carry them on a coupon book. What difference whether under a coupon book or without it?

Mr. CURRY. They have not the authority to fix intrastate rates?

Mr. WINSLOW. No; not unless they become a part of an interstate system.

Mr. CURRY. I do not think Congress has the authority.

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes; I think it has. We would not have brought out the bill otherwise.

Mr. CURRY. I thought there might be a difference of opinion in the committee upon that.

Mr. WINSLOW. I think I have stated it correctly, but there will be other members of the committee who will speak, most of whom are lawyers. I wish the gentleman would ask them.

Mr. CURRY. I thought the gentleman could answer that.

Mr. WINSLOW. I am not running away from the answer. There may be a detail of that sort which quite likely one of the lawyer members of the committee can answer and which it may be I am not able to answer.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. The question has just been raised about the additional expense entailed upon the railroads by issuing such tickets or scrip.

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Would it not be the case that if this were availed of to a large extent, thus entailing additional work, the large amount of money thus deposited with the railroads would compensate for that additional expense?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes. That is one of the great claims of the proponents of the bill.

If now nobody desires to ask any questions I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall not take up more than 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, the necessitiy of this bill grows out of the fact that since the railroads have been returned to their owners they have to a large extent ceased to issue mileage books, as they issued them prior to the time the Government took them over.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman knows the extent to which the roads have been returned back to their owners?

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, I am not going to go into a discussion of that. The Government certainly does not have charge of them.

Prior to the war and prior to the time when the Government took the railroads over everybody understood that practically all of them issued mileage books. Some of those books were interchangeable for mileage over certain roads designated in the books and others were limited to passage over the road issuing the book. Of course, when the Government took the roads over they ceased any longer to issue these books, and when the roads were turned back to their owners under the transportation act the roads did not resume the custom of issuing these mileage books for the convenience of the traveling public. Prior to the war, when these books were issued by the roads, they were issued at a reduction in the rate below the regular passenger fare. Roads that had a 3-cent regular rate issued these books, I think, at 2½ cents per mile. Some of them, I think, issued them at a rate as low as 2 cents. When the roads were taken back by the owners it was not long until the public began to notice that it was impossible to purchase these mileage books, and even where they were purchased they were not purchased with any reduction in the rate below the regular passenger fare and most of them were not interchangeable.

I think it is correct to say that very few of the roads have resumed issuing these mileage books, and still fewer of them have issued them interchangeably for use on other roads than their own. Very naturally, as a matter of convenience and economy, there began to be developed a sentiment in favor of the resumption of the practice of issuing these mileage books, and as the roads refused to do it and the Interstate Commerce Commission claimed it had no authority to compel them to do it, a request was made of Congress to pass a law that would require the roads to issue these books. Most of the bills introduced provided for a reduction of the rate below the regular passenger rate. I myself introduced a bill on the subject which provided for a reduction below the regular passenger fare; but when the Senate passed the bill some question was raised about the constitutionality of a measure which provided that Congress should stipulate that these books should be issued at less than the regular passenger rate, on the ground that Congress was thereby legislating the rate for passenger traffic in the United States. It might be argued in favor of the constitutionality of that provision that Congress, when it fixed the so-called 6 per cent guaranty, attempted to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix rates high enough to aggregate a return of 6 per cent. But be that as it may, the Senate refused to enact a law providing for any definite reduction below the particular fare or figure at the time and left that matter entirely in the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Now, it is true, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] has explained, that this bill is not drawn in behalf of any class or any group. It is true that the traveling men of the country, whose business is on the railroads, and who, of course, appreciate the convenience of a mileage book and also the convenience of economy of a slight reduction from the regular rate where they use these books, have urged this legislation. But these books will be available to the general public on equal terms. The traveling men will appreciate that economy, but in view of the difficulties that have arisen, both in the Senate and in our committee upon that point, the bill has been reported so far as the committee is concerned in the shape in which it passed the Senate, leaving it entirely to the Interstate Commerce Commission to say what a reasonable rate shall be, and providing that they shall have the power to provide a rate after hearing all the parties concerned. And that is what the men who appeared before our committee asked for, namely, a chance to go before the Interstate Commerce Commission and present their case and an opportunity whereby they could take their chances with the commission to secure a reduction in the rate below the regular rate for the issue of mileage books.

While it is true that this bill has not been drawn in behalf of any class or any particular group, yet I may say that one particular group has been perhaps more prominent in asking for the passage of this bill than others, because their business is largely on the railroads, and they appreciate more keenly the disadvantage of not having the benefit of mileage books.

But prior to the taking over of the railroads during the war these mileage tickets were accessible to everybody who had the price to pay for them, and thousands of passengers who never were numbered among what we call traveling salesmen availed themselves of the opportunity to buy these mileage books at the wholesale rates, not only as a matter of economy but as a matter of convenience.

Mr. BUTLER. Members of Congress availed themselves of that privilege.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, and so did many thousands of others.

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. UPSHAW. Inasmuch as it is not regarded as competent for Congress to issue a mandate to the Interstate Commerce Commission for reductions, does not the gentleman believe, in view of the recent slashing and more than one slashing of the price of labor on the railroads, that the general price of transportation ought to be reduced?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I think it is true that everybody in this country has been demanding that there should be a reduction not only in freight rates but in passenger rates also. [Applause.] The Interstate Commerce Commission have met that demand in a very slight degree in so far as freight rates are concerned, but have met it in no respect as far as passenger fares are concerned. If it is to be the policy of the railroads and of the Railroad Labor Board, which is now performing functions under the transportation act, to reduce the wages of the laboring men who do the work upon the railroads, it certainly is not inconsistent to expect that if the laboring men on the railroads shall bear the entire burden of that reduction that there ought to be some benefit to the public in some way and not simply to the railroads. Of course, I am not discussing the justice of the reductions which have been made, but if they are to be put into effect, certainly the traveling public and the shipping public ought to have the benefit of whatever reductions are made in the expenses of operating the railroads.

There is one provision here about which I am not very enthusiastic, and that is one of the amendments put on by the committee. I am a little afraid that as it reads the commission may interpret it to mean that they can authorize or direct the roads to issue these coupon books or mileage books, but not both. The intention of the committee was, as I understand, that under that language they might issue either or both, and I think that ought to have been made very clear. Certainly it is not my idea that that amendment ought to restrict the commission in the issuing of the one or the other. They ought to be able to issue either or both if they wish. In other words, if they issue a coupon book it is nothing more than a wholesale book representing money and not mileage. You may tear out 25 cents or 50 cents or a dollar, and it will take you so many miles at the rate that is in force on the road. You may take that coupon book into a ticket office and exchange so much scrip for a ticket to a certain destination.

Some of the roads, I think, accept the scrip in paymont of fares and some of them require the passenger to take the book into a ticket office and exchange so many coupons for a ticket to a certain place. That results in very little convenience to the traveler, so far as that is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will take two minutes more. I believe if there is any doubt about that in the minds of the committee—and there is doubt in my mind—it ought to be made certain that the Interstate Commerce Commission can require the roads either to issue a coupon book calling for so many miles of travel or a coupon book calling for so much value in transportation, or both, if they see fit, and not restrict them to requiring one or the other.

Mr. Chairman, in view of this situation which has been presented to the committee and to the House I hope this measure will pass, and I hope that when it has been enacted into law the commission will see proper and find it consistent to provide for the issue of these books at a reduced rate below the regular passenger fare.

I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAWES].

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, as a member of the committee that studied this bill and recommends its passage I would not have the impression go out, as indicated by the gentleman from Alabama, that the proponents of this measure do not understand the bill and every portion of it.

I asked the counsel for the Travelers' Association, composed of 600,000 men, whether they understood this bill to mean that rates would be lowered or if, on the contrary, whether the Interstate Commerce Commission could not, if it desired, actually raise the rates. He said that was his understanding. So this bill does but one thing—it provides a forum for the traveling men of the United States where they can be heard in asking for an interchangeable mileage book or interchangeable scrip tickets. This bill provides a place of hearing. If the national rate-making body desires to lower the rate it is for them to say upon full hearing and investigation. They may actually, if they so desire, raise the rates. So the traveling men of America, if the House passes this bill, are not being deceived. They understand exactly what the bill provides for. It is true that the original bill introduced in the Senate had a fixed rate per mile, but in the argument before the committee in the Senate and upon the floor of the Senate the proponents of this bill discovered that could not be done; that Congress could not fix rates for railroads. So when the bill came to the House before our committee, they had abandoned that position. They understand this bill thoroughly; they want it passed; there is no misunderstanding about it, and all it does is to provide a forum, a place of hearing, for the traveling men of America.

Mr JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWES. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I take it that the coupon book is not to be sold to traveling men alone; any man can buy a mileage book?

Mr. HAWES. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. There is nothing in the proposed legislation that would permit the Interstate Commerce Commission by regulation to restrict people who might purchase it, is there?

Mr. HAWES. No, sir.

Mr. WALSH. It would be open to the general public?

Mr. HAWES. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The bill before us authorizes and directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to issue what is known as interchangeable mileage books or scrip coupon tickets at reasonable rates to be good for passenger carriage on all carriers subject to the interstate commerce act, with such exceptions as the Interstate Commerce Commission shall find to be advisable owing to dissimilarity of conditions and circumstances.

Before the war it was customary for groups of railroads to issue what came to be known as interchangeable mileage books. In general their use was confined to the traveling salesman, of whom there are possibly 750,000 in this country. The purchaser bought, say, a 3,000-mile book and paid for it at the time of its purchase. If his trip was 100 miles the conductor upon the presentation of the book tore off 100 miles and returned the book with the rest of the mileage to the traveler. Purchasing in wholesale quantities, so to speak, a discount was obtained below the prevailing rate, and then in addition to this advantage the traveler did not have to waste time purchasing a ticket at every station.

The mileage books were in general use throughout the West, but were not good on all roads. In fact, in accordance with my own observation, they were interchangeable on not to exceed some five or six roads.

The war and the taking over of the roads by the Government ended the issuance of mileage books. After the return of the roads an effort was made to have the railroads reinstate the custom of issuing interchangeable mileage books. The matter was presented to the Interstate Commerce Commission, who questioned their authority to order the roads to do so. This movement was led by the various organizations of commercial travelers and they then presented the matter to Congress. Several bills were introduced in both Houses; some of them called for a universal interchangeable book at a flat rate of so much per mile. It was readily seen that this could not very well be done. In the first place, this would be the direct fixing of a rate by Congress. If this was once commenced there would be no end to it. From a practical standpoint, Congress is not fitted to be a rate-making body. It will be remembered that the previous interchangeable books were not universally interchangeable, but only so in restricted territory where conditions were the same. The present general rate is 3.6 per mile. Some of the short lines charge a higher rate, and in the western mountain country I am informed that the rate sometimes is above 5 cents per mile. Obviously it would not be fair to issue an interchangeable book and have it presented in mountain territory where the rate is 5 cents and the traveler purchased the mileage in the East at, say, 3 cents.

It was then determined to agree upon a bill which would authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to issue the books at reasonable rates under rules and regulations and subject to exceptions. Such a bill passed the Senate, and with several amendments the same bill is now before the House. The principal amendments are these: First, we authorize the commission to issue mileage books or scrip coupon tickets as they may think advisable. The representative of one of the large commercial traveler organizations was of the opinion that the scrip plan was the better one. Such a plan could be made universal. Under the mileage-book plan the purchaser would buy 3,000 miles at so much per mile. Under the scrip plan he would buy so many dollars' worth of transportation at whatever cost per mile the company to whom he presented the scrip would charge. There are some advantages in the scrip plan; there are others in the mileage plan. It is claimed that the scrip method could be more easily used by scalpers. For these reasons the committee thought it better to put the whole proposition up to the commission.

To take care of some roads where, owing to mountainous regions or other circumstances, it would be inequitable to sell interchangeable mileage books good on those roads, we have authorized the commission to exempt certain roads from the operation of the act.

When the bill came from the Senate the mileage book so issued would be "good for interstate passenger carriage" only. This would be of little benefit to the commercial traveler.

Of the great bulk of commercial travelers most of their trips are from town to town, which would be an intrastate carriage. The mileage book would not be valid for such carriage. For example, the ordinary commercial traveler in Minnesota, the Dakotas, and Montana will travel for several weeks before crossing a State line. Some of them have their territory wholly within a State. If the Senate bill becomes a law, Mr. Smith, getting on the train at Minneapolis and going to Fargo, N. Dak., could use his mileage book, and if that book was purchased at a discount his fare to Fargo would be less than the regular fare to the extent of the discount. Mr. Jones, on the other hand, who took the same train and who sat with him during the entire journey, is getting off at Moorhead, just across the river from Fargo. Moorhead is in Minnesota. Jones's mileage book could not be used for his trip. He would have to buy a ticket, and if there was a discount in the interstate business, he would not get the benefit of any discount on his trip, which was purely intrastate. Hence the committee amendment to strike out "interstate."

It will be observed that these books are to be issued at reasonable rates and under such reasonable rules and regulations as the public interest demands. This makes them available to anyone deeming that method advisable and having the necessary funds with which to purchase transportation at wholesale.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] called attention to the authorization and direction to issue "interchangeable mileage or scrip coupon tickets." He inquired as to whether use of the disjunctive "or" would restrict the commission to either mileage books or scrip and not permit them to issue both if in their judgment that should be deemed advisable. It is my own impression—others on the committee I find agree with me—that the language is clear, and that as it now reads the commission would have the authority to direct the issuance of either or both.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. I notice that the bill says the commission shall make and publish such reasonable rules for the issuance and use as in its judgment the public interests demand.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Might not the commission under that language restrict the number of these books that will be issued by any railroad and thereby preclude the general purchase?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It does not seem to me that that would be a reasonable rule or regulation. There must be, of course, some rules and regulations in order to provide for the issuance of the mileage books, but a regulation or rule of that kind would seem to be unreasonable.

Mr. WALSH. They might restrict it to certain times of the year or to certain sections of the country.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Not unless there was a reasonable occasion for making that restriction. I can not conceive of any regulation based on the issuance of mileage books during one portion of the year and not another.

Mr. WALSH. Take a road that has a number of branches and it might restrict the number of books that it might sell to a certain territory.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes. Take, for example, the mountain roads, where the present rate runs as high as 5 cents per mile on certain divisions. That in itself would possibly compel the commission to make a mileage book, as distinguished from a scrip book, not passable upon those divisions of the particular road.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk again reported the bill.

The following committee amendments were severally reported and severally agreed to:

Page 1, line 3, after the figures "22," strike out the words "of the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887," and insert the words "of the interstate commerce act."

Page 1, line 5, after the word "is," strike out the word "hereby."
Page 1, line 7, after the word "paragraphs," strike out the comma and insert the words "to read," and after the word "follows," strike out the comma and the words "to wit."
Page 2, line 2, after the word "commission," strike out the word "joint," and after the word "mileage," insert the words "or scrip coupon."
Page 2, line 3, after the word "at," strike out the article "a," and after the word "reasonable," strike out the words "rate per mile" and insert the word "rates."

The Clerk then reported the following amendment:

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon that committee amendment. The Members seem to be very impatient, and perhaps do not approve of anyone saying anything either for or against this bill. Several are calling for a vote, but I am going to take up just a moment to state my opposition to this particular committee amendment. It may not have any influence upon a single person in the House, but we have been criticized very severely of late for "passing the buck," as it is called, to the Supreme Court, for passing laws which the Supreme Court promptly holds unconstitutional. I hesitate to rise in the House and object to a bill, or any part of a bill, upon the ground that I think it is unconstitutional. When I first came here I used to be very prompt to do so, but the longer I stay here the more I hesitate to object to any bill upon the ground that it is unconstitutional. Such objection seems to be looked upon with amusement and not taken seriously. Nevertheless, I am going to record my view upon this question involved in the committee amendment on line 4, wherein the word "interstate" is stricken out.

This bill, as it came from the Senate, applied only to interstate passenger carriage upon the theory that Congress has no jurisdiction to regulate in the manner provided in this bill purely intrastate passenger rates. That has been my view all along. It was clearly the view of the Senate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is not that objection of the gentleman from Illinois met by the language in lines 4 and 5 "upon the passenger trains of all carriers by rail subject to this act"?

Mr. DENISON. Not at all. We have no jurisdiction, as a matter of course, to regulate any carriers except such as are interstate carriers, but I am assuming that we have not yet reached the point where Congress will claim absolute plenary powers over all intrastate rates, even on interstate carriers.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Let me make this suggestion: You do not need the word "interstate" there in line 4, because in line 5 it is limited to carriers by rail subject to the act, and the only carriers subject to the act are interstate carriers.

Mr. DENISON. Certainly. But Congress can regulate intrastate rates on interstate carriers only to the extent specified in the transportation act.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is there not some authority over intrastate carriers in the Interstate Commerce Commission? They have some authority, so that they are covered by the act, and in some respects intrastate carriers are subject to this act.

Mr. DENISON. I am going to discuss that for a moment. Let me call the attention of the committee to this. Before the passage of the transportation act the Supreme Court held, in what is known as the Shreveport case, that Congress had the right to regulate intrastate rates in certain instances. What were they?

Now, what were they? They were when the intrastate rate caused any "unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons or localities in intrastate commerce on the one hand and interstate commerce on the other hand." That is the substance of the Shreveport decision. Now, in the transportation act we went further than that and added to the control which the Interstate Commerce Commission might exercise over intrastate rates this further provision, that whenever an intrastate rate constituted "an undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate commerce" the Interstate Commerce Commission might then regulate it. Section 13 of the interstate commerce act, as amended by the transportation act, gives the Interstate Commerce Commission this authority. Let me read it:

Whenever in any such investigation the commission, after full hearing, finds that any such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice causes any undue or unreasonable advantage—

Remember, this is intrastate rates, and so forth—causes any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons or localities in intrastate commerce on the one hand and interstate or foreign commerce on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate or foreign commerce—

And so forth. Then the Interstate Commerce Commission may change the rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DENISON. I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that after five minutes debate on this amendment be terminated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is the chairman of the committee assuming the gentleman's argument does not need answering?

Mr. WINSLOW. If the gentleman puts it up to me, I will say so in view of the action of the committee.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENISON. I will yield.

Mr. FESS. I am a holder of one of these exchangeable books and I am going from Dayton to Cincinnati, which is within Ohio. If you strike out "interstate," then you could not use that book?

Mr. DENISON. Not between intrastate points.

Mr. FESS. What value would the book be to me, then, except in crossing the line?

Mr. DENISON. I will answer that by saying to my friend from Ohio that he had better ask the gentlemen who first introduced the bill and had it passed through the Senate and sent to us in that form as to what good it would do. I am trying to present my reason for thinking that it will make it unconstitutional, if we amend the bill by striking out the word "interstate."

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOCH. Is it not a fact that practically every intrastate rate now in effect was as a matter of fact fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and if the thing was unconstitutional the very thing in effect to-day is unconstitutional? Is not that a fact?

Mr. DENISON. I do not think it is a fact.

Mr. HOCH. In Ex parte 74 proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission were not rates fixed upon intrastate rates as well as upon interstate rates, and did not the Wisconsin case state specifically they had that power to fix those rates?

Mr. DENISON. The Wisconsin case simply held that the transportation act was a constitutional or a valid exercise of the power under the commerce clause of the Constitution. That is all the Wisconsin case held. What I am trying to argue is this: That if we pass this bill as the committee has amended it we are going far beyond the power conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission by the transportation act and, I think, beyond the power of Congress under the Constitution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I would like to say one or two things more before my five minutes are up, as the time now has been limited. In other words, to accomplish the purposes of this act we are going far beyond the power conferred upon the commission by the transportation act.

The purpose of this act is to reduce fares to certain classes of persons and under certain conditions. Such a purpose is not in harmony with or included in the provisions of the transportation act for preventing discriminations between persons or localities or an undue burden upon interstate commerce. Now, I think, gentlemen, that this bill goes beyond any power heretofore conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission in any act of Congress, and that it goes beyond our power under the commerce clause of the Constitution. I think that striking out that word "interstate" will render this act invalid if the railroads contest it. I think in the interest of the traveling salesmen, who want this legislation, and all others we would be doing them a favor to put that word back in the act and leave it like the Senate had it. No one interested in this bill asked the committee to make this amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is not the word "interstate" merely descriptive of the sort of transportation that the public is paying for—this passenger traffic going from one State to another?

Mr. DENISON. The act as it passed the Senate and came to us limited the use of these interchangeable mileage books to interstate tickets or carriage, and in that form I think it was valid. But the committee thought it wise to strike out that word "interstate," and I think that will render the act invalid. The railroads may never contest it. But if they do, I think this committee amendment will destroy the validity of the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I would, but I have not any time left. Mr. Chairman, I think there should be interchangeable mileage books issued by all the railroads, and I am willing to authorize the commission to compel the railroads to issue such books if it can be done under any proper exercise of our constitutional powers. I think, however, that by striking out the word "interstate" the committee has used bad judgment and has made this bill unconstitutional, even if it was constitutional in other respects.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, strike out the words "any and," and also strike out the word "other."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "act," insert "The commission may in its discretion exempt from the provisions of this amendatory act either in whole or in part any carrier where the particular circumstances shown to the commission shall justify such exemption to be made."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why that particular amendment was inserted in the bill. It is one of exceeding importance. It would permit the commission to exempt from the provisions of this act, an amendatory act, an entire railroad, in its discretion. Why should it be possible for that commission to exercise discrimination as between railroads in a matter so important as this?

Mr. WINSLOW. The theory is this, that the scale of prices for carrying a passenger a mile vary now under the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission from 3.6 cents per mile, as a minimum, up to 5 cents or 6 cents a mile, and above, I think, in some instances. Now, it might be, if the commission saw fit to get out a mileage book, that they could get out one covering the great majority of the railroads of the country at 3.6 cents per mile, but other railroads could not afford to carry passengers at that price. So, in order to get out a mileage book, in case they saw fit to order the issue of one, we provided that they could indicate the roads upon which the general mileage rate would be acceptable, profitable. As some other roads could not carry at the same rate per mile, we realized there should be a right for the commission to make exemptions. Hence this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "issued," strike out "for any distance not exceeding 5,000 miles nor less than 1,000 miles" and insert in lieu thereof "in such denominations as the commission may prescribe."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, insert before the word "carriage" the words "sale or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 848) to amend section 22 of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. By the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. WINSLOW, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12073. An act to provide additional compensation for certain civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923;

H. J. Res. 344. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to detail four persons paid from the appropriation for the collection of customs; and

H. R. 11393. An act to abolish the office of Superintendent of the Library Building and Grounds and to transfer the duties thereof to the Architect of the Capitol and the Librarian of Congress.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3458. An act to authorize the Niagara River Bridge Co. to reconstruct its present bridge across the Niagara River between the State of New York and the Dominion of Canada, or to remove its present bridge and construct, maintain, and operate a new bridge across the said river.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to the following:

To Mr. CHALMERS, for 10 days, on account of the serious illness of his brother.

To Mr. HAWLEY, for June 30, 1922, on account of public business.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in this House on Thursday, June 22, attacks were made by the gentlemen from Massachusetts, Mr. TINKHAM and Mr. GALLIVAN, upon an organization known as the Anti-Saloon League, and upon Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, the general counsel of the said league.

I have noted in the public press publication of a brief statement in reply issued by Mr. Wheeler the following day at Indianapolis while en route to Kansas City to fill a speaking engagement before the International Sunday School Convention. I have had no request for such action from anyone representing the league, but in view of the fact the original statements have appeared in the RECORD, it appeals to me that this reply should likewise be so published and I accordingly present it here. The statement reads as follows:

The last attacks by Congressmen TINKHAM and GALLIVAN on the Anti-Saloon League and prohibition enforcement are like the others, 100 per cent alcoholic. They are as baseless as the liquor traffic which they defend is lawless. The Anti-Saloon League of America obeys the election laws, and the liquor interests defy them. In order to distract attention from the activities of the outlawed traffic, wet Congressmen cry "Stop thief" and point their accusing finger at the Anti-Saloon League. They are fooling no one but themselves, and the beer and wine brigade who are back of them. These attacks reveal the fact that there is a nation-wide wet effort to defeat Congressman VOLSTEAD, and they are using a fellow wet Republican to furnish their propaganda.

The Anti-Saloon League of America has made the fight to prevent wet organizations from defeating Congressmen who have voted against the liquor traffic. The charge that we have spent $150,000,000 is ridiculous and false. We never spend one dollar where our opponents spend fifty. The combined budgets of the legal, legislative, and executive departments of the Anti-Saloon League of America never reached $200,000 per year, and only a small part of this was spent in political campaigns.

The league has reported the funds secured and expended for political purposes as required by law. It is the only nonpartisan organization that does comply with the Federal election law. We will help to make the existing law stronger and will insist on its enforcement against the liquor organizations that now ignore it.

We challenge the wet champions and their followers to join us in the fight to sustain and enforce the law against selling liquor on American ships and to adopt a law to prevent foreign liquor-selling ships from entering the harbors of this Nation.

The time has come for a show-down by the wets on law enforcement or a shutdown on their camouflage beer and wine appeals in the name of law enforcement.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print some remarks in the RECORD in connection with two resolutions which I have offered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Nobody heard the purpose indicated.

Mr. BURKE. I have presented two resolutions, and I wish to print remarks in connection with those resolutions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, on June 27 I presented two resolutions to this Congress, one authorizing the Railroad Labor Board to rescind its decision reducing the wages of approximately 1,500,000 railroad employees and the other to end the lockout of the coal miners by authorizing the President to take over the mines for a year or longer, to negotiate a satisfactory wage and working agreement with the miners' committee, and sell the coal to the public at the actual cost of production plus a reasonable return to the coal owners for the coal produced and sold.

It seems to me in the face of what is going on in this country that action should be taken on these two measures without delay. This Congress is here to function in the interest of the Nation and the people, and it should assert its authority and its power by calling a halt on the powers of greed and wealth that now have the country in its grip. Government of wealth, by wealth, and for wealth must cease and government of the people, for the people, and by the people be restored if prosperity and contentment are to come back to our people and our land.

There is discontent and dissatisfaction existing. Mills, mines, and factories are closed down; millions of men and women out of work; a large number of our ex-service men tramping the streets hungry and despairing, each and every one of them victims of the vicious system of greed and exploiting which stops the wheels of industry at will in order to starve the workers into accepting low wages and long hours of toil, as well as to break up unionism.

My office, like the office of every other Congressman here, is flooded with open-shop propaganda; propaganda that misrepresents the cause of the workers; that is sent out for no other purpose but to mislead and to influence Members of Congress to be amenable to the wishes and desires of organized wealth. I want to ask this Congress if labor has not exactly the same right to organize for its own protection and betterment that capital has? And unless organized capital wants to establish feudalism in this country why is it making such strenuous efforts to destroy labor organizations, whose object is to benefit humanity and improve the conditions of the workers?

Let us take up the situation in the coal industry. When the coal operators refused to meet with the representatives of the miners, when they refused to continue their wage and working agreement, it was for a purpose—the purpose of weakening and destroying the United Mine Workers' Association. At the time of the lockout there were 65,000,000 tons of coal on top of ground; it was thought the miners would be forced into submission before this; that the pinch of hunger and the stress of "hard times" would make them eager to get back into the mines on the operators' own terms and conditions; but the miners have endured the pinch of hunger and "hard times" for a principle, and they are just as firm to-day in their determination to assert and protect their constitutional rights as they were the day the lockout started.

The cry, however, is now going out that there is a scarcity of coal; the supply that was on hand is about exhausted, and there will in all probability soon be a move on to hold the public up for higher prices. This should not be permitted. The public has no right to bear the burden of increased coal rates in order that the profits of the operators may go up. Human rights and the necessities of humanity should take rank and precedence over property rights and enormous profits.

Whatever is going on in the coal industry to-day the operators are responsible for; they forced the situation. For the public good they should meet with the representatives of the Miners' Association and put into effect a mutual satisfactory wage and working agreement. If they will not do this, then let the Government take over the mines, formulate a satisfactory wage and working schedule with the miners' committee, mine and sell the coal at the actual cost of production, plus a reasonable return to the coal owners for the coal produced and sold.

The whole trouble is that profiteers and profiteering sprang up overnight during war days; the gold poured into their coffers. With the stoppage of war the flow of gold decreased, but not the greed and the desire to get that gold—to pile up profits, even though that greed meant crushing the workers—exploiting humanity.

And now let me touch on the pending railroad strike of maintenance of way and shop men scheduled for July 1. I hope this Congress will act on my resolution authorizing the board to rescind its wage-reduction order. These men have had handed down to them a schedule of wages that might be all right in far-off Russia or China but should not be applied in America. If American citizenship is to be up to the standard, American standards of living must be maintained. The board based its wage reduction on the un-American theory that labor is a commodity. It established a minimum-wage rate of 23 cents an hour, $1.84 a day, $563 a year. What American could or would live on such wages? What American could raise a family on such wages? What allowances did the board make for sickness or circumstances that might compel loss of time? What attention did it pay to those who appeared before it in the interest of the employees and who proved conclusively that a wage reduction was unwarranted and unjustifiable? Rents have increased; gas and electric service have not gone down; street car fares have not decreased; the cost of food is still high; and yet the man who has to work and work hard to obtain the money to purchase the necessities of life, who has little children to clothe and feed and educate, who has all he can do now to make ends meet and get along, must be the sufferer; from him and his family must be taken the toll to keep up railroad dividends.

I believe the Railroad Labor Board was intended to function as an impartial tribunal; the spirit and intent of the law was that decent living wages should be maintained; that just and fair treatment should be accorded railroad employees. If only the wishes and desires of the railroad magnates are to be considered and their views only have weight with the board, it is functioning not impartially but solely in the interest of the railroad corporations and it should be abolished. A one-sided tribunal functioning in the interest of corporate wealth, placing property rights above human rights, should be wiped out and not maintained at an expense to the taxpayers of America, and for the good of the country and the people the entire law should be repealed.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD on the ship compensation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, on June 26 there was placed by the minority leader of the House [Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee] into the RECORD a statement signed by three members of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House of Representatives in which 12 points were made against the proposed merchant marine act now before both Houses of Congress for consideration.

It appears that it was intended to give to the public the views of those who are opposed to this act, and it seemed fair to me that I should also express my views upon the 12 points submitted by them, as I am heartily in favor of the act, believing that it, if placed into law and operation, will in the course of a few years find this country doing from 50 to 60 per cent of its overseas carrying trade permanently, and that the revival of the American merchant marine will bring to our country more prosperity than any single piece of legislation proposed for many years. My answers are as follows:

STATEMENT 1.

"That the passage of this bill will not 'save hundreds of millions of dollars in liquidation of our shipping assets,' as suggested by the President, but that Chairman Lasker himself does not hope to obtain more than $200,000,000 for the entire fleet; and that if this bill passes the charge upon the Public Treasury for the next 10 years would be at least $750,000,000, not to speak of the fact that the fleet would be sold for several hundred million dollars less than what would have been its pre-war cost, wholly disregarding the actual cost of the fleet."

ANSWER.

There is no authentic testimony given in the hearings upon which to base the statement that the shipping bill will cost $75,000,000 annually, neither is there any statement to show the low valuation placed upon our fleet, viz, $200,000,000, even at to-day's low prices.

As a matter of fact, operating slightly over 3,000,000 tons of shipping to-day, we are losing about $50,000,000 annually, including the care of the laid-up vessels.

There is no estimate added for the interest, depreciation, or insurance upon all vessels, which in itself amounts, if considered with proper business accounting, from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 more.

It is proposed in the bill to endeavor to place 7,500,000 tons in operation, and, if possible, to dispose of the balance. This would give us a fleet large enough to carry from 50 to 60 per cent of our imports and exports.

When the extreme compensation, estimated at less than $50,000,000 net, is being paid, we will have about 150 per cent more of vessels operating and a material decrease in the cost we have to-day from operating the lesser tonnage.

Of course, the compensation will decrease with the tonnage operated so that it may be a few years before we reach the maximum. It is estimated that the first year of operation the cost will hardly be more than $15,000,000 net.

STATEMENT 2.

"That this bill provides for a loan to shipowners of a revolving fund of $125,000,000, such to be loaned at 2 per cent interest and for 15 years at a time, and up to two-thirds the cost of the ships upon which the loans are to be made, although the average life of a ship is estimated at 20 years; whereas, even under the Federal farm-loan system farmers are compelled to pay about 6 per cent interest, and are not allowed to borrow more than 50 per cent of the market value of their farms, which constitute permanent security."

ANSWER.

In order to have on hand and prepared for use in the naval auxiliaries necessary in event of war, it was deemed wise to encourage the construction of such vessels, by making it attractive to shipowners to build them. To do this it was arranged to loan at 2 per cent up to two-thirds of the value of ships of this character, while this is, of course, of financial advantage to the shipowner by reducing his overhead should the ship earn over the 10 per cent limitation, it will come back under the law to the Government.

STATEMENT 3.

"That this bill exempts shipowners from the payment of all Federal taxes provided the amount which would otherwise be payable as taxes is invested or set aside for investment in new ship construction."

ANSWER.

As this is only a duplication in workable shape of the Jones bill, supported by these same gentlemen, it is useless to discuss the section.

STATEMENT 4.

"That it is not even claimed by the proponents of this bill that the people will obtain any cheaper ocean freight rates, and that the bill does not pretend to provide for any sort of regulation of such rates; on the other hand, Chairman Lasker at the hearings called attention to the fact that by reason of the provision authorizing a deduction from net income taxes of 5 per cent of the freight paid on goods imported or exported in American vessels, an importer or exporter could afford to pay 4 per cent more for the carriage of his goods on American vessels than they would be carried for on foreign vessels and still save 1 per cent."

ANSWER.

No one knows better than the three gentlemen who wrote this statement that all the regulation possible to control freights, and other irregularities that might occur in an international business of this character, were taken care of in the shipping act, 1916, prepared by a Democratic committee, passed by a Democratic Congress, and signed by a Democratic President.

If there is any trouble upon this score now, it should be blamed upon the act prepared under their care.

STATEMENT 5.

"That this bill authorizes the Shipping Board to make contracts for the payment of subsidies for a period of 10 years from the date of making contract, this being admittedly for the purpose of preventing a repeal of the act by subsequent Congresses."

ANSWER.

It is manifestly impossible for us to persuade money into shipping unless there is some assurance covering a period of years that whatever is proposed for the benefit of shipping would be stable and continuous in character, and that services started will be maintained until proven successful or unsuccessful. The majority of shipping men contend that 10 years is not long enough. As to the possibility of any act of this Congress tying the hand of future Congresses so as to prevent any repeal by them, it is foolish to argue the subject with anyone who understands the laws of our country.

STATEMENT 6.

"That instead of the Shipping Board coming to Congress each year for necessary appropriations to carry out the provisions of the bill, as all other departments of the Government are required to do, this bill is so framed as to avoid this, it directing the Secretary of the Treasury to credit to the merchant marine fund certain receipts; and 'all moneys in the fund are hereby permanently appropriated for the purpose of making such payments' of voyage subsidies 'upon vouchers signed by the chairman of the board.'"

ANSWER.

It is presumed the opponents of the bill mean to intimate by this that there will be a hiding away in the Treasury Department of a fund that will never be open to the public and will be kept secret and sacred by the Shipping Board. Any student of our system knows how far this is from a possibility. Reports will be made and all the transactions will be open the same as any other public records, and the Treasury Department will see they are amply protected with proper records before any disbursements are made. Of course, all records are open to any proper committee of Congress at any time.

STATEMENT 7.

"That this bill confers upon the Shipping Board the most autocratic and unprecedented powers with respect to selling ships, making loans, making subsidy contracts, and handling enormous sums of money ever conferred upon any board, and yet the Shipping Board is feverishly employing every conceivable means to obtain such powers and opportunities."

ANSWER.

The operating portion of the Shipping Board arising out of the war emergency, if it is desired that it should function as a business must, of necessity, be clothed with rather unusual powers for a Government proposition. The competition they have to meet are both international in character and with business men who are used to decide questions upon a moment's notice. The board can not act unless equipped with power for rapid decision. This covers sales, contracts, and all the various questions that arise in the operation of the largest corporation in the world which the Shipping Board really is. Of course, realizing the possibility of failure and with the vision of the past several years of Government operation before them, they are of necessity anxious that sufficient power should be placed with them to properly carry out the conduct of the business. In drafting the bill great care was taken to look into these powers and wherever it could be done to write into law the matters placed in charge of the board, and to limit and hedge with precautions all possible matters that could be legislated for, leaving only open such as were absolutely necessary, in our opinion, to successfully operate in competition.

STATEMENT 8.

"That this bill does not require the Shipping Board to make any report or accounting to the President, the Congress, or anybody else, at any time."

ANSWER.

It was understood that the merchant marine act, 1920, took care of the accounting. If this is not so, no one on either side of the House would object to it being fully cared for and properly written in the act.

STATEMENT 9.

"That when this country was in the midst of the war, the shipping interests who are back of this bill took advantage of the situation and ran ocean rates up on both their Government and the people as high as 1,250 per cent over pre-war rates, as admitted at the hearings by the general manager of the American Steamship Owners' Association; and made what was characterized as 'almost fabulous' profits by W. J. Love and as 'enormous' by J. B. Smull, Messrs. Love and Smull being two of the $35,000 a year experts of the Shipping Board and vice presidents of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. For instance, the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co. paid dividends of 200 per cent in 1916 and 405 per cent for 1917; the Luckenbach Steamship Co. made net profits on its capital of 236.2 per cent in 1916 and 666.9 per cent in 1917; the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. made 365.3 per cent net profit on its capital stock in 1915 to 1920; the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Co. made net profits greater than its capital in 1915–1920, and during 1921, the very worst time in the history of shipping, according to its own annual report, made a net income of $1,781,337, after deducting all expenses, taxes, interest, and losses on sale of Liberty bonds; the United Fruit Co. with a capital stock of $50,000,000 made net profits of $94,147,500 in 1915–1920, paid dividends of $77,080,277, and increased their surplus to $66,176,490; the Dollar Steamship Lines made net profits on its capital stock of 322.9 per cent in 1916 and 104.9 per cent in 1917; Robert Dollar, the owner of the Dollar Steamship Lines, in a recent article in Nation's Business, frankly states: 'I have always felt that a shipowner who must have "pap" from the Government does not deserve to be in the business. We do not need any advantage over the other fellow; we can take care of ourselves.'"

ANSWER.

It is acknowledged that many companies made very large profits during the war; in fact, most of the free ships in the world enjoyed their most profitable period at that time. It will be noted that, outside of the Dollar Line, the profits of the American-Hawaiian and the Luckenbach Lines are only given for 1916 and 1917. No mention is made as to the present operation of these companies, many of whose assets (ships) have so shrunken in value since the high prices of 1916 and 1917 that they have no such advantages this report would have you believe they are enjoying. An analysis of the reports of these for the two years, both of which will be found on page 2223 of the hearings, will show:

Low capitalization, large investment and surplus, profits from sale of ships, which would all help to make large dividends. Companies with profits such as these are would be the last ones to ask Government compensation, as the limitation of 10 per cent would cause a return of the compensation when such unusual profits are indicated.

The following letter received from the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., signed by the treasurer of the company, explains their position:

We refer to page 2216, part 33, report of hearings upon bills S. 3217 and H. R. 10644, to amend the mechant marine act of 1920, and extract therein quoted from report of July 31, 1919, by Chairman Hurley to the President:

"* * * perhaps most significant of all is the fact that the vessels of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., flying the American flag, have successfully met the competition of ships paying the lowest wages on earth in the trans-Pacific trade for about 70 years."

The most significant reply to this statement, it seems to us, is an accurate report of the actual operating results of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. during the period of its trans-Pacific services.

The trans-Pacific service was inaugurated in 1867, and to 1873, inclusive, the company was enabled to pay dividends in only two of these seven years. From 1873 to 1915, inclusively, a period of 42 years, increasing and almost continuous losses from operations occurred until in 1915 a deficit of over $11,000,000 had accrued. There was a net profit in only 18 of these years, and in only 2 did this profit amount to over 3 per cent upon the capital investment.

In the year 1915 the par value of the capital stock of the company was reduced from $100 per share to $5 per share, the stockholders thereby absorbing the enormous deficit.

From 1873 to 1920, inclusive, a period of 48 years, dividends were declared in but 9 years, which in all represented a return of less than one-half of 1 per cent upon the capital investment.

As to the United Fruit Co., their status was gone into thoroughly in the hearings, and it is surprising that the gentlemen signing this report should believe that their statement could pass without answer. The United Fruit Co. has only a comparatively small portion of their capital in ships. They are owners of tropical plantations and other activities which are exceedingly profitable. There does not seem to be any report segregating their profits, so the earnings of their ships are not as stated nor anything like the profit this statement would lead us to believe.

The same is true of the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Co. This company has only a few steamers operating in foreign trade; coastwise steamers do not receive compensation, and they also profit greatly from outside interests. Again, it is not possible to segregate for comparison, and the matter was clearly and fully brought out in the hearings.

As to Robert Dollar, it is well known that his steamers operate under the cheapest flag, with the cheapest crews. He personally told me in New York a short time ago that he was operating with Chinese and Japanese and had to do so in order to make a profit.

Of course, if it is the desire of the American people to operate their merchant marine as operated under other flags, wiping out the laws for safety at sea, or the nationality of seamen, the shipowner would not ask for "pap" but would do as done by Robert Dollar. It was, however, believed by the committee that what we are trying to do was to build up an American merchant marine, under the American flag, manned as far as possible by Americans, maintained at American standards, and it was our thought that this was what the American people would desire. After reading this statement perhaps we are mistaken.

STATEMENT 10.

"That most of the American steamship lines which are seeking and would receive the subsidies and other aids maintain an unnecessarily large force of high-paid executives, their salaries running as high as $100,000 a year, not only greater than the salary of the President of the United States but out of all proportion to salaries paid in any other industry, especially considering the size and the amounts invested in the enterprises. The Seager Steamship Co. is a leading American line, organized in 1907 and having operated American-flag ships to various European ports in the sharpest competition in the world; John C. Seager, sr., the president of the company, is said to be the oldest and one of the most highly esteemed shipping men in New York. John C. Seager, jr., the vice president and treasurer of the company, in a recent interview published in the Nautical Gazette, declared:

"'Steamships purchased at the present time can be operated at a profit; foreign owners are not losing money, and there is no reason why an American owner can not make a profit with his ships. The most potent factor militating against the successful operation of American ships is the large overhead, which is incurred by the payment of large salaries to unnecessary executives. With few exceptions in Britain, there are no large salaries paid to steamship men in Europe, and if this example were followed in this country the balance sheets of the industry would make a better showing.'"

ANSWER.

Of course, higher salaries prevail in the United States than in other countries. No one would dispute that. The gentlemen seem to be obsessed with the idea that $100,000 salaries are paid out broadcast in the shipping business. It does not appear anywhere in the hearings, although everyone realized that salaries were higher here than abroad.

As to the leading American line of John C. Seager, also of Oswald Garrison Villard, the editor of the Nautical Gazette, both of which authorities the gentlemen were so prone to quote during the hearings, I can only report the results of my investigations.

Oswald Garrison Villard: This man is the owner of the Nautical Gazette. He was born in Germany, and his reputation around New York is that of being a parlor "socialist." He was so intensely pro-German before we entered the Great War that he was given serious attention by the Government authorities. The attitude of his papers at that time—the New York Evening Post and the Nation—is so well known that it needs no further comment. He is carrying on the same attitude of criticism of the best American interests in the Nautical Gazette. In "Who's Who in America," in his autobiography, he states that among his principal contributions to literature were a book entitled "Germany in Battle" and a monograph on "The German Imperial Court." No one has ever considered that he knows anything about shipping.

John C. Seager: A shipping man in New York, was born in England, and it is unknown whether he is an American citizen or not. Prior to the Great War he was an agent for British shipping companies. At this time his principal employees in the shipping business are aliens. He once had a Mr. Cox, an American citizen, as port engineer, and replaced him with an Englishman. His general reputation at this port is of being very English in thought and action.

STATEMENT 11.

"That this bill authorizes the granting of subsidies and all other aids to the Standard Oil Co., the United States Steel Corporation, and other large concerns which own and operate their own ships in the transportation of their own products and does not require them to operate their ships in whole or in part as common carriers."

ANSWER.

It is true that the bill will grant subsidies to the Standard Oil Co. and other ships of corporations while carrying their own products. This payment is, however, made the object of special supervision by the board so the 10 per cent limitation of profit clause will not be taken advantage of by the owner. It might be well to say at this point that there is no deduction allowed in taxes upon freight paid to parties transporting their own freight.

It was only after studying the subject thoroughly that it was decided to pay such compensation. The reasons were obvious. The greater number of the ships are tankers. The immense value of tankers in time of war can not be discounted by any statement. We can well afford to retain our control at the price, otherwise we might regret before many years pass the loss of these valuable naval auxiliaries. It must be remembered that it is not only the Standard Oil Co. or the United States Steel Corporation that operate these industrial ships; many other oil companies and manufacturing establishments own ships also. The object of this bill is to maintain an American merchant marine. These ships, especially the tankers, are an integral part of it, the tankers especially vital. From this viewpoint we believed our deductions were sound.

STATEMENT 12.

"That Chairman Lasker demands both subsidies and booze, insisting that even with subsidies and aids granted by the ship subsidy bill American ships can not successfully operate unless they are also permitted to run saloons aboard. If Lasker's statements as to the necessity of subsidies are to be accepted, his statements as to the necessity of the sale of booze must also be accepted. Wherefore, nothing is to be gained merely by assuming the enormous additional burdens entailed by the pending bill. Consequently, in ascertaining the 'reaction' of their constituents, Members should ascertain whether they are not only willing to confer upon the shipping interests the enormous bounties provided by the pending bill but also authorize the sale of intoxicating liquors to those who are able to sail abroad and at the same time prohibit such sales to those who remain on land. It is not merely a question of prohibition but a question of consistent law enforcement.

"It has just been announced in the press that Chairman Lasker will visit all the States in the Middle West in an effort to sell his ship subsidy bill to the farmers. If Chairman Lasker believes the propaganda which he has persistently been giving out to the effect that the farmers and the Middle West have been converted to his scheme and are actually wanting his bill passed, why does he intend to waste his time in going forth to evangelize them instead of remaining in Washington and performing his duties as chairman of the Shipping Board in an effort to improve the conditions which he delights to describe as deplorable? While we do not believe that he will find the farmers as gullible as some people in Washington, yet we realize that he is a genius in some particulars. He justly prides himself upon being a publicity expert, and we readily bear witness that he is also a promoter and schemer par excellence. He is perhaps the only man in America who could have come to Washington and captivated the President, overawed the Cabinet officers whose jurisdiction he sought to invade, chloroformed the Anti-Saloon League and prohibition commissioner, and otherwise paved the way for even the possibility of the passage of such a vicious measure as the pending ship subsidy bill, which is infinitely worse and more costly than any of the various ship subsidy bills which have been repudiated in the past."

ANSWER.

We do not believe we care to take up and answer the most of this paragraph. It needs no answer, as the public themselves are not so ignorant that they are unable to make their own deductions as to the animus back of it coming from Members of the minority party, under whose auspices this deplorable mess was generated and abandoned for the present management to clarify. Chairman Lasker needs no apology, the Shipping Board to-day knows where it is at, what it owns, and is prepared to make a monthly report of its operations, and will do so starting July 1. This we owe to Chairman Lasker and his fellow board members. Did the last administration try to give to Congress any such exposition of ability to manage?

As to the liquor sold on American ships outside of the 3-mile limit, the practice was started under the Democratic administration, and has been continued since. No doubt Congress will, when the bill is under discussion, take care of the subject ably and well; it is manifestly unfair to charge the practice of selling liquor on ships to the present board when it was only a hand-me-down from the party of the gentlemen who acquiesce in this statement.

It might be of interest to the Members to read the statement made in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, business section, June 27:

CANADA TO SELL PART OF MERCHANT MARINE—TWENTY-SEVEN OF FLEET OF SIXTY-FIVE WILL GO TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER—CANADIAN PACIFC IMPROVES SERVICE.

OTTAWA, June 26.—The Canadian Government, having burned its fingers very badly trying to build and operate a merchant marine, has decided to cut its losses and sell about one-half of its tonnage. Of its fleet of 65 vessels 27 of the smaller ones will be offered to the highest bidder. If the remaining vessels, which will continue to be operated by the Government railways, do not make a better showing, it is only a matter of time until they, too, are sold.

The loss on the fleet last year, including interest and depreciation, was a little more than $8,000,000. The fleet cost $73,000,000, or at the rate of $191 a ton. It has been decided to write down the valuation to replacement cost, or to $60 per ton, or a total reduction of about $40,000,000.

While the Government has found it necessary to sell a large portion of its tonnage, the Canadian Pacific Railway has added 100,000 tons to its fleet during the last year, and in spite of very strong competition is doing well. At the recent convention of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association it was suggested that the Government sell the whole of its tonnage to private interests, the opinion being expressed that the Canadian Pacific Railway was the only corporation that could compete with the United Fruit Co. for the West Indies trade.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have hoped to be able to adjourn to-morrow, but as matters now stand I think it is doubtful if we can adjourn before Saturday afternoon. The deficiency bill has just been reported by the Senate committee.

Mr. MADDEN. It is under consideration in the Senate now.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Illinois tells me that it is under consideration in the Senate now. They hope to be able to conclude the consideration of that bill to-night. If they do, and we can meet a little earlier than the usual time of meeting to-morrow, we can send that bill to conference; but even then I doubt if it will be possible to conclude the consideration of the bill, to agree to the conference report, and to close up the business to-morrow. It seems to me that we will do very well if we conclude the business and adjourn Saturday. I hope we will be able to do that. But may I suggest to gentlemen that the adjournment Saturday depends upon our having a quorum here. Gentlemen must not leave on the theory that some one else can take care of the situation. A rule for adjournment must be presented and passed. It will require a quorum, and unless a quorum is here gentlemen will be sent for, and we will remain in session until we secure a quorum, because those who are faithful enough to remain here must not be punished because other gentlemen have a disposition to leave.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I was going to say that if the Senate should pass the deficiency bill to-night it is the intention of those who will be the conferees to join the Senate committee who will be conferees and informally go over the amendments before the bill is messaged over to the House, and then get permission to go into conference, and so expedite the work as much as we can. Even if we have to work late into the night to-morrow night, it will not be our fault if we do not have the chance to get away.

Mr. SNELL. It may be possible to adjourn to-morrow night.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman think it will be possible to conclude consideration of the conference report and get it adopted in the two bodies to-morrow?

Mr. MADDEN. I hope so.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Illinois is a faithful and earnest worker, and just at this particular time he is quite optimistic.

Mr. MADDEN. I will do all I can.

Mr. MONDELL. We know the gentleman will do all that is possible to be done; but gentlemen should not arrange to leave until Saturday.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. What will be done to-morrow prior to the presentation of the conference report on the deficiency bill?

Mr. MONDELL. The acting chairman of the Rules Committee has two rules which he intends to present as soon as he has the opportunity to do so.

We hope to dispose of all of the business before the House provided for by rules and take care of conference reports to-morrow at a reasonably early hour.

Mr. SNELL. If we get through, we can adjourn late in the evening.

Mr. MONDELL. The adjournment depends on the deficiency bill.

Mr. GARNER. Suppose there were a lockup between the House and the Senate on the deficiency bill and you could not pass it, the Senate saying you will yield to unreasonable amendments or you will not take any recess. Are you going to take the recess and give up to the Senate?

Mr. MONDELL. May I say that I understand that the committee has added comparatively little to the deficiency bill, and it is the determination of every Member of the House, I know, not to accept in the deficiency bill, by reason of the fact that we hope to recess, any provision which we would not otherwise accept.

Mr. GARNER. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will confirm that statement.

Mr. MADDEN. I do.

Mr. GARNER. I had rather stay here indefinitely than to give up to some unreasonable amendment put on the deficiency bill for the purpose of keeping us here. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. So would I.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Is it the expectation of the gentleman to ask that the House meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock?

Mr. MONDELL. I did; but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations suggests that those who will be conferees on the deficiency bill will meet the Senate members early to-morrow.

Mr. MADDEN. We are going to meet at 9.30 and go through informally the amendments.

Mr. GARNER. Let me suggest, if I may, to the gentleman from Wyoming that it will undoubtedly be 12 o'clock to-morrow before the Appropriations Committee can make a report, and this chicken-feed stuff that you are bringing in is driving Members away instead of keeping them here.

Mr. MONDELL. In view of the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I doubt if anything will be gained by convening earlier than the regular hour.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER AT GRAND ECORE, LA.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have a very urgent bridge bill that will take but a few minutes to pass and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 12092.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bridge bill of which the clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12092) granting the consent of Congress to the Louisiana Development Co. to construct a bridge across the Red River at or near Grand Ecore, La.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the bill read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Louisiana Development Co., and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Red River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Grand Ecore, in the parish of Natchitoches, State of Louisiana, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman when this bill was introduced?

Mr. BARKLEY. On the 20th of June.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I object.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will not the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will withhold it, but I will renew it. I do not believe in doing things by unanimous consent when we have been rushing for the last two or three weeks to get away, and especially on a bill that has been here only two weeks, while others have been on the calendar all the session. I do not believe in legislating in that way.

AMENDING PROVISO IN PARAGRAPH 10, SECTION 9, OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees may have until midnight to file the conference report on the bill (S. 831) to amend the proviso in paragraph 10 of section 9 of the Federal reserve act, amended by the act of June 21, 1917, amending the Federal reserve act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the conferees may have until midnight to file the conference report on the bill S. 831. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER AT GRAND ECORE, LA.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes to explain the bridge bill just objected to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that this bridge is intended to carry a pipe line across the river a few yards from the present bridge, because the company wishes to transport the natural gas flowing out of the gas wells at Monroe across the river and into Texas. It is only a pipe line. It is far above navigation, and that is all the bridge is for. The emergency arose recently when the company was organized to pipe the natural gas from the fields.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, it is remarkable that the emergency did not arise until a few days before we are about to adjourn.

Mr. ASWELL. It is only a few days ago that they found out they would have to have legislation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A pipe-line company usually knows something about the law, and especially about getting across navigable streams. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEGAL-TENDER NOTES SECURED BY STATE BONDS.

Mr. HIMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein certain correspondence between Mr. S. T. Gilbert, jr., Undersecretary of the Treasury, and others relative to the bill H. R. 4576, introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

The SPEAKER. What is the subject of the bill?

Mr. HIMES. It provides for legal-tender notes secured by noninterest-bearing 25-year bonds of States or subdivisions thereof.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing therein certain correspondence between Mr. Gilbert and others relative to a bill introduced by Mr. BURKE. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, who is Mr. Gilbert?

Mr. HIMES. He is Undersecretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WINGO. What is the necessity for this?

Mr. HIMES. To get information to those interested in this particular bill.

Mr. WINGO. It is customary to give information to the committee that is considering the bill, is it not?

Mr. HIMES. The idea is to get the information to the whole House.

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HIMES. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Is this the same Mr. Gilbert who ought to be removed because he was appointed by the Wilson administration?

Mr. HIMES. I really do not know. I could not tell the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. I understood that he is persona non grata so far as 150 members of the Republican Party are concerned. I should not think the gentleman would want to put anything in the RECORD that he said.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, the course being so very good, I shall waive any objection I have.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is not this the same matter, to the insertion of which in the RECORD the gentleman's colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] objected the other day?

Mr. HIMES. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Has that gentleman withdrawn his objection?

Mr. HIMES. He is present here on the floor.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, I did not see the gentleman. I withdraw any objection that I have.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The correspondence referred to is as follows:

MAY 3, 1922.

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE.

GENTLEMEN: On April 14, 1922, I had the honor of an audience with the President. One of the subjects discussed was H. R. 4576. The President promised to give it careful and serious consideration.

On April 21, 1922, I mailed to the President a copy of a brief of my statement to your committee on April 20, 1922, which brief the President referred to the Secretary of the Treasury for consideration.

I herewith submit copy of letter received from the Undersecretary of the Treasury, with brief submitted to the President, and copies of my letters in reply to both the President and the Undersecretary of the Treasury.

Respectfully submitted.

Yours truly, JACOB S. COXEY, Sr.

(Copy.)

UNDERSECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, April 29, 1922.

DEAR SIR: For the Secretary of the Treasury, I acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 21, 1922, addressed to the President, and referred to this department for consideration, suggesting the issuance of legal-tender notes secured by noninteresting-bearing 25-year bonds of States or subdivisions thereof to pay for local improvements.

The adoption of your proposal is entirely out of the question. The volume of money in circulation at present is amply sufficient to meet the demands of business, and our currency needs are fully provided for under the existing system, particularly through the issue of Federal reserve notes, which are designed to expand and contract in accordance with the demands of trade. The Federal reserve banks stand ready at all times to issue Federal reserve notes on the proper security as they may be necessary to meet the country's requirements, and a shortage of currency under the present system is almost impossible.

For the Government to issue fiat money, or even to pump money into circulation in excess of business requirements, would produce most unfortunate results. The present readjustment of prices and business activity in this country and throughout the world follows a period of rapid expansion of credit and currency. An abnormal expansion of credit and currency is usually accompanied by a period of falling prices and depression in business. An increase in currency would merely result in a temporary increase in purchasing power without a corresponding increase in the volume of goods. The ultimate result would be an advance in prices or a depreciation in the buying power of the dollar. With the increased buying power which results from currency issues, many people are led to believe that wealth has increased accordingly, but the disappointment comes when the efficiency of the new buying power is seriously diminished by its mere quantity.

Public finance should be dissociated so far as possible from the monetary system. They are separate and distinct problems, and the world has learned through bitter experience that a Government's financial operations should not be allowed to interfere with its currency system if it can possibly be prevented. For a Government to meet its obligations or extend credits by issuing currency is simply a species of confiscation which is inflicted upon the public through the process of depreciating the currency. Moreover, it is a process which leaves in its wake a host of economic ills and hardships.

Very truly yours,

S. P. GILBERT, Jr.,
Undersecretary.

JACOB S. COXEY, Sr., Esq.,
Ohio Hotel, Fourteenth and H Streets,
Washington, D. C.

BRIEF SUBMITTED TO THE PRESIDENT BY JACOB SECHLER COXEY, SR., OF MASSILLON, OHIO, AND OHIO HOTEL, FOURTEENTH AND H STREETS NW., WASHINGTON, D. C., BEFORE THE BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, APRIL 20, 1922, ON THE NONINTEREST-BEARING 25-YEAR BOND PLAN.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives: House bill 4576, introduced by Mr. WILLIAM J. BURKE, of Pennsylvania, April 20, 1921, now before your committee and being considered, is known as noninterest-bearing 25-year bond plan.

That whenever any State, Territory, county, township, district, municipality, or incorporated town or village, hereafter designated "community," shall deem it necessary to make any public improvement, market roads, building homes for its citizens, or for its needs and employment for unemployed it may deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States a noninterest-bearing 25-year bond or bonds to provide for the security and issuance of legal tender Treasury notes (money) at cost (without interest) in any amount up to but not to exceed one-half of the assessed valuation of the real property, exclusive of improvements thereon, in such State, Territory, county, township, district, municipality, or incorporated town or village, such money received by such "communities" to be returned to such Secretary of the Treasury of the United States in 25 annual installments of 4 per cent each, but without interest, at such time to be retired, canceled, and not again reissued, including cancellation of such bond or bonds deposited with such Secretary, upon such return of all such installments.

[Senate Doc. No. 728, 60th Cong., 2d sess.]

The secret proceedings and debates of the Federal Convention assembled at Philadelphia, Pa., in the year 1787 for the purpose of forming the Constitution of the United States of America submitted:

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1787.

On the adoption in convention by the unanimous order of the convention the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia being represented.

GO: WASHINGTON, President.
WILLIAM JACKSON, Secretary.

The Constitution of the United States was adopted.

On the same day, September 17, 1787, submitted as follows:

IN CONVENTION.

SIR: We have now the honor to submit to the consideration of the United States in Congress assembled that Constitution which has appeared to us the most advisable.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, President.

His Excellency the President of Congress.

By the unanimous order of the Convention.

Under such Constitution of the United States the Congress may enact laws, subject to be reviewed and revision by the Supreme Court of such United States.

Article 1, section 8, clause 5 of such Constitution of the United States provides: The Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

Article 1, section 10, clause 1, provides: No State shall coin money, emit bills of credit, make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts.

All of such States had, prior to such adoption and ratification of Article 1, sections 8 and 10 of such Constitution, the sovereign right to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin; emit bills of credit; make anything a tender in payment of debts within the boundaries of such States; therefore the necessity of such Constitutional Convention, for such States to assemble together and agree to do collectively what they could not do as individual and separate States, viz, to make a national money and emit bills of credit in payment of all debts that would be legal tender in all of such States as well as the United States.

Upon such adoption and ratification of such Constitution by such States there was a complete surrender of such sovereign right to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and to emit bills of credit, by delegating its sole right of coinage and emissions of bills of credit to the Congress of such United States. Such States by such surrender and delegation of power thereby denied to such States and deprived such States the right to develop such States, or to help by loaning money to the people of such States.

It can not be conceived by an unbiased and unprejudiced mind that these intellectual and honorable gentlemen who comprised the Constitutional Convention of 1787, just 11 years after the Declaration of Independence, would have agreed to the surrender of the right of such States to coin money, emit bills of credit for its and its people's needs without imposing a duty upon Congress to furnish a national currency that would be a full legal tender in payment of all debts in all of such States as well as such United States.

I contend a duty was thereby imposed upon the Congress to furnish a national, full legal-tender money, sufficient in amount for such States, subdivisions thereof, and its people's needs, at cost of material, labor, printing, engraving, and disbursing of such money, as well as without interest on such money.

I here cite the highest authority under the Constitution in support of my contention, as outlined by the United States Supreme Court decision, January 15, 1872 (12 Wallace, 539, and 110 U. S. Report, 448). "Congress is authorized to establish a national currency, either in coin or in paper, and to make that currency lawful money for all purposes as regards the National Government or private individuals."

SECRETARY CHASE ON THE "GREENBACK."

What is a greenback? Did you ever think what it was? Why, it is simply the credit of this great American people put in the form of money to circulate among the very people whose credit makes it good. When I was Secretary of the Treasury the question arose, How should these vast armies and navies be supplied? How should the boys be fed in the fields, the sailors in ships, and provisions be made for their support, their clothing, food, and transportation? I found the banks of the country had suspended specie payments. What was I to do? The banks wanted me to borrow their credit, or pay them interest in gold upon their credit. They did not pay any gold, or propose to pay any themselves, but they wanted me to borrow their notes. I said, No, gentlemen, this great American people is worth all of you put together. I will take the credit of the people and cut it up in the form of little bits of paper and we will circulate that paper. This is the true idea of the greenback. It is the credit and property of the American people. (Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of the United States Treasury under Abraham Lincoln.)

DEFINITION OF MONEY.

The redemption of money in commodities and services through the clearing houses of the industry of the world, from which everyone withdraws precisely the things he desires in exchange for the money he holds, is the beau ideal money under the present system of the infinite division of labor. (Moran on Money, p. 111.)

When a laborer has received his wages in money he has not received an equivalent for his services, but only something which will enable him to get what he chooses. The money, therefore, that he possesses is not the equivalent but it is the symbol, the proof, that he has rendered services or property for which he has not received an equivalent. (Macleod on Banking, p. 124.)

Money is an idea of Congress enacted into law. It is a national medium of exchange used in exchanging labor in production, and to exchange the products of labor from the producer to the consumer. It simply represents values which are created by labor or services rendered, and is a legal order for goods, and never should have or be of any value in or of itself. This is all that money is or should be. It should not get into circulation without a service being rendered or a value created. It is a representative and not a measure of value. (Coxey on Money.)

J. C. CALHOUN'S SCIENTIFIC DEDUCTION ON MONEY, 1834.

Place all the money power in the hands of a combination of a few individuals and they by expanding or contracting the currency may rise or sink prices at pleasure, and by purchasing when at the greatest depression and selling when at the greatest elevation may command the whole property and industry of the community and control its fiscal operation. The banking system concentrates and places this power in the hands of those who control it. Never was an engine invented better calculated to place the destinies of the many in the hands of the few or less favorable to that equality and independence which lies at the bottom of our free institutions.

CHAMBERS ENCYCLOPÆDIA, VOLUME 10, PAGE 136 (1881 EDITION).

The slightest modification of national laws concerning money affects every branch of trade, every industry, every investment; yet a small number of the whole people, those whose business it is to deal in money, as lenders or bankers, alone keep that close watch of legislation which enables them to control it unduly so as to promote their own interests when laws are changed, or if laws are likely to affect their interests injuriously they are the first to be aware of the effects of changes and to guard against them. That prosperity or adversity may result to a majority of an entire people by a simple act of legislation on money with a rapidity that legislation on no other subject can parallel has become obvious to all intelligent people.

Labor is prior to and independent of capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor and could never have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital and deserves much the higher consideration. (Lincoln's second message.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 3, 1922.

Hon. S. P. GILBERT,
Undersecretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.:
(Attention of the President.)

In answer to your letter of April 29, 1922, which is in answer to my letter to the President of April 21, 1922, in which I submitted a brief to him on the noninterest-bearing 25-year bond plan. In reply I submit the following:

The Federal reserve system consisted of, on—

June 30, 1920, increase of Federal reserve bank notes in six years of	239,260,000
Inflated increase in loans and discounts (credits) and moneys	19,962,296,000
Decrease in national bank notes from $1,122,452,661 to $723,552,524 from 1914 to 1920, in six years of	386,900,137
Total inflation of loans and discounts (credits) and moneys in six years	19,575,395,863

All contracts, bonds, mortgages, improvements, buildings, and labor were made and expected to be paid for at maturity based upon loans and discounts (credits) allowed by such banks and moneys issued during the six-year period from June 30, 1914, to June 30, 1920, with all labor fully employed. The "pump" was working at full speed, 9,399 member bank "pumps" sucking from 12 regional banks, and they drawing such moneys from the circulation department of the United States Treasury at Washington, D. C., they in turn kept (coining) the Engraving and Printing Department running the printing presses coining and turning out to the extent of $3,994,506,000 of such Federal reserve notes and Federal reserve bank notes.

How much of such moneys issued during this six-year period was "fiat"?

Did not such loans and discounts (credits) allowed by such member banks and moneys issued by such reserve banks enable the farmers and manufacturers to "speed up" on production as well as to employ all labor?

Why the great change from all labor being fully employed during such six-year period to 6,000,000 unemployed in one-year period?

Did the "pump" refuse to work?

Did it, "the pump," become unionized? Did it strike?

Why did the Secretary of the Treasury, together with the advisory council of the Federal Reserve Board, in May, 1920, stop the further financing of the War Finance Corporation, that was authorized by Congress to use $1,000,000,000 to assist the export of American products by advancing the money to American exporters or American bankers? Such billion of money was a foundation for at least seven billions of credits.

Was it (in answer to above question put to Mr. James B. Forgan, a veteran banker of Chicago and a member of such advisory council) because the "pump" failed to function?

Or was it, as Mr. Forgan testified on December 16, 1920: "I am a member of the advisory council of the Federal Reserve Board, and I remember we had it up with the Secretary (last May), and we agreed with him at that time that a little pressure to liquidate (pay up) was necessary—some pressure was necessary, and that was part of the pressure."

Did not such deflation of—

Bank loans as follows (together with the $1,000,000,000 stoppage of the War Finance Corporation) of	$31,256,147,000
June 30, 1920, to June 30, 1921, of (credits) loans and discounts	28,932,011,000
In one year a deflation of	2,324,136,000
And of moneys, Federal and Federal reserve bank notes of	1,009,816,000
Total deflation of (credits) loans and discounts and moneys of in one year	3,333,952,000

bring about this unemployment, bankruptcy, and ruin?

Was it not on account of and because you (those in control of such system) refused to allow the "pump" to function?

Why, if the Federal reserve system in supplying the needs of business as you advise, "The volume of money in circulation at present is amply sufficient to meet the demands of business and our currency needs are fully provided for under the existing system, particularly through the issue of Federal reserve notes, which are designed to expand and contract in accordance with the demands of trade."

"The Federal reserve banks stand ready at all times to issue Federal reserve notes on the proper security as they may be necessary to meet the country's requirements, and a shortage of currency under the present system is almost impossible." Why did 37 national and 10 other than national member banks of the Federal reserve system, together with 365 nonmember State and private banks, fail during 1921?

The purpose of the noninterest-bearing 25-year bond plan is to kill some of the interest bugs that have extracted from the producers and laborers during the six-year period from 1914 to 1920, in interest and discounts, about $10,657,000,000, which went into the pockets of stockholders of 30,139 banks reporting to the Comptroller of the Currency. Such toll in the shape of interest and discounts was paid to such banks for the privilege of working, giving the magnificent sum of $60,725,000 to the Government as a franchise tax for 1920 for the privilege of plundering the people.

This system earned enough during this period of six years to pay for building a home (bank building) for the buccaneers in New York costing about $30,000,000, and one in Cleveland, Ohio, of about $11,000,000, besides accumulating 100 per cent of a surplus on the subscribed capital stock and paying 6 per cent dividend (cumulative) on the paid-in capital of such Federal reserve banks. In addition to paying such franchise tax to the Government, all member banks are required to subscribe for stock to the amount of 6 per cent of their capital and surplus and pay in 50 per cent of such subscription. Under this Federal reserve banking system such banks are becoming richer and the people poorer.

The banks did inflate prices by inflating loans, discounts (credits), and moneys during the six-year period, 1914 to 1920, and through such inflation kept all of the people fully employed.

The banks did deflate prices by deflating loans, discounts (credits), and moneys during the one-year period from 1920 to 1921, which caused bankruptcies, ruin, and 6,000,000 of unemployed.

Under such proposed noninterest-bearing 25-year bond plans the money would be issued in accordance with Article I, section 8, clause 5, of the Constitution of the United States and the Supreme Court decisions; the money would be "pumped" into the depositaries of the States, counties, townships, districts, municipalities, towns, or villages as and when needed to be paid out to the now unemployed for services rendered and material furnished for all internal improvements, building homes for its citizens, and needs of the people in production. Such money would be furnished at cost of handling, but without interest, such money to be returned in 25 annual installments of 4 per cent each and canceled when and as returned and not again reissued. Under such plan it will solve the unemployment problem, putting the idle to work in beautifying and improving when there is no demand for labor in production. It will maintain an equilibrium of prices of labor and the products of labor. It will cost the communities only the price paid for such improvements without interest, instead of paying for such improvements in interest in 25 years and still owing for the cost of the improvement and such improvement worn out. It would soon wipe out about $10,000,000,000 of State, county, township, district, municipal, town, or village and school interest-bearing bonds and save about $500,000,000 in interest annually on such bonds now outstanding to the taxpayers and reduce rents. Such Federal reserve system does not provide the moneys needed for such communities' needs (improvements), as such system will only rediscount paper with liquid securities as collateral running not to exceed 3 months, while the community bonds run for a period of 5 to 40 years.

Therefore the necessity of the noninterest-bearing 25-year bond plan. There can not be any "confiscation" under such plan. There is no "fiat" money under it, as it is secured, first, by double the value of land, exclusive of all improvements thereon; second, all money issued to be expended thereon; third, 4 per cent of all money issued retired annually through taxation; fourth, canceled by the Secretary of the Treasury when and as returned each year.

Therefore the adoption of my proposal is not "entirely out of the question" if the Constitution of the United States means anything, viz, "The Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin." Who is the Congress? The people. Then who should the Congress coin the money for? I believe the people will answer and say, "For the needs of the Government, States, counties, townships, districts, municipalities, towns, or villages, and for the people at cost, but without interest." The adoption of such plan will immediately in all communities make work for the unemployed, homes for its citizens, credit extensions for farmers and manufacturers, greatly reduce suicides, robberies, and murders, bring joy, happiness, and contentment to millions of people in the greatest country on earth, as well as beautifying and improving it.

Hoping that you will give this explanation the serious consideration it deserves, I remain,

Yours truly,

JACOB S. COXEY, Sr.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 3, 1922.

The President, Hon. WARREN G. HARDING,
White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am pleased to note that from the receipt of letter under date of April 29, 1922, from the Undersecretary of the Treasury, of which find copy inclosed, you are, as per verbal promise of April 14, 1922, giving my noninterest-bearing 25-year bond bill, H. R. 4576, serious consideration, for which I thank you.

Am inclosing copy of my reply to such Secretary, with the hope that you will take the time to examine it carefully. I have given more than 28 years of study and investigation to it.

You are in the position clothed with a responsibility of deciding what is best for the people as a whole. Do not be influenced by experts that do not know as much as you do yourself about this bill.

Ask yourself the questions, Who is the Congress and the President of the United States?

Does not the Congress enact all laws to coin money?

Does not the President approve or veto all of such laws?

Now, Mr. President, does not the Congress and the President represent all of the people? If they do, then your duty is clear and plain. Coin the money at cost, without interest, for all of the people's needs.

Respectfully submitted.

Yours truly,

JACOB S. COXEY, Sr.

MAY 4, 1922.

The Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, in executive session May 4, 1922, voted not to order the hearing of Jacob S. Coxey, sr., on (H. R. 4576) bill printed until after the proponents and opponents of such bill have been heard.

MASSILLON, OHIO, June 15, 1922.

The President, Hon. WARREN G. HARDING,
White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am pleased to inclose copy of letter from the Undersecretary of the Treasury, Washington, as of May 19, 1922, relative to H. R. 4576, providing for legal-tender notes secured by noninterest-bearing 25-year bonds of States or subdivisions thereof, referred to him, for consideration, by you.

Find inclosed copy of my answer to such letter. I hope that, at your leisure, you will give both of such letters careful and serious consideration.

I have with a great deal of care answered the Undersecretary's letter, giving my reasons why he should make a favorable report to you on such bill.

Hoping for a favorable conclusion, by both the Undersecretary and yourself, I remain,

Yours truly, JACOB S. COXEY, Sr.

THE UNDERSECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, May 19, 1922.

DEAR SIR: I received your letter of no date with further reference to your suggestion that legal-tender notes secured by noninterest-bearing 25-year bonds of States or subdivisions thereof be issued in order to pay for local improvements. I have already explained in my letter of April 29, 1922, why the proposal would be impracticable and accomplish nothing.

The proposal which you make is based upon a fundamental confusion between currency and capital and disregards all the lessons of monetary history, including the striking lessons the world is getting now from the depreciation of currencies. Whatever basis public improvements might give for the issue of capital securities payable at a given date in the future, with interest meanwhile, it is clear that they do not afford a suitable basis for the issuance of paper currency which would circulate from hand to hand and would have to be redeemable on demand.

There is a wide distinction between the function of capital and the function of currency. Capital is a necessary factor in production, just as land, labor, and management are, and must come from the accumulated savings of the people. The supply of capital depends not upon the supply of money but upon the Nation's savings, that is to say, the excess of production over consumption. Capital is made available for public improvements and the development of new enterprises through investment by people who have saved, and the sound way to finance public improvement would be through the sale of investment securities to the public. It is a persistent fallacy that banks or the Government can create capital by merely issuing paper currency which adds nothing to the wealth or capital assets of the country. Capital can be created only through production and the promotion of saving. To substitute Government issues of paper currency for capital is an attempt to create something out of nothing, and every such scheme sooner or later leads to disaster. This was pointed out in the famous report of the English committee on currency and foreign exchanges, submitted in the latter part of 1919, which states: "The shortage of real capital must be made good by genuine savings. It can not be met by the creation of fresh purchasing power in the form of bank advances to the Government or to manufacturers under Government guaranty or otherwise, and any resort to such expedients can only aggravate the evil and retard, possibly for generations, the recovery of the country from the losses sustained during the war."

As a factor in production, capital receives a share of the proceeds of a productive enterprise in the form of interest. Otherwise there would be no inducement to save and to invest. New enterprises or improvements which require capital for their development frequently can not be expected to pay for themselves from their own earnings for many years. This means that some one must put money into new enterprises and wait years to get it back, and there must be some inducement for one to do this in the form of interest in the meantime. The so-called interest saving that might be made by financing expenditures through the issuance of paper currency rather than through borrowing is worse than illusory. As a matter of fact, the payment of interest is trivial as compared with the losses which would follow from the depreciation of currency. It does not take a vivid imagination to picture the chaos which would result from the issue of billions of dollars of inconvertible paper currency. As has been recently stated, "Noninterest-bearing currency is one of the world's greatest afflictions to-day. There is no greater delusion than that a cheap currency is desirable or that a cheap currency is cheap."

Currency is a medium of exchange, a mechanism for making day-to-day business transactions, and the amount needed has no direct relation to capital demands. The plan to have the Government, when it needs money for improvements, raise it by issuing currency against bonds, would not bring forth capital, but would involve an indirect tax on the whole people through the depreciation of outstanding currency and increased prices for commodities and the necessities of life. The Government can not create wealth simply by printing paper currency. The volume of currency is related to the volume of business transactions, and the general price level is largely determined by the ratio between these two. Any disturbance of this ratio by a great increase in currency would reduce its purchasing power regardless of how much real estate might be back of the currency. The issue of inconvertible or irredeemable paper money necessarily results in depreciation, and there is no form of taxation more cruel or more burdensome to the people as a whole, particularly those of small means, than depreciation of the currency and the increased cost of living which follows. Inflation at the beginning may tend to increase business activity just as a strong stimulant taken by the individual gives the individual for the time being an appearance of more than normal energy. But by a continued use of the stimulant the effects soon wear off, the subject is left exhausted and weakened, and the net result is harmful. This is the history of the inflation which prevailed during the war and the period immediately following. The prosperity which ensued was not a healthy prosperity; it was more apparent than real. There was, of course, a great demand for commodities, but the country's liquid capital was being consumed rather than saved. It was not being used, as normally, to keep up the highways, railroads, public utilities, buildings, and industrial plants. As a result, the fixed-capital equipment of the country depreciated and the economic fabric of the country was weakened. The subsequent readjustment in business was an inevitable reaction from the period of inflation and no amount of bank credit could have long prevented it. There was, in fact, an extreme disorganization of commerce and industry all over the world, resulting from the war and the disturbances which followed.

This country has already made an important recovery and substantial advances have been made recently in the prices of many basic products. In fact, many of them have risen 30 or 40 per cent or more from the low levels of some months ago and in consequence there has been an important recovery in agriculture and some other industries. Banking and financial conditions have greatly improved and there is now a sound basis for the gradual recovery of business and industry. This, the Treasury believes, should be allowed to proceed in a healthy and orderly manner, without artificial stimulants which would further disturb the situation and sooner or later lead to unfavorable reactions.

Very truly yours,

S. P. GILBERT, Jr.,
Undersecretary.

MASSILLON, OHIO, June 15, 1922.

HON. S. P. GILBERT, JR.,
Undersecretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.
Attention of the President.

In answer to your letter of May 19, 1922, which is in answer to my letter of May 3, 1922, relative to H. R. 4576, which had been referred to the Secretary of the Treasury for consideration by the President, which provides for the issuance of legal-tender notes secured by noninterest bearing 25-year bonds of States or subdivisions thereof, to be issued to pay for all internal improvements of such States or subdivisions thereof.

Under such bill such States or subdivisions thereof would, or could, at their option, obtain legal-tender currency without interest, the Federal Government deducting 1 per cent of amount of such currency issued to pay for material, labor, printing, engraving (coining) and disbursing such currency, such Government furnishing 99 per cent of such face value of such noninterest bearing 25-year bonds deposited with such Government, in such full legal-tender currency at cost for such States or subdivisions needs, with the provision to return such currency by such States and subdivisions thereof through taxing its people's property to return such currency in 25 annual installments of 4 per cent each, but without interest, 4 per cent of such currency issued being redeemed through taxation, and such 4 per cent canceled annually.

Under our present banking system such States or subdivisions thereof issue 25 to 50 year 5 per cent interest-bearing bonds, based upon the same security, with the same taxing power of such States or subdivisions thereof as is provided for in H. R. 4576 and now being under discussion; such banks of such banking system purchase such 5 per cent interest-bearing bonds, pay for such bonds out of such banks depositors' currency deposited with such banks, on which such depositors receive 2 to 3 per cent interest for such deposits, and such banks receive 5 per cent interest upon such bonds purchased; such banks also pay for such bonds out of currency such banks receive from such Government, in the shape of National and Federal reserve bank notes, upon which such banks receive interest from such Federal Government, on interest-bearing Government bonds deposited with such Government as security for such National and Federal reserve bank notes issued by and to such banks at cost.

Under such banking system the people are being taxed by such Federal Government to pay such banks interest on such Government interest-bearing bonds deposited with such Government as security for the issuance by and to such banks of such currency issued; such banks loan such currency to such States and subdivisions thereof on such interest-bearing bonds issued by such States and subdivisions thereof; such States in turn tax its people that have just been taxed by such Federal Government, to pay 5 per cent interest to such banks for the use of such currency that you term "capital"; this is a double-headed interest "mechanism" intended and used to bleed the people through interest, as shown by the comptroler's report of the currency, as of June 30, 1920, 30,139 banks reporting owned over 11 billions of such bonds, stocks, and other securities that were purchased and paid for as heretofore explained, while such banks have a combined capital of only $2,702,000,000.

Under such banking system such States and such subdivisions thereof tax its people's property to pay interest to such banks and other purchasers of such 25-year 5 per cent interest-bearing bonds, 125 per cent of such face value of such bonds, and then will as an inheritance to the succeeding generation the privileges of paying or repudiating such principal of such bonds.

Such improvement, that such currency had been borrowed upon such interest-bearing bonds, has been worn out and has been paid for, in interest, one and one-quarter times, and such bond remains to bind such succeeding generation.

Under such proposed noninterest-bearing 25-year bond plan, the actual cost of all internal improvements and building homes for citizens will be paid for only once, without interest.

If a noninterest-bearing 25-year bond would have been issued, instead of an interest-bearing one, such bond would have been paid at the end of such 25-year period, and one-quarter of such face value of such bond in currency saved to such taxpayers of such States and such subdivisions thereof.

I fail to see the distinction in your "fundamental confusion between currency and capital" you try to make, that a "currency" issued against a noninterest-bearing 25-year bond will inflate prices and a "currency" issued against a 5 per cent interest-bearing 25-year bond—both issued against the same security of States and subdivisions thereof—will not inflate prices, the first being "currency" and the latter being "capital."

The 13 States in 1787 realized the necessity of a national full legal-tender currency, instead of 13 different kinds of State currencies that would only be legal tender within the boundaries of each States; that under the sovereign right of each State such State could coin a currency that would be legal tender within the boundaries of each State; therefore the Constitutional Convention of 1787 was held, in which was provided, in clause 5, section 8, Article I of the Constitution of the United States: "The Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin."

Clause 1, section 10, Article I of such Constitution provides: "No State shall coin money, emit bills of credit, make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debt."

The Supreme Court decision, which is final, says: "Congress is authorized to establish a national currency, either in coin or in paper, and to make that currency lawful money for all purposes as regards the National Government or private individuals."

In the year 1865 the Congress passed a law to place a tax of 10 per cent upon all State bank issues and other issues of currencies; such Supreme Court decided that in order to make a national monopoly of the issuance of currencies, that such tax was constitutional.

I am in full accord with the President when he says "that he believes in constitutional law."

The constitutional provision giving Congress the power to coin money, together with the Supreme Court decisions, brings us up to a question of a method for issuing such money to the people at cost; H. R. 4576 provides a sane, safe, practical, constitutional, and economical method of providing that currency, lawful money for all purposes, in amount sufficient for the needs of all of such States and subdivisions thereof.

I am of the firm belief that the framers of the Constitution of the United States, as well as such 13 States that ratified such Constitution, contemplated and fully expected the Congress to enact a law in accordance with such Constitution, as outlined in H. R. 4576, which would furnish such States and subdivisions thereof with a national full legal tender currency at no greater cost than such States could have coined a State currency, or else such States would not have surrendered such State sovereign right to coin money and regulate the value thereof and determine what should be legal tender within the boundaries of such States to such Federal Government.

During the six-year period from June 30, 1914, to June 30, 1920, such banks reporting to the Comptroller of the Currency, 30,139 in number, had loans and discounts (credits) of $15,288,357,000 and inflated to $31,256,147,000, a total of $15,967,790,000.

Such bank credits usually credited in a bank book and drawn on through 95 per cent of checks to 5 per cent cash, and which were a substitute for currency; during the same six-year period the Federal reserve bank notes were inflated, issued $239,260,000, and Federal reserve notes issued $3,755,246,000, a total inflation of $3,944,506,000, making a total inflation of bank credits and currencies of $19,962,296,000.

Such banks were functioning properly, supplying credits in the shape of loans and currency needed by the farmers, manufacturers, jobbers, and retailers—although the burden of interest, discounts, and commissions to obtain such credits, loans, and currency were tremendous—that enabled them to employ all labor in production and improvements. Did not such bank credits, loans as well as such currency, help to inflate prices during such six-year period?

If 95 per cent of such $31,256,140,000 of loans and discounts, bank credits, or $29,693,339,550 that were subject to check had all been currency, the same as such 5 per cent of currency, $1,562,807,450, represented as a part of such loans and discounts, as cash by such banks; would such bank credits, if it had all been currency instead of such bank credit, have made prices of labor and products any higher than such prices were during 1920?

Does not this prove conclusively that such banks are loaning 95 per cent of credit and 5 per cent in currency, but receive interest on such 100 per cent loan?

Does it not also prove that is the main cause of the bankers' opposition to noninterest bearing 25-year bond currency, because it will break the strangle hold such banks now have through interest-bearing bonds of such States and subdivisions thereof, amounting to over $10,000,000,000, on which such banks receive over $500,000,000 in annual interest payments?

When such Federal reserve notes were issued by such Federal reserve banks—only coined and held ready by the Government—against 40 per cent held in gold by such Federal reserve banks, together with a 100 per cent in commercial paper, rediscounted by such reserve banks, therefore interest received by such reserve banks upon (collateral) commercial notes, deposited and held as security by such reserve banks, for such reserve notes issued by such reserve banks.

Did such notes when issued by such reserve banks become "currency or capital"? There seems to be "a fundamental confusion," and it would be interesting to know just when and where and how the change from "currency to capital" takes place and what causes such change. Does paying interest on such currency when issued and loaned by such banks increase its value or stop price inflation when paid out for production or improvements?

If legal-tender currency is issued against a noninterest-bearing 25-year bond and is paid out to labor for services rendered and material furnished for internal improvements, would not such currency, after paying living expenses of such labor and anything above cost for such material, be "savings," therefore under your version become "capital," just as if it had been borrowed against an interest-bearing 25-year 5 per cent bond and paid to labor and for material for such improvement?

If such noninterest-bearing 25-year bond currency become savings "capital" after paying for material and labor for improvements, could not such currency, "savings," "capital," be used afterwards in employing other labor in producing the things necessary to feed, clothe, house, and all things necessary for those that were making improvements needed for all of the people?

If such noninterest-bearing 25-year bond currency were full legal tender, would it not be a "mechanism" and redeemed each time it passed from "hand to hand," paid a debt, purchased and paid for labor or things produced by labor?

When the taxpayer paid his annual taxes, sufficient to pay 4 per cent annually on such amount borrowed from such Government on such noninterest-bearing 25-year bond deposited, would not such currency paid by such taxpayer be redeemed through taxation and canceled upon the receipt of such currency by such Secretary of the Treasury?

Would not such noninterest-bearing 25-year bond currency circulate from "hand to hand" after being paid out to labor and material for improvements the same as though it had been borrowed from banks issuing it and interest paid on it? Anything "illusory" about such noninterest-bearing 25-year bond currency?

Legal-tender currency is a necessary factor not only in production but in internal improvements.

Under our system of production and distribution in 1920 we were using, according to the comptroller's report, that which was visible, of about $31,256,147,000 of bank credits, with about $4,700,000,000 of national bank, Federal reserve bank, and Federal reserve notes used as currency, none of which were legal tender, but redeemable in legal tender, and only about $346,000,000 of legal tender, which were issued by Abraham Lincoln during the Civil War.

Under your version "capital" must come from the "accumulated savings of the people." If your version is correct, why issue any more national, Federal reserve bank, and Federal reserve notes?

The people produce products, utilities, and improvements and all things necessary for their need. It takes currency to pay for labor and material in producing, transporting, and distribution. Where does such currency come from? Does it not come through an act of Congress?

Such currency should be furnished in amount sufficient for the needs of such States or subdivisions thereof at cost. Such noninterest-bearing 25-year bond currency would be unlike the foreign "irredeemable" currencies that you refer to. As such currency would only go into circulation when paid out for services rendered, labor performed, and material furnished, a dollar's worth of value would be created for every dollar of such currency paid out under such noninterest-bearing 25-year bond plan. Such States or subdivisions thereof would pay only once the actual cost for all of such public improvements, and each generation would pay in full, through taxation, for such improvements which it had created, used, and enjoyed, and not will, as an inheritance to the succeeding generation, an interest-bearing debt for an improvement that had been worn out and must be made over.

Under such noninterest-bearing bond plan it is not proposed to create "something out of nothing," as you allege, but to furnish a currency to employ labor in beautifying and improving when there is no demand for such labor in production. If such plan had been adopted when first introduced in Congress on June 15, 1894, just 28 years ago to-day, we would have billions of dollars of internal improvements to-day in the shape of market roads, etc., that we have not. Such labor has been wasted and millions of people now in destitution and want. Four million people out of work to-day means, at $3 per day, a loss of $12,000,000 per day; means that this Nation's loss in man power for the past year has been $3,600,000,000, a sufficient amount to have paid one year's expenses of such Federal Government. This is a low estimate of the loss.

Would it not have been better to have employed such unemployed on public works, which would have given them a purchasing power to the extent of such loss in man power that they have not had during such idle period?

Would we not all be enjoying such good roads and other improvements and have saved thousands of people from suicide, bankruptcy, and ruin?

If the number of dollars in circulation regulate the value of the dollar, and such Federal reserve banks issue and regulate the number of dollars to go into circulation, do not such Federal reserve banks, under such a system, regulate the value thereof? Under such circumstances the Congress, who have the power under the Constitution to coin money and regulate the value thereof, have surrendered such right to such banks.

Congress alone shall authorize and direct the coinage and issuance of all currencies or moneys; the people do not create currency, but do create value, and are paid for services rendered in creating such value, with currency coined by the Government and issued by the banks, such currency when loaned by such banks, paid out, represents value created, and if made legal tender, is a legal order for goods, or can be tendered in payment of goods or debts at any time in the future.

Congress should furnish such currency at cost without interest for the developing of the resources of such States and subdivisions thereof and for all internal improvements.

Congress should help Alaska to develop the resources of Alaska. Alaska needs $100,000,000 for developing the resources and colonization of farmers, etc. Why tax the people of the United States to appropriate money for developing Alaska?

Authorize Alaska to issue a noninterest-bearing 25-year bond for $100,000,000 and let the Government loan by issuing $100,000,000, deducting $1,000,000 to pay for material, engraving, printing, labor, and disbursing, then loan $99,000,000 full legal-tender currency to Alaska without interest, with the provision that Alaska must return $4,000,000 per annum for 25 years. This will enable Alaska to develop its resources and put people on the farms.

New York City needs about $218,000,000 for a new subway. Why should not New York City issue a 25-year noninterest-bearing bond for $220,000,000, deposit such bond with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and receive from such Secretary $217,800,000 in full legal-tender currency, such Secretary retaining 1 per cent—$2,200,000—to pay for material, labor, printing, engraving (coining), and disbursing of such currency.

New York would not need to pay any banking syndicate any commission, nor pay any interest on such noninterest-bearing 25-year bonds, but pay 4 per cent annually—$8,800,000—for 25 years, either by taxing the property of the people of the city of New York, or out of the revenues of such subway when completed and in operation.

The Government would make a small profit in issuing and coining such currency.

Would not such plan be an improvement of what New York City did about 12 years ago?

New York City issued $200,000,000 of 5 per cent 50-year bonds for a subway, sold them to the Morgan syndicate, paid such syndicate a commission and are now paying $10,000,000 per year in interest, and will pay during the 50-year term $500,000,000 in interest for the use of such currency and still owe the principal of $200,000,000.

If $500,000,000 can be saved to the city of New York on $200,000,000 invested in a subway, would such interest saving be "illusory and trivial"?

New York has increased its interest-bearing debt from about $1,000,000,000 in 1910 to $1,678,000,000 in 1922. Do you think the taxpayers think this increase in debt is "illusory and trivial"?

Does such proposed plan appear to be such a "persistent fallacy" as you allege?

Would not such production of a subway promote saving not only to those that rendered service in building and furnish material for such subway?

Also a saving to the city of New York of at least 5 per cent in interest, amount of $11,000,000 per annum, and make a 5-cent fare possible and profitable.

After such $217,800,000 has been paid to labor and for material for such proposed subway, would not any excess to labor above cost of living and profit on such material be "savings capital"?

Could not such "savings capital" be invested in production?

Would not such investment be an inducement to save?

Could not such "savings capital" be invested in a production that would be profitable?

If about $4,000,000,000 in Federal reserve bank notes and reserve notes were issued during the period from 1914 to 1920 that were not legal tender but were redeemable in legal tender, what harm could have been done if a like amount of full legal tender noninterest-bearing 25-year bond currency of States or subdivisions thereof were issued and 4 per cent of the total amount redeemed annually through taxation and canceled as redeemed?

Under our present banking system not only the amount of or volume of currency, but the amount of bank credits with it, controls the volume of business transactions, and the general price level is determined by these three and not by the currency and business transactions, as you allege, a contraction of loans, bank credits, by the banks of $2,324,136,000 and retirement of $1,009,000,000 in Federal reserve notes from June 30, 1920, to June 30, 1921, caused a drop in prices unparalleled in this country, with bankruptcy, ruin, unemployment, and suicides following.

Your Anti-Saloon League illustration of the effect of "a strong stimulant" and applying it to what happened during such six-year prosperous period, while the country was in the most prosperous condition that I have experienced and observed during a business career of over 40 years, it is interesting to note some things that happened during such prosperous period.

Did they not make Liberty bond drives, enlisting the most beautiful girls and women of the Nation in enticing people to subscribe for Liberty bonds "until it hurt"?

When everything else failed, offering kisses from the ruby lips of our American beauties if they would only buy. Who could resist the sympathetic appeal when they gazed into the sparkling eyes of such beauties, especially when they were using "a strong stimulant"? An American could not resist; he would be termed the worst kind of a slacker and a pro-German; the bankers even promised, if you would buy Liberty bonds, pay down what you could, pay them 8 per cent on the note given in payment of the loan, while you received 4 per cent on what you bought, "Liberty bonds," they would carry the loan as long as you wanted them to carry it. Did such bankers keep their promises? Ask the millions of the once holders of Liberty bonds; when their loans had been called and the bonds had been depreciated below 90 per cent by such bankers, the holders and owners were compelled to let loose, and "the subject is left exhausted and weakened."

The writer is convinced that you are familiar with the kind of "stimulant" credit and currency to administer to the confiding public, how long they should continue to take it, and just when to shut off such "stimulant" so as to get them into an "exhausted and weakened condition." Your statement that "the net result is harmful" is fully borne out by your admission, and the way it has worked out is quite obvious, "particularly those of small means have missed the 'stimulant,'" many of them basking in the sunshine and rain in the parks, traveling in box cars, engaged in holdups, murders, and, as a last resort, suicide; such is now and has been happening since your predecessor, Secretary Houston, with the Federal Reserve Board, at the order of the invisible government, used the Anti-Saloon League method of amending the Federal reserve act as of April 13, 1920, approved by Ex-President Wilson on such date, and on May 18, 1920, such Federal Reserve Board applied the "Volstead" method of shutting off the "stimulant," which produced the foregoing effect.

It is true that we used such "stimulant" during the six years of credits and currencies, from 1914 to 1920, to fasten $24,000,000,000 of interest-bearing debt in the shape of Liberty bonds upon the Government; such debt was incurred with labor at $6 per day, wheat $2.40 per bushel, cotton 40 cents per pound, wool 60 cents per pound, and other products in proportion, which now must be paid with labor at $3 per day, wheat $1.20 per bushel, cotton 16 cents per pound, wool 20 cents per pound, and other products in proportion.

Was such deflation of such prices in the interest of the producer or those that control what you term "capital"?

Such bonds have doubled in value, payable in labor or the products of labor.

The way to deflate such holders of such Liberty bonds so as to place them on the same level with labor of all kinds that have been deflated is for Congress to enact a law authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to have issued a sufficient amount of full legal-tender Treasury notes to pay such holders of bonds and other interest-bearing obligations of the Government as and when they mature.

Such proposed plan does not contemplate to invest such currency in "new enterprises," but does provide currency for all internal improvements and homes for its citizens. My mind is clear and has been vivid during the past 28 years since I first conceived the idea of a noninterest-bearing 25-year bond plan. Such currency issued under it, being a full legal tender, is not a "cheap" currency and can not be worth less than 100 per cent at all times, just as long as the Government lasts. There is no "delusion" in such a plan, as such a full legal-tender noninterest-bearing bond currency is far more valuable than national bank, Federal reserve bank, and Federal reserve notes, as such notes are not a legal tender, can not compel a creditor to accept such notes in payment of a judgment; such notes must be redeemed or exchanged for legal-tender currency or gold, as such notes are only receivable and not legal tender for debts.

You allege by a continued use of the "stimulant," "the effects soon wear off." Just as long as such banks kept discounting commercial paper, "a stimulant"—credits—of the people, they were fully employed, but on May 18, 1920, when such Federal Reserve Board sent out the order to deflate, such order being obeyed, shut off bank credits—the "stimulant"—and left 4,000,000 of labor in an "exhausted and weakened" condition. Such was the conspiracy hatched by the invisible government who gave orders to Secretary Houston and such Federal Reserve Board, and through the amendment to the Federal reserve act, approved by ex-President Wilson April 13, 1920, such board was then in position to put the screws on and make them liquidate; and on May 18, 1920, such reserve banks used the member banks in doing it by refusing any more rediscounts—"stimulant" bank credits—but instead made all pay up that could pay; those that could still pay interest such banks are carrying, and those that could not pay interest nor pay the principal are bankrupt and done for, as heretofore outlined.

It certainly is a sad but true picture.

I have given it to the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, as outlined to you, in my hearing to such committee on April 20, 1922, and will file with each member of such committee a copy of this correspondence, also a copy to the President, as he promised me on April 14, 1922, when I appealed to him to support such noninterest-bearing 25-year bond plan; at such time he promised to give it serious consideration and by his referring it to the Treasury Department for consideration, proves that he has kept his word.

It is pleasing to note that after 28 years' effort on my part for such noninterest-bearing bond plan that two of the most prominent men in this country are advocating the principle of such noninterest-bearing bond plan, Messrs. Henry Ford and Thomas A. Edison applying such plan to the financing of Muscle Shoals property.

The issue is a noninterest-bearing 25-year bond currency, issued by the States and subdivisions thereof, coined by the Federal Government, at cost to the people; or, interest-bearing bond currency, issued by the banks, coined by the Federal Government, at cost to such banks.

PEOPLE VERSUS BANKS.

Under such noninterest-bearing 25-year bond plan the people save such interest on such noninterest-bearing bonds deposited with such Government as security for such currency issued thereon, and also saves the interest on such currency issued and when being used.	Under such present interest-bearing bond plan the people are taxed by such Federal Government to pay interest to such banks on such Government interest-bearing bonds deposited as security for currency issued by such banks. The people are again taxed by such States and subdivisions thereof to pay such banks interest for the use of such currency, borrowed on such State and subdivision interest-bearing bonds, when such currency is being used.

Mr. Secretary, you are a sworn officer of the Government, just as much so as the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. You should construe such noninterest-bearing 25-year bond plan as outlined in H. R 4576 and herein, to the best interest of the people as a whole, according to your conscience; this is a proposed law, against one now in force, but it should not prejudice your judgment and decision.

I hope that I have been able to convince you of the justness and necessity of such noninterest-bearing 25-year bond plan, so that you may make a favorable report to the President, thereby start on the way the framers of the Constitution of the United States and such thirteen States intended, when such States surrendered such right to coin money to the Congress, and when such States ratified such Constitution.

Respectfully submitted.

Yours truly, JACOB S. COXEY, Sr.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 30, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.
